HYDRO HAS GIVEN ASSURANCE THAT POWER WILL BE PROVIDED

Ald. Green Wants to Know What's What in the Hydro Arena

HE IS INFORMED

Commission Will Supply the Juice When the City is Ready for it

At Council meeting last night, Ald. Green was direct from Missouri. He had to be shown.

He wanted a peep into the mysteries of the Hydro Electric proposition for the Electric City. Where was the power coming from and what was it going to cost? He felt the Power Committee had not been very communicative. What position were the people to be placed in on the 2nd of January? It had been hinted by people outside the Council that all arrangements had been made. "I think the aldermen should know," said the West Ward representative. As a manufacturer, he was particularly anxious to know where he was going to get power.

The Hydro's Assurance

"We have every assurance of the Hydro Electric Commission that they are ready to turn on the power when we are ready; is that satisfactory?" asked Ald. Johnston, chairman of the Power Committee.

"No, I would not say it was," answered Ald. Green. "I want to know where it's coming from. Some clerk might tell you we would get the power, but we don't know."

When Ald. Green was informed again of the Commission's assurances and that of Hon. Adam Beck, himself, he said that the Council had just told the power people to get off the earth and that the Otonabee Power Company must give up their franchise. Was the City ready to have them take down their wires? Take the case of the direct current users. Had arrangements been made for them? Are not we entitled to know absolutely where the power is coming from and what it is going to cost? It was not fair to the people and not fair to the manufacturers. Mayor Bradburn pointed out that Ald. Green as well as others, had contracts and the company would have to supply the power.

"What are the customers of the Otonabee Power Company going to do at the second of January," continued Ald. Green.

No Darkness Then

Mayor Bradburn replied that the Otonabee Power Company closed up No. 5 dam for four months last summer and their customers got power.

Ald. Buller was satisfied with the Hydro. He said the members of the Commission were men worth their weight in gold. Addressing Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Buller said "You had it from one of the officials that we could get all the power when we wanted it turned on."

Ald. Green: "But we want the information to say where it's coming from."

"Yesterday morning," said Mayor Bradburn, "I had a talk with the Chief Engineer and he said we would get the power."

Ald. Buller said it was news to him to learn that there were direct current motors used. He had had one, and he had to replace it with an alternating current motor and the former went to the scrap heap.

Ald. Langford suggested that the Council get a statement from the Commission. Mayor Bradburn replied that he had asked the Chief Engineer to do this.

Next Tuesday the Date

Ald. Johnston said that no other committee had worked harder than had the members of the Power Committee. They had been given every assurance and all being well, the new lights would be turned on next Tuesday night. If, in the legal proceedings, the worst came to the worst, then he felt sure the Commission would take care of the people till the expropriation proceedings were finished. Everything was now practically in the hands of the arbitrators. Ald. Gordon said that the first case came before Court next Thursday.

Ald. Duffus felt that the Council was practically unanimous that the Committee had done all it could. Ald. Johnston had spent much of his own time. Ald. Duffus was however of the opinion that the assurance should be in writing.

Ald. Gordon felt that the Council could have absolute confidence in the Hydro. The Commission could not afford to take the risk of failure here. He did not think it was a question for fear or doubt. The Hydro Commission had treated the City well and there was no room for apprehension.

Ald. Green admitted that the Committee had done a lot of hard work.

MAN SUSPECTED OF MURDER IS CAUGHT

COUNCIL DECLINED TO RENEW FRANCHISE OF THE OTONABEE POWER COMPANY

D. O'Connell Made Plea for Renewal on Behalf of the Company But the Council Passed Negative. Motion

Ald. Duncan moved, seconded by Ald. Johnston, that the request of the Otonabee Power Co. for a continuation of the right to maintain poles and wires on the streets be not granted, and that as its right to maintain same will expire on the first day of January, 1914, the company be notified that the Council will insist on the said poles and wires being removed, as provided by its agreement with the city.—Carried.

This was the decision of the City Council last night, in regard to the application of the Otonabee Power Company for a renewal of their franchise which expires at the end of the year. Ald. Green was the only member who did not register a vote. All the Council were present with the exception of Ald McIntyre.

Mr. D. O'Connell, on behalf of the Company, asked that the franchise be renewed for a further term of ten years. Mr. O'Connell likened the Company to the good and faithful servant. He had come with Mr. Ferguson to give account of their stewardship. He stated that when the Council gave the franchise in the first place, they were not only pleased, but also the citizens were pleased to learn that there would be competition. Up to that time the city had been in the hands of the power monopoly. As a result of the competition introduced by the Company, that monopoly had been practically broken. There had been a reduction in rates and a system of lighting at continual cheap rates. For some years the citizens had enjoyed cheap power, if not cheaper rates than any other city.

Mr. O'Connell proceded to speak about the benefits of the flat rate system of the Company and he said the consumers were quite satisfied and that they wanted a continuation of that system. There were from 600 to 900 consumers. He felt that the Municipal plant would not be effected by the operations of the Company. In fact, he said it would insure cheap power for the customers of the Company and also efficient and economic management on the part of the Municipal plant.

A great deal of the capital of the Company came out of the pockets of the citizens of Peterboro. It's their money. A great deal of the money belonged to widows and perhaps orphans. The Company had spent $24,275 for distribution system; $1,942 for sub-station and buildings; $10,000 for equipment and all told it represented $51,000.

Had the Knowledge

Ald. Gordon took the view that the case was similar to that of the tenant who gets his lease and knows that at the end of a certain time the lease expires, and he applies for further rights. But conditions had changed. When the Company obtained the franchise, capital companies were necessary. The men got the profits or they would not have ventured into the enterprise. They had the knowledge that the franchise expired. This was the last month of the franchise and they might have made the application before. The Council made efforts to purchase the Company. They had approached the owners and were told that the plant was not for sale.

As to the question of the Consumer, Ald. Gordon said that no later than that evening he had been informed that the flat rate had been refused.

He believed the proper course for the Council was to take no action and allow the franchise to terminate in it's due course. Mayor Bradburn asked Mr. Ferguson for the amount of common stock, "$110,700" replied Mr. Ferguson.

"How much preferred?"

"$112,600."

"Which has the voting power?"

"The common."

"Who controls the common stock now?"

"The Electric Power Co., most of it."

"Who controls the Peterboro Light and Power Co.?"

"The Electric Power Company."

"Exactly."

Tried to Buy

Mayor Bradburn produced letters to show that the City tried to buy the plant. One of the letters to the Council was to the effect that it was decided not to offer the property for sale. Another was that the physical assets would be sold if expropriation procedings were not taken against the Peterborough Light and Power Co.

Ald. Buller had understood that the Company had given the Council to understand that they would sell, but when the Council got down to hard work, the deal was called off.

Ald. Johnston said the Council had ben willing to buy out the Company and pay them dollar for dollar. The Council did not wish to do them any injury. If the Company had done the fair thing, nothing like this would have happened. He thought the Council would be the laughing stock of all the people if they turned around and renewed the franchise.

MAYOR WILL CALL MEETING OF COUNCIL

To Allow Prospective Candidates For Other Jobs to Retire.

Ald. G. N. Gordon took to the fence last night at Council meeting. He would not say definitely that he would be a candidate for the Board of Water and Power Commissioners, but he asked if he decided to do so, would the opportunity be given to resign from the Council. He also noted the fact that Ald. Duncan had been mentioned for the Mayoralty and he too would necessarily have to resign from the Council.

Mayor Bradburn assured Ald. Gordon that if necessary he would call another meeting of the Council.

RETIREMENT OF MR. HILL

After Eighteen Years Service He Steps Out as Water Commissioner

The Review is in receipt of a statement from Mr. W. H. Hill in which he announces his withdrawal as a probable candidate for the position of water commissioner. Mr. Hill has served many years in this public capacity, and has been a member of the Commission since it was formed, on the taking over by the City of the Waterworks System. His statement gives his reasons.

The ratepayers are under a debt to Mr. Hill for his long service. He has given of time and energy and good business sense to the duties, and has invariably worked with his fellow commissioners in unity and concord. It is to be regretted that he has decided to withdraw. Experience and familiarity with conditions and needs are always essential to a capable grasp of affairs in such an enterprise as the water service. Following is Mr. Hill's statement:

To the Editor of The Review,—

Sir,—

As the time of the annual Municipal elections is drawing near, and especially as I have been asked by a number of ratepayers to again be a candidate for the position of Water Commissioner, will you kindly permit me to say in your columns that I have decided to retire from that Commission. I regret doing so very much, and one of my chief reasons for regret is that it will end the relations that have existed so long and so pleasantly between myself and the other Commissioners. I have been on the board with Mr. Matthews for twelve and with Mr. Moore for ten years, and I am thoroughly satisfied that two abler or more conscientious administrators of the works could not have been obtained. I still feel a deep interest in this part of the City's business, but my personal affairs require much more attention, so much that I would not be able to give the time that I should to the duties of the office, and I do not wish to ask to be returned knowing that I could not give the time that it will require.

I have served eighteen years on the board of management of the Waterworks, six years as a Director of the Peterborough Water Company, and twelve years as a Water Commissioner for the City, and I desire to heartily thank the ratepayers for their generous support during those twelve years.

Respectively yours,
W. H. HILL.

REV. J. R. WEBB

Rev. J. R. Webb of Murray St., Church has gone to Belleville today where he will preach at a union service of all the churches of that city on the subject "The Christian Church and the Bible." The meeting is convened under the auspices of the Ministerial Association. This year the gathering is to be held in the Reformed Episcopal Church.

CONSERVATION ASSOCIATION

Meeting in Bank of Montreal Chambers, Friday Evening.

A meeting of the Trent Valley Water Conservation Association will be held in the Bank of Montreal Chambers, Friday, Dec. 12, at 8 p.m., to complete organization and appoint permanent officers.

The Council last night received a letter from Mr. W. H. Denham, inviting the aldermen to the meeting, and on motion it was decided that all the Council attend. "That's a very important thing,' said Ald. Buller.

CONGRATULATIONS FROM KINGSTON

Peterboro has a completed sanitary system—an active inspector a garbage collection, and a consumption of this garbage by a modern incinerator, which is capable of disposing of nine tons of refuse in an hour. It is time Kingston had an outfit quite as good and equally as efficient. Peterboro is to be congratulated upon its progressiveness.—Kingston Whig.

SITE FOR THE NEW BRIDGE

Is the Location Named the Best to be Had?

The proposition before the City Council to erect a bridge across the river, Dalhousie to Maria streets, is not viewed by the citizens, as a whole, as a good thing. There is a wide divergence of opinion as to the points at which this bridge should be erected.

To reach the southern end of the city from the East Ward, a bridge crossing from what is known as Burnham's Point to about McDonald's mill, is conceded by many to be the more desirable and afford a larger future service.

It would give ready access to the C. G. E. Co., the De Laval, Henry Hope & Sons, and to all the industries that are below the line of Dalhousie street.

In placing it at Dalhousie street at the line of access from George street, it will be crossed by the C.P.R. trains, all their freight business being handled in the new freight yard.

The Review will refer to this matter again, to place before readers and ratepayers a comparison of the sites.

HAD NO REFERENCE TO ALD. GILLESPIE

The reference in the item in yesterday's Review to the fact that Ald. Buller would not be the least acceptable to the Duke, because he was not a highflyer, had no reference to Ald. Gillespie. This statement is made at the request of one of Ald. Gillespie's friends.

BARRIE'S STORE AT EDMONTON WAS ROBBED

Show Windows Stripped of Valuable Display of Mink.

Mr. Thos. Barrie has received word from the manager of his branch in Edmonton that on Sunday night that place of business was entered in the middle of the night and the show window stripped of its contents which consisted mainly of mink. The value is said to be about $1,000.

The Review interviewed Mr. Barrie today and he stated that full particulars were not to hand but latest word says that the steps to ascertain who the guilty parties are has as yet been unsuccessful.

LINDSAY MAN AFTER THE GRAND?

Mr. J.J. Turner Says He Will Sell for $42,000.

It is rumored that W. H. Roenigk of Lindsay is interested in negotiations with the management of the Grand Opera House for the purchase of the theatre.

A Review scribe interviewed Mr. J. J. Turner today about the selling of his house, and although the above rumor was not mentioned, Mr. Turner admitted that several parties had tried to secure a lease on the theatre and those who wanted to buy it would not come to terms suitable to him. His price is $42,000.

Mr. Turner also stated that if he intended keeping the theatre he would build a ball room in connection with it, but he wanted to get it off his hands for his other business interests have increased so much that he cannot give it the required attention. He added if the offer of $42,000 was made, he would quickly sell.

NO JUDGMENT YET

As yet, judgment in the King liquor case has not been given by Magistrate Edmison.

CANDIDATES FOR THE NEW UTILITIES' COMMISSION

There are prospects of a three-corner fight for the office of member of the Utilities Commission which will begin with the New Year. The Board of Water Commissioners will be no more and in its place will be a Commission which will have charge of the water service and the power service.

As intimated today, Mr. W. H. Hill will not be a candidate. Mr. J. B. McWilliams has already announced that he would be a candidate, and this morning Mr. R. Hicks said he would be a candidate.

Ald. Gordon said this morning that he was not in a position to give a definite statement. However, he gave The Review to understand that should he be able to make satisfactory arrangements in regard to his business he would enter the field.

ALDERMEN DECIDE ON BRIDGE FOR ALL TRAFFIC EXCLUSIVE OF STREET RAILWAY

It Will Cost $77,352 While Street Railway Bridge Would Require Expenditure of $115,621 — City Dads Took Fright at the High Figure — Ald. Langford Economizing Again and Would Have a "Ferry"

At the municipal elections in January, the ratepayers will vote on a by-law which if passed, means that the City will undertake the construction of a bridge across the Otonabee River, north of the C. P. R. bridge.

A bridge suitable of traffic exclusive of street railway, will according to the estimates of the City Engineer, cost $77,252. It is for this kind of a bridge, the vote will be taken.

Another bridge which would provide for a street railway track, the Engineer says, will cost $115,641. All of this amount would have to be borne by the ratepayers as the Railway Company have stated that they will not contribute to the cost. They do not want to use the bridge just now. When the aldermen obtained a good look at this big expenditure, they look alarm, one and all feeling that the ratepayers would not sanction so large an expenditure of money.

Ald Buller introduced the by-law.

Will Not Contribute

Mayor Bradburn said that he had been in touch with the Street Railway people, but they would not entertain the question of paying part of the cost.

Ald. Duncan: "Still we can't stop them if they want to use the bridge."

Ald. Buller stated that the Company had told him the same as the Mayor had reported. Mr. Munro admits that it would be at some time looped with the route.

Ald. Langford took a negative stand on the vote for the first reading of the by-law. He was sorry the Company could not see it's way clear to pay a portion of the cost.

Ald. Duncan prophesied that the City would take over the Street Railway. Then the Council might regret that a suitable bridge was not provided in the first place.

Ald. Gordon held that a proper bridge would encourage the Railway into Ashburnham. If the bridge at the lower cost were constructed the City might have to supplant it by another bridge. Asked by Ald. Green if a concrete bridge had been considered, the Engineer replied in the affirmative, but he gave as his opinion that the concrete bridge was not practicable with the horizontal thrusts. This would also make the design a difficult problem and it would not give a good appearance.

Not the Looks

Ald. Green said it was not the looks, the Council was particularly interested in. What was wanted was a bridge, strong enough, good enough and secure enough.

It seemed to him a mistake not to provide for the street railway. Municipal ownership was coming; it had come and would continue to come, and he had no doubt but that the City would own the Street Railway. Personally, he was in favor of building a bridge strong enough to carry the railway. If the concrete bridge would be strong enough, the looks of the bridge was not so particular.

"I permitted the other members to discuss this thing before I got on my feet, because I was told I would get some support from you," said Ald. Langford, in addressing Ald. Anderson who was chairman.

Some Opposition

"I am entirely opposed to spending $80,000 on a new bridge at Dalhousie Street. It will not serve possibly not more than one-tenth of the people of the City. A cheaper bridge will do just as well. The tax rate is high and we should be very careful of what we ask the people to vote on.

Ald. Langford pointed out that $100,000 or more was needed for the out fall sewer and then there were new pavements to be laid. He thought a better proposition was the high level bridge at Hunter Street in which the City might be helped by the Railway and the Government.

Ald. Langford moved that no action be taken regarding the by-law and that members of the present council who may be members of the 1914 council agree to take the matter up at the beginning of the new year, and provide a bridge at moderate cost for pedestrian traffic, and also take up the question of a bridge across the river from the foot of London Street.

Ald. Gordon: "Do object to allowing this by-law to go before the people."

Ald. Langford: "Yes, when we let it go to the people that means the Council endorses it. I want it understood that I am against it here. When the Council endorses a by-law are they not asking the people to vote for it?"

"No, it's simply a referendum. The people can decide whether they want it or not.

"You have two by-laws before them now. If the people turn it down, it shows lack of ability and foresight on the part of the Council.

Ald. Johnston was in favor of keeping down the taxes, but as in private business, if the Council wished to branch out, further expenditures were necessary. He also favored a bridge for London Street.

Mayor Bradburn stated that supposing the new bridge were built at Hunter Street, the people would have to come by that route. It was only fair that the people affected, should have some consideration. The bridge would have the effect of building up the south end of Ashburnham.

Ald. Langford asked why not build a foot bridge at the C. P. R. bridge to which the Mayor answered that he had taken the matter up but they absolutely refused to move in the matter. "You can't go beyond the president of the Company."

Or Perhaps an Aerial Line

"Could you not put a ferry there?" asked Ald. Langford. Ald. Buller: "What we want is a bridge. I don't care what kind of a bridge, but let's have a bridge for the south end to build it up. We don't want to go to Fraserville; we won't want to go down to Monaghan all the time. It would be a great benefit to the City at large.

As to the by-law he said the Council was only putting it before the people and in doing that the aldermen had done their duty.

Ald. Anderson was glad to see Ald. Langford's zeal for economy but his remarks might have been made at the first of the year, when they might have been a benefit. East City people wanted a bridge to take care of ordinary traffic. With the structure at Hunter Street the people of the south end would still be without a bridge.

How many people want to pay for an $80,000 bridge, asked Ald. Langford.

"The large majority are willing to assume their part of the cost of the bridge," answered Ald. Anderson.

Thus the discussion continued. Ald. Gillespie moved that the $116,000 bridge be provided for in the by-law, but after some further discussion, he withdrew the motion. The aldermen felt the amount to be too large.

Ald. Duffus said the Vermont Marble Co., had been largely influenced in locating where they did because they believed a bridge would be provided.

"We ought to be careful," said Ald. Johnston, who like the others, had become frightened at the big expenditure. He was doubtful if the by-law would carry at that price.

Finally on motion of Ald. Buller and Gillespie, the lower priced bridge was decided on.

NEW CANDIDATE

Mr. J. W. Worth, of the Bonner-Worth Company, informed the Review today that he had decided to be an aldermanic candidate for the West Ward.

COUNTY COURT OFFICERS MADE TOO MUCH NOISE

Judge Huycke Has to Ask Them to Stop Talking.

In yesterday's county court session the court was continually being annoyed by two of the constables talking. Things came to a climax when Mr. Dumble was addressing the jury. The officers were over in one corner talking loudly and His Honor Judge Huycke had to call out to them and he incidentally remarked that he wished there was a police officer in the room to keep them quiet.

In speaking of the incident this morning His Honor remarked that they were never around when wanted and not much good when they were around.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, DEC. 10, 1913.

THE DESERTS OF ONTARIO.

WRITING FROM BANCROFT to The Globe, Mr. Fred Mullet defends the nine northern townships of Hastings against the accusations of Dr. Fernow, who said in a recent article in The Globe, that the Trent Valley district was a breeding ground for degenerates, owing to the poor condition of the country for farming. Mr. Mullet says:

"In the nine northern townships of Hastings at the present time there is practically no pauperism. It is true that the crop has been largely a failure this season owing to the excessive drought, but the impoverished farmers that Dr. Fernow tells us about have been able to buy about fifty carloads of hay and to pay for it out of the proceeds of their farms. The Metropolitan Bank has a branch in this village, and while it is, of course, impossible to get actual figures from the officials, I will bet Dr. Fernow $10 that the bank has now on deposit from farmers and farmers' sons in the district at least a quarter of a million dollars."

There are, in the districts referred to, very fertile patches, but these are like oases in a desert and the fact still remains that there are families living—or existing—on barren "farms," who have not the means, nor in some cases the will to move away. Bancroft is a busy centre, and, as Mr. Mullet admits, depends largely upon the marble quarries, mines and lumber camps. Where there are industries of these kind the poor farmer can live in comparative comfort by working in the quarries, etc., for a good portion of the year. In the spring and autumn time he can work sufficient of his farm to provide him with vegetable, and grow hay for the few occupants of his stable. It is very seldom that grain can be grown satisfactorily.

Some months ago The Review in calling attention to this state of things in parts of Hastings county said, that the only hope of these barren districts was in the development of the mineral deposits which many of them contain. Rich ores are hidden under the feet of the farmers whose homes are darkened by poverty and fruitless toil.

Some American speculators are interesting themselves in certain propositions in mid-Hastings and if this business goes through it will be the industrial and moral salvation of the districts concerned. It is little use trying to blink the facts; that these "rural slums" exist there is no doubt in the minds of those who have been over the ground. As an instance of what the development of industries can do for these districts the village of Sulphide is an excellent example. Only a few years ago a poor family lived on the land where the village now stands. They were glad to sell the property for an "old song" and get out. The ground which could not grow oats, and never was intended for growing anything but marsh hay, proved to be rich in mineral and is at present fattening the pockets of American capitalists and at the same time providing work for an industrious and contented community. These Americans deserve credit and all the money they can make by their faithful enterprise in getting bread out of rocks and stones, which hitherto yielded nothing but labor and disappointment and the consequent moral and mental degradation.

THE GOVERNMENT OF MEXICO.

THE HAMILTON SPECTATOR gets at the heart of the Mexican problem in an article from which we take the following:—

"Mr. Wilson is accustomed to the American conception of constitutional government—"government of the people, by the people, and for the people." He assumes that such government could be set up in Mexico any day, and refuses to recognize anything else. But even in the United States, where the masses are at least half educated, democracy has broken down, as may be seen in the corrupt ring-rule of nearly every great American city. In a country like Mexico, where the masses cannot even read and write, and among the people of Spanish-Indian blood, constitutional government in any true sense is not only presently impossible, but cannot be safely introduced for many a year to come. Porfirio Diaz understood this. His regime was the most advanced and enlightened Mexico ever had, and yet it was but a thinly-disguised dictatorship. Nothing better could happen to Mexico than the restoration of that regime, or the institution of something like it."

Democratic government is all right where you have an intelligent democracy. But there is no getting away from the fact that there are nations which are not ripe for constitutional government, and Mexico is one of these. The people of Mexico are of crude material, they are half Indian and uneducated, and therefore half civilized. They are little better off in this respect than the inhabitants of Egypt were when the British government took over that country. Liberty under such conditions as prevail in Mexico becomes license and the result is anarchy. Men who cannot make up their minds should have their minds made up for them, they should be saved from themselves. The only power that the Mexican recognizes is Force. It is little use to play the "waiting game," it is too subtle an argument. It would be forceful enough in a university class-room, where President Wilson was a master, but the ex-professor is not dealing with undergraduates at present.

Meanwhile, Mexican trade is being hampered. Other countries than the States have big interests in Mexico and their hands are tied by this supine policy of waiting for something to turn up, which President Wilson has adopted. The Monro Doctrine fetich stands in the way of any action by European countries in defence of defending their own interests. This doctrine, or rather dogma, is a relict of national and political orthodoxy, which is a mill-stone about the neck of the United States and at the same time cuts off the great resources of the South American continent from whole-hearted European enterprise. Uncle Sam has played the dog-in-the-manger with Brazil and he is now one of the chief obstacles to the settlement of the Mexican problem.

THE MILK STRIKERS.

THE BOYCOTT is getting to be quite popular with certain cities. Hamilton was one of the first to introduce this means of bringing down the price of commodities, when the mayor of that city led in the milk strike by going without milk in his tea in order to force the milkman to reduce his price. This method of dealing with the milkman proved at last effective, for milk being a perishable article, could not hold out against the people's determination not to take it into their constitutions. Yesterday the price of milk came down and the mayor and his corporation—or rather the citizens, once more enjoy the lacteal fluid at a reasonable price.

The example of Hamilton is now being followed by Berlin. The mayor of that city has led in the hunger or thirst strike so far as milk is concerned. But it is an ill wind that blows nobody any good and while the milkman is grieving over sour milk, the grocer is ordering a big supply of the condensed kind and is smiling at the milkman's discomfort. The mayor is by no means to be compared with Mrs. Pankhurst, for that lady refuses to let anything pass her lips, except the immortal cry, "votes for women." There is really no need for forcible feeding in Berlin, the strike is a very easy one for the striker, with the possible exception of a few babies who have hitherto been fed from the "one cow;" this may cause slight stomachtic disruption, internal rumbling and external vociferations on the midnight air. But the end to be gained in getting the better of the milkman, is more than worth these minor domestic troubles.

THE GERMAN CROWN PRINCE has a habit of getting into trouble with his tutors. Of course he is only "sowing his wild oats," but all kinds of oats have a tendency to spring up, and the future Kaiser may cause some trouble in wider matters when he comes into his own.

IT IS SAID that Toronto ministers are going in for gymnastics. They have discovered that physical exercise is good for the soul. There may be something in this. A little variation from the usual verbal and intellectual gymnastics in the pulpit might attract bigger congregations. A little trapeze display during the anthem or before the collection might add spirit if not spirituality, to the service.

THERE IS an advertisement of a whiskey called "Three Swallows"—not being a connoisseur of the ardent spirit, we wonder if it means that three swallows of this brand are enough to triplicate your vision?

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

The Thrilling Cinema.

Graphic.

"When kinematography first crept into our hearts it was gentle, tame and domesticated. Then the worst appeared. The desperate drama began its insane career. Houses are blown up, ships are blown down, thousands of valuable cars are hurled over precipices."

The Englishman as Speaker.

London Times.

"Ask him to deliver an after-dinner speech, and the average Englishman looks miserable; while the Frenchman, the German, the American, will assume a valour if he has it or not, and utter his platitudes with an air."

Munchausen Policy.

Kingston Standard.

NOT the Navy, but how the Laurier Liberals can get back again into power is the leading question in Canada now. Sir Wilfrid Laurier thinks so, and that this can be achieved by Free Trade. This is to be done by the miracle which he and Providence can do of letting food which costs more in the States come in here free. It is a wonderful idea worthy of Baron Munchausen.

Investigate.

British Whig.

Dr. Fernow, who speaks before the Canadian Club, does not please the Hastings County Council, because of his criticism of certain districts in the north. The way to settle the controversy is to have a governmentcommission investigate. Dr. Fernow is not likely to pay much attention to a County Council resolution—without special enquiry.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE FARMERS AND THE TARIFF

To the Editor of The Review:

Sir,—

Will you be good enough to give your readers the following extracts from two well-known American journals?

They are interesting at this juncture The New York Post says:

"The absolute failure of the abolition of the duties on food stuffs under the new tariff to reduce the cost of living, is sufficient to show that the tariff as a factor in the situation is of so slight importance as to be entirely negligible."

The Post goes on to expound its belief that the real problem to be met and solved is the problem of distributing food supplies to the people—in other words cheaper methods of transportation.

The New York Tribune, like the Post, is a strong supporter of President Wilson, says:

Commenting upon Laurier's new slogan, "Free Food," the Tribune says:

"The high cost of living continues its disturbing advance in Canada as well as here, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, having no trusts—meat, cold storage or other—to attack there, tariff as his scapegoat. In his fight for 'free food before Dreadnoughts' he is not to be deterred, apparently by the case of the tariff reformers at Washington, whose inability to stem the tide of high prices by this method they themselves freely admit.

"What earthly difference it would make, for instance, to wipe out Canada's duty on wheat when she exports ten times as much of this foodstuff as she consumes is difficult to understand. Sir Wilfrid complains that the reduction of the American duties is causing the United States to drain Canada of food, but this can only be if the prices here are higher than they are in Canada and while they remain higher in Canada surely cannot import wheat from the United States, duty or no duty. Nor can she import it from any other part of the world unless her bid equals Uncle Sam's.

Yours etc.,
READER.

To the Editor of The Review.

Sir,—The retirement of Mr. W. H. Hill who has given long and patient service to the city, paves the way for Ex-Ald. J. B. McWilliams, who is in the field. Mr. McWilliams knows municipal conditions well and will no doubt make a strong member of the Water Commission. Some years rest has restored him fully to health and Peterborough needs strong active men who are not afraid to let the public know their opinions.

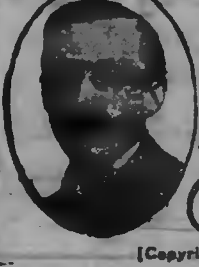
A SPLENDID HAZARD



By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1913, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

PROLOGUE.

Napoleon—what a word to conjure with in the realm of romance! A treasure put together to rescue him from St. Helena. Gold—French gold, English gold, Spanish pieces of eight, Austrian gold—all waiting for a claimant in a rotting chest somewhere in Corsica. Where is the key to the hiding place of the treasure secreted? Where is the treasure itself to be found? Who will win the beautiful American girl, the plucky American newspaper man or the mysterious adventurer whose comings and goings are watched by the secret agents of two great governments? With such themes as these, what wonder that Harold MacGrath, that prince of story tellers, has created in "A Splendid Hazard" the most fascinating romance that has yet come from his pen.

CHAPTER I.

A MEMORIAL DATE.

A BLURRING rain fell upon Paris that day. It was the 18th of June. To Fitzgerald there was something electric in the date. Many years before this date had marked the end to a certain hundred days, the eclipse of a sun more dazzling than Rome in the heyday of her august Caesars had ever known—Waterloo. A little corporal of artillery, from a cocked hat to a crown, from Corsica to St. Helena—Napoleon.

Fitzgerald as he pressed his way along the Boulevard des Invalides, his umbrella swaying and snapping in the wind much like the sail of a derelict, could see in fancy that celebrated field whereon this eclipse had been supernally prearranged. He held the handle of the umbrella under his arm, for the wind had a temper mawling and destructive, and veered into the Place Vauban. Another man coming with equal haste from the opposite direction, from the entrance of the tomb itself, was also two parts hidden behind an umbrella. The two came together with a jolt as sounding as that of two old crusaders in a friendly joust. Instantly they retreated, lowering their shields.

"I beg your pardon," said Fitzgerald in French.

"It is of no consequence," replied the stranger, laughing. "This is always a devil of a corner on a windy day." His French had a slight German twist to it.

Briefly they inspected each other, as strangers will, carelessly, with annoyance and amusement interplaying in their eyes and on their lips, all in a trifling moment. Then each raised his hat and proceeded as tranquilly and unconcernedly as though destiny had no ulterior motive in bringing them thus really together. And yet when they had passed and disappeared from each other's view both were struck with the fact that somewhere they had met before.

Fitzgerald went into the tomb, his head bared. Napoleon had always been Fitzgerald's hero; but he did not worship him blindly, no. He knew him to have been a brutal, domineering man, unscrupulous in politics, to whom woman was either a temporary toy or a stepping stone, not overparticular whether she was a dairymaid or an Austrian princess—in fact, a rascal, but a great, inventive, splendid, courageous one.

Near to Fitzgerald stood an elderly man and a girl. The old fellow was a fine type of manhood, perhaps in the sixties, white haired, and the ruddy enamel on his cheeks spoke eloquently of sea changes and many angles of the sun. There was a button in the lapel of his coat, and from this Fitzgerald assumed that he was a naval officer, probably retired.

The girl rested upon the railing, her hands folded, and dreamily her gaze wandered from trophy to trophy; from the sarcophagus to the encircling faces, from one window to another and again to the porphyry beneath. And Fitzgerald's gaze wandered, too. For the girl's face was of that mold which invariably draws first the eye of a man, then his intellect, then his heart, and sometimes all three at once. The face was as lovely as a rose of Thermidor. Dark brown were her eyes, dark brown was her hair. She was tall and lithe, too, with the subtle hint of the woman. There were good taste and sense in her garments. A bunch of Parma violets was pinned against her bosom.

Between Fitzgerald and the girl was a veteran. He had turned eighty if a day. His face was powder blown, an empty sleeve was folded across his breast and the medal of the Legion of Honor fell over the sleeve. As the girl and her elderly escort, presumably her father, turned about to leave, she unpinned the flowers and offered them impulsively to the aged hero.

"Take these, mon brave," she said lightly. "You have fought for France."

The old man was confused and his faded eyes filled. "For me, mademoiselle?"

"Surely!"

"Thanks, mademoiselle, thanks! I saw him when they brought him back from St. Helena, and the Old Guard waded out into the Seine. Those were days. Thanks, mademoiselle; an old soldier salutes you!" And the time-bent, withered form grew tall.

Fitzgerald cleared his throat, for just then something hard had formed there. Why, God bless her! She was the kind of girl who became the mother of soldiers.

With her departure his present interest here began to wane. He wondered who she might be and what part of his native land she adorned when not gracing European capitals. Well, this was no time for mooning. He had arrived from London the day preceding and was leaving for Corfu on the morrow, and perforce he must crowd many things into this short grace of time.

Today his sightseeing ended in the hall of Turenne, before the souvenirs of the Duc de Reichstadt, so called the king of Rome. Poor, little lead soldiers, tarnished and broken; what a pathetic history! Abused, ignored, his childish aspirations trampled on, the name and glory of his father made sport of; worried as cruel children worry a puppy, tantalized, hoping against hope that this night or the next his father would dash in at the head of the Old Guard and take him back to Paris. A plaything for Metternich! Who can gaze upon these little toys without a thrill of pity?

"Poor little codger!" Fitzgerald murmured aloud.

"Yes, yes!" agreed a voice in good English, over his shoulder. "Who will ever realize the misery of that boy?"

Fitzgerald at once recognized his jousting opponent of the previous hour. Further, this second appearance refreshed his memory. He knew now where he had met the man; he even recalled his name.

"Are you not Karl Breitmann?" he asked with directness.

"Yes. And you are—let me think. Yes; I have it. You are the American correspondent, Fitzgerald?"

"And we met in Macedonia during the Greek war."

"Right! And you and I, with a handful of other scribblers slept that night under the same tent."

"By George!"

"I did not recall you when we bumped awhile ago, but once I had gone by you your face became singularly familiar."

"Funny, isn't it?" And Fitzgerald took hold of the extended hand. "The sight of these toys always gets into my heart."

"Into mine also. Who can say what might have been had they not crushed out the great spirit lying dormant in his little soul?"

Fitzgerald smiled. "You are an enthusiast like myself."

"Who wouldn't be who has visited every battlefield, who has spent days wandering about Corsica, Elba, St. Helena? But you?"

"My word, I have done the same thing!"

They exchanged smiles and drifted into a long conversation and fought a dozen battles, compared this general and that and built idle fancies upon what the outcome would have been had Napoleon won at Waterloo. This might have gone on indefinitely had not the patient attendant finally dandled his keys and yawned over his watch. It was 4 o'clock, and they had been talking for a full hour. They exchanged cards, and Fitzgerald, with his usual disregard of convention, invited Breitmann to dine with him that evening at the Meurice.

He selected a table by the window, dining at 7:30. Breitmann was prompt. In evening clothes there was something distinctive about the man. Fitzgerald, who was himself a wide traveler and a man of the world, instantly saw and was agreeably surprised that he had asked a gentleman to dine. Fitzgerald was no cad; he would have been just as much interested in Breitmann had he arrived in a cutaway sack. But chance acquaintances, as a rule, are rudimental experiments.

They sat down. Breitmann was full of surprises, and as the evening wore on Fitzgerald remembered having seen Breitmann's name at the foot of big newspaper stories. The man had traveled everywhere, spoke five languages, had been a war correspondent, a sailor in the south seas and heaven knew what else. He had ridden camels and polo ponies in the Sudan, he had been shot in the Greco-Turkish war shortly after his having met Fitzgerald, he had played a part in the recent Spanish-American and had fought against the English in the Transvaal.

"And now I am resting," he concluded. "I am thirty-eight. Into twenty of those years I have crowded a century."

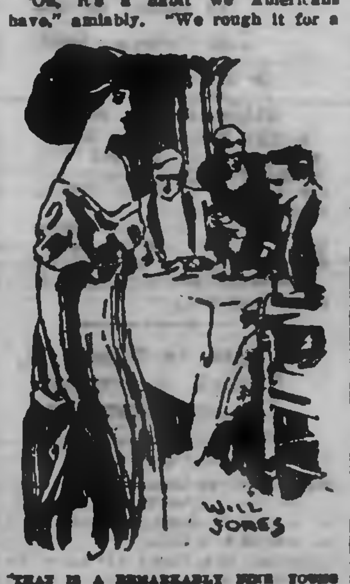
"You don't look it."

"Ah, one does not need to dissipate to live quickly. The life I have led has kept me in health and vigor. But you? You are not a man who travels without gaining material."

"I have had a few adventures, something like yours, only not so widely diversified. I wrote some successful short stories about China once. I have had some good sport, too, here and there."

"You live well for a newspaper correspondent," suggested Breitmann, nodding at the bottle of twenty-eight-year-old Burgundy.

"Oh, it's a habit we Americans have," amiably. "We rough it for a few months on bacon and liver and then turn our attention to truffles and old wines and Cabanas at two francs fifty. We are collectively a good sort of vagabond. I have a little besides my work; not much, but enough to loaf on when no newspaper or magazine cares to pay my expenses in Europe. Anyhow, I prefer this work to staying home to be hampered by intellectual boundaries. My vest will never reach the true proportions which would make me successful in politics."



"THAT IS A REMARKABLY FINE YOUNG WOMAN."

"You are luckier than I am," Breitmann replied. He sipped his wine slowly and with relish. How long was it since he had tasted a good chambertin?

Perhaps Fitzgerald had noticed it when Breitmann came in. The latter's velvet collar was worn, there was a suspicious gloss at the elbows, the cuff buttons were of cheap metal, his fingers were without rings. But the American readily understood. There are lean years and fat years in journalism, and he himself had known them. For the present this man was a little down on his luck; that was all.

A party came in and took the near table. There were four, two elderly men, an elderly woman and a girl. Fitzgerald, as he side glanced, was afforded a shiver of pleasure. He recognized the girl. It was she who had given the flowers to the veteran.

"That is a remarkably fine young woman," said Breitmann, echoing Fitzgerald's thought.

The waiter opened the champagne.

"Yes. I saw her give some violets this afternoon to an old soldier in the tomb. It was a pretty scene."

Their glances, drawn by some occult force, half circled till they paused on the face of the girl, who, perhaps compelled by the same invisible power, had leveled her eyes in their direction. With well bred calm her interest returned to her companions, and the incident was to all outward sign closed. Whatever took place behind that beautiful but indifferent mask no one else ever learned, but simultaneously in the minds of these two adventurers—and surely to call a man an adventurer does not necessarily imply that he is a chevalier d'industrie—a thought, tinged with regret and loneliness, was born—to have and to hold a maid like that.

"Sometimes, knowing that I shall never be rich, I have desired a title," remarked Fitzgerald humorously.

"And what would you do with it?" curiously.

"Oh, I'd use it against porters and waiters and officials. There's nothing like it. I have observed a good deal. It has a magic sound, like Orpheus' lyre. The stiffest back becomes supine at the first twinkle of it."

"I should like to travel with you, Mr. Fitzgerald," said Breitmann musingly. "You would be good company. Some day, perhaps, I'll try your prescription, but I'm only a poor devil of a homeless, landless baron."

Fitzgerald sat up. "You surprise me."

"Yes. However, neither my father nor my grandfather used it, and as the pitiful few acres which went with it is a sterile Bavarian hillside I have never used it either. Besides, neither the peerage nor the Almanach de Gotha make mention of it, but still the patent of nobility was legal, and I could use it despite the negligence of these two authorities."

"You could use it in America. There are not many 'Burkes' there."

"It amuses me to think that I should confide this secret to you. The wine is good, and perhaps—perhaps I was hungry. Accept what I have told you as a jest."

They both became untalkative as the coffee came. Finally Breitmann laid down the end of his cigarette.

"I have to thank you very much for a pleasant evening, Mr. Fitzgerald."

"Glad I ran into you. It has done me no end of good. I leave for the east tomorrow. Is there any possibility of seeing you in the Balkans this fall?"

"No. I am going to try my luck in America again."

"My club address you will find on my card. You must go? It's only the shank of the evening."

"I have a little work to do. Some day I hope I may be able to set as good a dinner before you."

"Better have a cigar."

"No, thank you."

And Fitzgerald liked him none the less for his firmness. So he went as far as the entrance with him.

"Don't bother about calling a cab," said Breitmann. "It has stopped raining and the walk will tone me up. Good night and good luck."

And they parted, neither ever expecting to see the other again and equally careless whether they did or not.

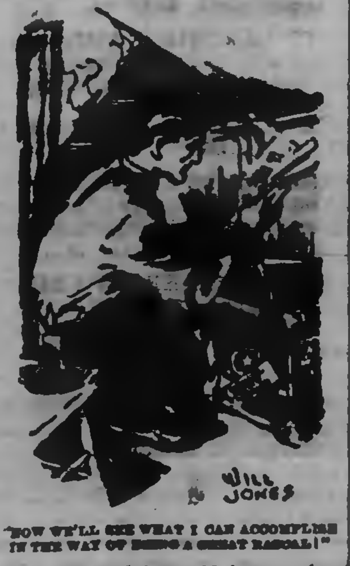
Breitmann walked rapidly toward the river, crossed, and at length entered a gloomy old pension over a restaurant frequented by bargemen, students and human driftwood. As he climbed the badly lighted stairs, a little, gray haired man, wearing spectacles, passed him, coming down. A "pardon" was mumbled, and the little man proceeded into the restaurant, picked a Figaro from the table littered with newspapers, ensconced himself in a comfortable chair, and ordered coffee. No one gave him more than a cursory glance. The quarter was indigent, but ordinarily respectable, and it was only when some noisy Americans invaded the place that the habitues took any unusual interest in the coming and going of strangers.

Up under the mansard roof there was neither gas nor electricity. Breitmann lighted his two candles, divested himself of his collar, tie and coat, and flung them on the bed.

"Threadbare, almost! Ah, but I was hungry tonight. Did he know it? Why the devil should I care? To work! Up to this night I have tried to live more or less honestly. I have tried to take the good that is in me and to make the most of it. And," ironically, "this is the result. I have failed. Now we'll see what I can accomplish in the way of being a great rascal."

He knelt before a small steamer trunk, battered and plentifully labeled, and unscrewed the lock. From a cleverly concealed pocket he brought forth a packet of papers. These he placed on the table and unfolded with almost reverent care. Sometimes he shrugged, as one does who is confronted by huge obstacles, sometimes he laughed harshly, sometimes his jaws hardened and his fingers writhed. When he had done—and many and many a time he had repeated this performance, studied the faded ink, the great seal, the water marks—he hid them away in the trunk again.

He now approached the open window and leaned out. Glittering Paris, wonderful city! How the lights from the bridges twinkled on the wind wrinkled Seine! Over there lay the third wealth of the world; luxury, vice, pleasure. Eh, well, he could not fight it, but he could curse it deeply and violently, which he did.



"NOW WE'LL SEE WHAT I CAN ACCOMPLISH IN THE WAY OF BEING A GREAT RASCAL!"

If an American wants to go abroad on a cash capital of $500 there is no law to prevent. When I started out with my friend Killam, who was an artist instead of a journalist and had $50 less capital as well, we took steerage on a steamer and planned to do Europe on foot and avoid all extravagance. As to how we got along until we struck Greece and a certain event happened is of no great consequence. We tramped here and there, ate, slept and had a fairly good time.

From Athens we went on a tramp up the country, viewing tombs and ruins by the way, and after putting in two days at Marathon we started out one morning for a hamlet called Histrophus. After a long tramp I found a place to take a nap.

At the end of two hours I was awakened by some one giving me a smart kick on the hip, and I roused up to see that we had been taken prisoners by four brigands. The fellows had come down off the mountains about four miles away, having probably been notified by a messenger from the village. I have many times read of the picturesque Greek brigands, but the four who gobbled us up that day must have gone out of the picturesque business some weeks previous. They were a ragged, ugly lot. The leader spoke English fairly well. It was the leader who had kicked me, which I have always taken as a compliment, and as I sat up he sainted me and said:

"My lord, you will please consider yourself a prisoner and come along without resistance."

"Now, don't make any mistake on me," I replied. "If you are counting on capturing a rich Englishman you will get badly left, for I am an American, and a poor one at that. As near as I can make out from this short range, you are brigands."

"I am Bobetto," he said as he laid his hand on his heart and bowed low.

"Excuse me that I never heard of you before. You are a brigand and in it for money, and this is your band."

"My lord is correct."

"Now, about this lord business. Let us have an understanding. Who do you take me for?"

"An English lord, my lord. I have been expecting you for several days. The name I cannot pronounce, but I know you to be the gentleman. Have no fears for your safety, as it will be a case of ransom."

"This is kind of you. If you take me for an English lord who do you take this other chap to be?"

"Your companion, sir. His name I heard, but cannot give it. He will also be held for ransom."

Then we started for the west. The particular retreat of this band was halfway up a mountain and consisted of two brush huts and a fire in front of them. As soon as we had arrived at the huts Bobetto brought out stationery and commanded me to write to the English minister at Athens and obtain the sum of $10,000. Both Killam and I burst out laughing at this demand, and after a little while I said to the leader:

"Of what use to play the fool in this matter? As I told you before, we are Americans and poor men at that. We can raise about $200 apiece, but not another cent."

"You may be Americans, but you are my lord just the same," replied Bobetto.

"But there are no titles in America. If I should write to the American minister he would take it as a joke."

"But you must write," persisted the wooden headed rascal. "You must write to the American minister that if he does not send us $10,000 by our messenger your ears will be sent him in a package."

I read the letter to Bobetto after it was written, and he was perfectly satisfied that it would fetch the cash in reply. It was sent off by a messenger, who would be gone at least ten days, and then we went into "retirement."

For the first five days of our captivity we were closely guarded, and there could be no thought of our escape. Then, as we appeared to make ourselves at home, the vigilance of the brigands relaxed.

On the eighth day came our opportunity. The artist whispered to me: "Let's end this right here and now! You tackle the leader, and I'll go for the other fellow."

The "other fellow" was at the fire heaping the brands together. We rose up in unison and made the attack. I gave old Bobetto a kick on the jaw which knocked him over and caused doleful howls, and Killam hit his man such a blow on the neck as to render him unconscious for half an hour. There were two guns in camp, and we siezed them and made for the highway, only a mile distant. Before departing I gave the leader a tap on the head to quiet his yells, and so far as I know we were not followed a rod. We reached the highway just in time to get a lift in a passing cart and in a couple of hours were in Marathon. As to the letter, it was delivered at the consulate, but was looked upon as a joke, and the messenger was sent off empty handed. We might have lost our ears on his return, but were not there to have them sliced off. Bobetto died two years later, as I read in the papers, and it is said that he was badly disfigured by a broken jaw—the one "my lord" gave him with an American calfskin shoe.

High Collars.

High collars, if tight, do more to induce a double chin than anything else, and, moreover, by pressing the flesh underneath the chin back against the throat they cause the two front neck cords to become unduly prominent and stringy looking, which is quite as deplorable as the double chin. This can be avoided by having the collar of a flexible material, such as a good quality of net, and boning it so that it flares a little at the upper and lower edges, which is best accomplished by running the net through the fingers to stretch it.

Odds and Ends.

If your milkman brings you warm milk make it hot for him.

A fly in the milk often means a member of the family in the grave.

When you see a child looking like an angel do not kiss it; you might make a real angel out of it. There are all sorts of germs in a kiss.

If you let the child have measles when he is young you may save a doctor's bill later on, but you may have to pay the undertaker now.

Blustery.

"What's the matter with that fellow over there on the corner, who is purple in the face and is waving his arms like a windmill?"

"Oh, that's Blobbins in an argument. He's evidently trying to make somebody take what he considers the commonsense view of a situation."

He Was Congratulated.

W. F. Burnham, of Winnipeg, whose wife had presented him with 13 children, sent a newspaper clipping announcing the birth of the thirteenth child to Theodore Roosevelt, and received a letter of congratulation from that opponent of race suicide.

Indian Population Increases.

The Indian population of Canada shows a decided increase this year over 1912. There is a notable lack of acute contagious diseases. These are two of the most important statements made in the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs, which was issued recently. The Indian population in 1912 was 104,956, this year it is 106,490. But there is a decrease noted in the number of Eskimo inhabitants from 4,600 to 3,447.

The provinces which have gained in Indian population are: Alberta, from 8,113 to 8,229; British Columbia, from 24,781 to 25,172; Manitoba, from 10,573 to 10,822; Nova Scotia, from 1,969 to 2,018; New Brunswick, from 1,903 to 1,920; Quebec, from 12,817 to 12,843; Saskatchewan, from 9,545 to 9,699; Northwest Territory, from 3,262 to 3,030.

Decreases are recorded in Prince Edward Island, 300 to 292; Ontario, 26,393 to 26,077, and the Yukon, 1,500 to 1,389.

Tuberculosis, says the report, continues to be the most formidable of all the maladies from which the Indian has to suffer. This is due to the inability of the aborigines to comprehend and put into effect the primary laws of sanitation. However, the Indian is being educated to the importance of avoiding overcrowding in houses, and it is hoped that this will decrease the number of cases of consumption. Officers find that cleanliness is more often observed than formerly.

BIG REDUCTIONS ANNOUNCED FOR SEVERAL HYDRO TOWNS

Hon. Adam Beck States That a General Cut Must be Delayed Because of Extensive Enlargements Necessary but a Further Slice Will Soon be taken off Prices

TORONTO, Dec. 10. — Before leaving the city last night, Hon. Adam Beck, chairman of the Hydro-electric Power Commission, announced a substantial reduction in rates for several municipalities in the power union. These reductions apply to municipalities where the consumption of power has increased to such an extent during the past twelve months that the peak load at Niagara Falls has reached figures that bring the graduated scale of prices into operation.

At the same time the demand for power has grown to such proportions that the commission has decided upon an elaborate program of extensions that will involve a capital expenditure of upwards of three-quarters of a million dollars. "This action by the commission," said Mr. Beck, "is based on the increased consumption of power as well as anticipating a continued growth. We will immediately set to work to duplicate the main transmission line from Niagara Falls to Dundas. This is now a double circuit, and we will double the line from Dundas to St. Thomas, via London, which is a single circuit at the present time. On account of the heavy capital expenditure entailed the commission will delay reducing the price of power to all the municipalities for another year, with the exception of a few, where we feel justified in making a reduction at the present moment."

The reductions in the cost of Hydro power recommended by the commission are as follows:

Hamilton from $16 to $15; Dundas, from $16 to $15; Caledonia, from $29.10 to $25; London, from $24 to $23; Guelph, from $22 to $21; Preston, from $22 to $21; Galt, from $22 to $21.50; Waterloo, from $23.50 to $22.50; Berlin, from $25 to $21.50; Baden, from $37 to $32; Port Credit, from $31 to $28.

All of these municipalities, without exception, may reduce their light rates from Nov. 1.

The building of the new line from Niagara Falls to Dundas, Mr. F. A. Gaby, chief engineer, estimates will cost $500,000. This will mean an entire new outfit of transmission towers and cables with all the necessary appliances. It is altogether likely that the commission will do this work itself, and the line will be built on a private right-of-way to be purchased. The doubling of the Dundas-London-St. Thomas circuit will cost about $100,000. No new towers will be required for this line.

Already a great deal of extension work has been done. The transformer station at Niagara Falls has been enlarged to three times its original size, and foundations are now in for another addition that will bring its capacity to between 120,000 and 150,000 horse-power. The station at Toronto has been doubled twice, and large additions have been made to the Dundas station. The stations at St. Thomas, London, Stratford, Berlin and Guelph have all been enlarged. The present power load on the Niagara system is about 60,000.

The ultimate effect of the cut in the price of power and the handsome profits being shown by practically all the municipalities in the Hydro scheme will mean a further reduction in power and light rates to consumers. "Recommendations have been sent out to twenty or thirty municipalities," said Mr. Beck, "suggesting that new rates be struck for the benefit of consumers."

Should Increase Salaries.

TORONTO, Dec. 10.—The Ontario Municipal Electrical Association, formed of representatives of the group of municipalities to the agreement to unite for using the provincial hydro electric system and to maintain the lowest possible rates for the power, met in the City Hall yesterday afternoon. It was the association's second annual meeting. G. R. Geary presided. He offered a resolution that $25,000 be divided between the three provincial commissioners for salaries, inasmuch as the system is now a well-established going concern and those who manage it should be paid.

George Sutherland, of Ingersoll offered an amendment that the salaries do not exceed $15,000, but the support was small. Then the resolution to pay $25,000 was adopted by a large majority.

These offices were elected: President, W. J. Lyon, Guelph, vice-presidents, E. I. Sifton, Hamilton; Philip Pocock, London; secretary-treasurer, E. N. Ashworth, Toronto; executive, Mayor Carter, Guelph; Mayor Euler, Berlin; Ald. Roach, St. Thomas; Ald. Bradburn, Peterboro; Commissioner Black, Toronto.

Samuels Refuses Raise.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—The prospect of a strike of the postal employes in the Christmas season was increased by the announcement yesterday of the Postmaster-General, H. L. Samuel, that he would not concede the demand for a 15 per cent. increase in wages.

Merchant Dropped Dead.

QUEBEC, Dec. 10.—While waiting for his change from an account which he had just paid in a store on Buade street, about 12.45 p.m. yesterday, Victor Lemieux, aged about 55, who keeps a large hardware store on St. Peter street, suddenly fell to the floor unconscious. An attendant who saw him fall hastily summoned help and clerks ran to the unfortunate man's assistance. He was still breathing when picked up, but expired before either the doctor or the priest, who had been hastily summoned, arrived on the scene. Deceased had been ailing for some time from heart disease.

Goes Suddenly Insane.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 10—Yesterday morning about 10 o'clock Mrs. Bradshaw of Michigan, while waiting for a train at the Grand Trunk station, became suddenly violently insane, and so terrified the other waiting passengers that the police were called. The police had all they could do to secure the woman and convey her to the police station. She was visiting friends here.

FIVE BODIES FOUND

Three From Wrecked Freighters are Washed Ashore.

SOUTHAMPTON, Dec. 10. — Four more bodies have been found here—two of them from the Isaac M. Scott and two from the Hydrus. All had life-belts on. One was found about twelve miles north of here, and looked like George W. Palmer of the Scott. The other body from the Scott was found about five miles south, and answers fairly well to the description of Albert W. Wood, second mate of the Scott.

One body from the Hydrus was found just south of the town, and the fact of two front teeth being set in the upper jaw with bridge work, would indicate that he is Fred. Erickson of the Hydrus. The other body from the Hydrus has not been identified.

Another at Kincardine.

KINCARDINE, Dec. 10. — Yesterday morning about 11 o'clock another body from the Isaac M. Scott floated ashore a few miles south of Kincardine. On examination it was found that it was the body of Karl Edward Frederick Rosenberg, a wheelman on the ill-fated steamer.

WOMAN TWICE TRIED TO ESCAPE

Grandmother of the Russian Revolution is Unsuccessful.

ST. PETERSBURG, Dec. 10. — A second unsuccessful attempt to escape from exile in Siberia was made early this month by Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, "Grandmother of the Russian Revolution," whose case at the time of her condemnation in March, 1910, aroused such widespread interest in Europe and America.

Mme. Breshkovskaya was sentenced to perpetual exile, after a trial whose proceedings were followed with revolutionary conspiracy.

LEADER IN PARIS

Mrs. Pankhurst Says She Will Return to London.

PARIS, Dec. 10.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst arrived here yesterday to pay a short visit to her daughter, Christobel Pankhurst. Although looking very tired and weak, Mrs. Pankhurst expressed her determination to return to London to keep her engagement to speak at a meeting on Monday, whether she was fully recovered or not.

On the arrival of the train the suffragette leader was assisted to a taxicab, in which she drove to her daughter's apartments. Miss Pankhurst says that her mother's health had been greatly benefited by her trip to the United States, and for that reason she was able to stand three days' privations in Exeter Jail better than might have been expected.

TO HELP THE WINTER FAIR

Federal Aid Will be Made to Provincial Show

SOME BIG CROWDS

GUELPH, Dec. 10.—The 13th annual Provincial Winter Fair opened here yesterday with record crowds in attendance, and, according to those who know, it is the best ever held in Guelph and eclipses any live stock show heretofore put on in the Dominion.

That the Federal Department of Agriculture has definitely decided to assist the Provincial Winter Fair by a substantial grant, was the message from Hon. Martin Burrell, Minister of Agriculture, delivered by Mr. John Bright at the civic luncheon.

"For the first time in your history Mr. Burrell is providing for a grant to this fair for the ensuing year," declared Mr. Bright, amid the enthusiastic applause of the guests. The speaker was not prepared to name any amount in connection with the announcement entrusted to him, but gave the assurance that the money would be forthcoming.

The big feature of the fair is the horse show. Nearly four hundred horses of all sizes and breeds are on exhibition.

There is a large entry of cattle, sheep and swine. The leading attraction in the cattle stalls was the large Aberdeen Angus steer, Glencarnock, Victor II., the animal that captured the grand championship at the Chicago Show.

Among the new features is the egg exhibit, in charge of the live stock branch of the Dominion Department of Agriculture.

The Holstein cattle won the dairy competition, entirely outclassing the other breeds.

Moving Pictures as Evidence.

BOSTON, Dec. 10.—In a court specially darkened for the occasion, a moving picture show was given yesterday as part of the defence of the United Shoe Machinery Co. in the dissolution suit instituted by the Government on the ground that the company has effected an unlawful monopoly.

The "movies" were employed to illustrate the operation of machines manufactured by the company.

Chinese Are Not Barred.

OTTAWA, Dec. 10.—Chinese immigrants are not affected by the order-in-council just passed prohibiting the entry to British Columbia of all classes of labor.

There is a special act governing the Chinamen, limiting their numbers and imposing a $500 head tax.

The order-in-council does not affect this in any way.

Chancellor Defies House.

BERLIN, Dec. 10.—The Imperial Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Holweg, yesterday defied the Imperial Parliament to pass amendments to the constitution proposed by the Socialists making the Imperial Chancellor responsible to the House for the acts of the Emperor and providing for his dismissal upon the demand of the House.

Philipp Scheidemann, one of the Socialist leaders, at the opening of the budget debate yesterday, moved the adoption of the amendments put forward by the party and appealed to the House to refuse to vote supplies until the Chancellor had either resigned or been dismissed. The Chancelor said he did not intend to resign.

PLAINTIFF AWARDED $112 MUST PAY $12 AS RENT

Jury Find That the Defendant Edwards Took Unlawful Steps

CLAIM WAS $300

After being out slightly over an hour, the jury returned and foreman N. Bibby in giving their verdict, stated that they found that the defendant Edwards did unlawfully distrain the goods of the plaintiff Godfrey and that the said plaintiff was entitled to one hundred and twelve dollars, the plaintiff to pay the defendant twelve dollars for back rent.

The Court was then adjourned till Monday morning, when the case of R. C. Heard seeking to recover monies on a mortgage from Robert Touchborn, will be heard. Bennet and Goodwill are appearing for the plaintiff and O'Connell and Corkery for the defendant.

The case of The Examiner Printing Co., suing George Spotton for a balance on account to the extent of $136.46, was settled out of court.

In the civil case heard yesterday in the County Court before His Honor Judge Huycke, Mrs. Godfrey, the plaintiff, who was seeking to recover $300 from Wm. Edwards as recompense for furniture, which the latter, according to the plaintiff, illegally sold, testified that she, in July, 1911, rented the rooms over Edwards' store for $6 per month; it was to be paid in advance. In September of 1912 she went to Toronto to visit a sister-in-law who was at the point of death and who has since died. When she was going she told Mr. Edwards that she would be back in a short time and asked him to see that the furniture and household goods were safe. He agreed.

After the death of her relative she went to Bolton, a short distance from Toronto, and while there received word from her husband in North Bay that the defendant (Edwards) had sold the furniture and rented the house to another party. Not having any home, she and her daughter obtained work in Bolton and remained there. Her husband works with a railway gang and is moving about considerable, hence he could not be found last July when the case was about to be brought to court.

Did Not Receive Bill

Mr. Godfrey was next called and he stated that he worked in North Bay, his employer being Mr. Maitland. Mr. Maitland had business in the city some time ago and when he returned he acquainted him (Godfrey) with the fact that Edwards had sold the furniture and rented the home to another party. This news he sent to his wife. He wrote to Mr. Edwards and found out that he had sold some, but not all of the furniture. He had never received a bill from Mr. Edwards for the unpaid rent. As he was out of the city and therefore knew nothing of any arrangements she made.

E. J. Waterman, a local second hand dealer, was called to value some of the articles taken by Edwards. Curtains the plaintiff valued at $21, he valued at about $2. The other articles produced had about the same relative value, according to his estimation.

"Going to Clear Out"

Mrs. Milliken, who keeps a boarding house nearby Edward's store, swore that on July, 1912, Mrs. Godfrey told her that she was going to clear out and leave the furniture in the house as rent. The reason was because her husband had deserted her and didn't send the rent money. Mrs. Milliken stated that the furniture, according to her estimation, was worth about $25.

Rent Was Behind

Mr. Edwards, the defendant, was the next witness. He stated that he was talking to Mrs. Godfrey the night before she left. There was no arrangements made between them about the furniture or paying for the rent of the house. She had not paid him for the house for the months of August or September and according to the agreement, she was to pay him in advance. About the 13th or 14th of September, he took very sick, and as is customary under such circumstances, his son William looked after his business. Unknown to him his son took the above mentioned furniture and sold some of it. When lying in bed one day, he saw this furniture in his yard, but was too ill to pay any attention to it. His son had no authority to touch the furniture and did so on his own account. Mr. Edwards never received any money from the sale of the furniture excepting $4.50 which was left at the house.

A Signed Receipt

Mr. Dumble questioned the witness re the rent for the month of August which he swore he never received. Mr. Edwards again denied the fact that he had received it, but his memory was proven to be a trifle faulty when Mr. Dumble produced a signed receipt for this money. No accounts of this money was recorded in the defendant's books, therefore his books as well as his memory was in bad shape. He was the last witness.

G. N. Gordon, who appeared for the defendant, in addressing the jury laid special emphasis on the testmony of Mrs. Godfrey re her leaving for Toronto and promising Mr. Edwards to be back in two weeks. On the contrary she remained away for months and during that time she never wrote or sent him any word whether she intended coming back or not. She was behind in her rent and told a friend that she intended leaving the town and Edwards could have the furniture for rent. She asked far more than the value of the household effect as recompense as was shown by Mr. Waterman.

"A Frame Up"

"The whole thing," exclaimed Mr. Gordon, "is a frame-up between a husband and wife to 'get to' some of Mr. Edwards' money." He pointed out how Mr. Edwards' inferior knowledge of keeping books might lead him to making a mistake in the rent for the month of August and claimed that that was no great fault for even lawyers make mistakes some times.

It was according to Mr. Gordon, a case of getting the man by the wrong foot, for it was not Mr. Edwards who removed and sold the furniture but rather his son who was not authorized to do so. The only money Mr. Edwards received was $4.50 for which he had some time ago paid $20.00 into court in order to settle it.

For the Plaintiff

Mr. Dumble in addressing the jury explained that Mr. Edwards had broken the law which was made purposely for the protection of tenants. The defendant had himself finally stated that only six dollars were due him for rent, yet he sold the furniture, and what he didn't sell he used himself. He placed no value on the evidence of Watterman stating that he was a junk man and had to buy things cheap. This class of business man as a general rule, do not value household effects as much as the housewife who owns them. Edwards had seen the furniture in his yard and although he was so ill that he might have been called to face his Maker at any minute, he never considered it as an unjust and unfair streak of business. In conclusion he asked them to fix the claim as much as they deemed a recompense for the sale of the furniture and enough to replace the fittings of the home of which they were stripped.

His Honor Judge Huycke after advising them as to how they could ascertain the correct amount and reviewing both evidences, gave them a list of the articles taken and the value placed on them by the plaintiff. The jury then withdrew.

LAURIER ESSAYS TO RALLY THE PARTY AT MONTREAL

Cold Winter is Coming on Says Liberal Leader in Declaration of Lower Cost-of living Policy

MONTREAL, Dec. 10.—Hon. W. S. Fielding was the guest of honor at a banquet in the Ritz-Carlton last night attended by Sir Wilfrid Laurier and many others prominent in the Liberal ranks.

Only two toasts followed the honoring of the health of his Majesty the King. They were: "Our Guest," to which Hon. Mr. Fielding responded, and "Our Cause," with which Sir Wilfrid Laurier's name was associated.

"Our Guest" was proposed by Messrs. R. C. Smith and F. Rinfret, the former speaking in English, the latter in French. Both paid tribute to the services of Mr. Fielding.

Hon. W. S. Fielding was received with cheers and was heralded by President Mitchell of the Montreal Reform Association as "the only man in Canada who can effectively grapple with our problem in the high cost of living."

Mr. Fielding was not prepared to believe the defeat of 1911 was because the people of Canada were opposed to better trade relations with the United States. It was inconceivable that intelligent people would condemn any Government for accomplishing the thing that every Government had struggled for since Confederation. It was nothing to be ashamed of if Liberalism had gone down for the cause for which Macdonald, Mackenzie, Blake and Tupper had fought. But he did not believe this had been the issue in question.

Speaking of the record of the present administration, he said: "The time has come now when Canadians can fairly do some comparing and contrasting. We now have the right to measure promises with performances, the right to compare things as they were with things as they were to be and with things as they are."

Turning to the tariff Mr. Fielding described the Government's Tariff Commission as a fiasco. The cement duty had been reduced but the reduction was speedily put on again. He said he believed in surpluses, but he believed more in the prosperity and happiness of the people.

If there was too much taxation they should reduce it. The surplus had reached great figures, and the comfort and well-being of the people demanded the first consideration.

Mr. Fielding concluded shortly after midnight.

The toast to "Our Cause" was proposed by Messrs. Antonio Perrault and A. R. MacMaster in brief speeches, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier followed.

Conditions were not satisfactory, and it was the business of the Government to look after the happiness and prosperity of the people. For the first time since 1896 Canadians are seeking work and not finding it. Unemployment was abroad in the land, there was less work, and there was the higher cost of living. He was amazed to read in a Conservative newspaper a report of the Minister of Labor's speech in Halifax yesterday. According to what Mr. Crothers had declared, there was nothing to do, nothing to change, everything was serene, everything was for the best.

"If the Government will not act, then the Opposition will act," declared Sir Wilfrid. "The Opposition will rise to its duty.

"The tariff as it is operated to-day permits combines to unduly increase the cost of living, and the prices paid the farmers are not the prices paid by the consumers.

"There are higher and better things than fighting for power; that is to fight for the wives, for the children, for the men who upon reduced wages must face the coming cold Canadian winter. And come, let us fight this battle of humanity."

Sir Wilfrid concluded at one o'clock this morning.

Hon. Charles Marcil was the last speaker.

Against Sympathy Strike.

LONDON, Dec. 10.—The trades union council yesterday rejected a resolution in favor of a sympathetic strike of the trade unionists in the British Isles in support of the transport workers of Dublin and instructed the delegates in Dublin to endeavor to resume negotiations with the employers in view of bringing about a speedy settlement of the dispute.

The meeting of the council was a stormy one, the adherents of James Larkin, the strike leader, stubbornly resisting all the proposals of the conservative element which, however, eventually carried the day.

Free Toothbrushes for Pupils.

STRATFORD, Dec. 10—The public school board of Stratford has fallen in line with the progressive metropolitan schools in the matter of sanitation. At its monthly meeting, it acted upon the suggestion of Miss Emily Loney, the public school nurse, that toothbrushes be supplied to those children who cannot afford to buy them themselves.

During the last three months Miss Loney has made 3,420 inspections.

KINGSTON, Ont., Dec. 10. — The disappearance of the adopted son of B. H. Newton, near Cross Lake, has caused consternation among the people of the district, who fear the little fellow has been devoured by wild beasts, for wolves and bears abound there. About 30 persons have been searching for him.

Guelph to Georgian Bay Radial is Endorsed

GUELPH, Dec. 10. — Representatives from all the municipalities interested in the proposed Guelph-Georgian Bay Hydro Electric Radial Railway were present at a banquet held in the Y.M.C.A. building here.

A resolution endorsing the scheme and asking the aid of the Hydro-Electric Commission was presented and passed amid cheers.

Hon. Adam Beck was the chief speaker. He said they should investigate the proposed scheme thoroughly in order that all the fine points could be comprehended before the people launched into it.

He then went on to explain the various methods used in bringing the project to an issue. "Hydro will not not only operate your railways, but will also supply power for practically every use," he said, "It will make life less burdensome on the farm so that the young people will not be attracted from the farm, but they will be attracted to it."

Power can be distributed any distance up to twenty miles each side of the lines for electric light and power. There will be a saving of from $5 to $17 per h.p. if the line is run in conjunction with the railway.

Burglaries Numerous.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 10.—No city has been freer from burglary than London for many years, but within the past few weeks several minor cases have been reported, and the police are now making a special effort to watch for robbers of houses and stores.

Colonial Office, However, Will Not Protest Hindu Exclusion

LONDON, Dec. 10—(C.A.P. Cable)—An inquiry by the Canadian Associated Press from a member of Parliament in close touch with the Ministry, elicited an emphatic expression of opinion that the Colonial Office could not and would not attempt to interfere with the emigration of East Indians into the Dominion.

"At the same time, imperial travelers here," said our informant, "feel very strongly that the authorities, both in South Africa and British Columbia, do not realize the tremendous effect their attitude towards the Indian has upon the attitude of India generally towards the British Empire.

"Let us realize that the empire has more native regular soldiers in India than in all the other dominion combined.

"The question of the Hindus' position in overseas dominions will be one of the principal items for consideration at the next Imperial Conference."

NEW ELECTION IS ORDERED

Mexican Congress Appoints Huerta Until Next Summer

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 10. — The Mexican Congress yesterday nullified the Presidential elections. New elections are called for next July.

Congress, according to this action expects Gen. Huerta to remain in the Presidency for a least seven months more and if the time necessary for the selection and installation of his successor is taken into consideration it will be well toward the end of September next year before he yields his power to another.

In voting last night that the recent Presidential election was null, the deputies decided to fix the first Sunday in July, 1914, as the date for the new election. They also confirm the position of Gen. Huerta as Provisional President until then.

The action of the deputies was accompanied by no debate. The committee report was approved without a dissenting vote as rapidly as the articles could be read. It was not until the last clause was read, referring to Gen. Huerta as Provisional President, that the chamber gave evidence other than that of a well-trained organization. When the reading clerk stopped someone began applauding and then instantly the deputies were shouting "vivas" for Huerta.

The action of the new Congress was no surprise to most people since it was but a reiteration of Huerta's statement made from time to time. There had been, however, a growing impression that the new organization might prove reactionary, but its approval last night of Huerta's program serves to reassure the doubting ones that the acting President retains his grip on the political situation.

A rumor that Huerta may retire from the Presidency owing to pressure from abroad is circulated in the capital.

CALEB CUSHING'S FEAT.

To Prove a Statement He Read a Dictionary Through Twice.

To illustrate the abilities of General Caleb Cushing, one of New England's famous men, a writer in the New York Sun vouches for the following remarkable feat.

It was in the fifties that the publishers of Webster's Dictionary requested General Cushing to write a friendly notice of the work. General Cushing replied that he had read it and that if they expected complimentary notice of a work that contained 5,000 errors they would be disappointed.

The publishers replied that if he would prove his statement to the satisfaction of the editor, Professor Porter of Harvard, they would believe him. Thereupon he read the dictionary through a second time and mailed a list of 5,000 errors to Professor Porter.

This extraordinary achievement, declares the writer, justifies the statement made in 1876 by Wendell Phillips that he considered General Cushing to be the most learned man of the day.

A Mouse and a Candle.

At the end of the bathing season a few years ago a candle was left on the mantelpiece of a family in Pouliguen, France. When they returned the next spring they found, according to La Nature, that a mouse had done these things:

Climbed somehow a marble chimney piece, there being no piece of furniture near enough to leap from and no way of descending from above.

Climbed the candlestick itself, which was of highly polished silver, over ten inches high, with a broad flare at the cup.

Climbed the candle, began eating at the top, eating evenly all round down to the base, leaving the bare wick standing perfectly straight.

If the mouse had begun at the base of the candle its weight would have caused it to topple over. It must have taken the mouse a good many days to eat the candle down to the bottom.

The English Channel.

One of the most famous bits of water in the world is the English channel, which separates and yet unites the sister countries of England and France and has been the scene of so much of their history. It extends on the English side from Land's End to Dover and on the French side from the island of Ushant to Calais. Its entrance from the German ocean is the strait of Dover, twenty-one miles wide, while at the other extremity, where it joins the Atlantic, it is 100 miles from shore to shore. The greatest width midway is 150 miles. Owing to the strong current setting in from the westward, the high winds which frequently prevail and the configuration of the shores it has a roughness which has become proverbial and few cross it without seasickness.

Q. HOPE LECTURES

Mr. Jones Talks to Peachtree Folks on Suffrage.

SHOWS UP THE MALE SEX.

Arrival of Distinguished Speaker Somewhat Sudden, but Providence Spares Him to Expose the Frailties of His Fellow Man.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.]

MY Friends of Peachtree Corners—Two hours ago there were grave doubts as to whether I could make my appearance before you this evening or not. I was comfortably seated on the buffer of a freight car that was rolling along with others at the rate of eighteen miles an hour and was drinking in the picturesque scenery and thanking Providence that I was still alive when a great big husky brakeman suddenly appeared before me, and without giving me time to call a taxi or put up any sort of argument he took me by the neck and dropped me into the roadside ditch.

I struck all parts of the ditch at once. I bounced, I bounded, I cavorted. I rolled and tossed and tumbled, but I was neither killed outright nor fatally injured. Providence spared me that I might stand before you this evening.

Let me begin my remarks on the suffragette movement by asking you who Eve was. I answer that from the best data I have been able to pick up she was the first woman to appear in this world. After wandering around by herself for awhile she came across Adam. It seemed to her that a partnership would be a good thing, but it was no sooner made than Adam turned upon her and yelled:

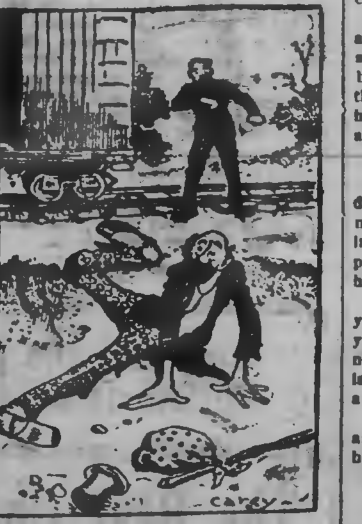
"Now, you get along to your work and don't waste any time about it, either!"

Beginning of Slavery.

My friends, that was the beginning of the slavery of the female sex. Instead of picking up a club and raising a bump on Adam's head, Miss Eve curled down and became as humble as a cat. She was to blame for all that women have had to suffer at the hands of the tyrant man since that date.

Adam couldn't have made that bluff good with a Mrs. Pankhurst, but he happened to get hold of a little woman who didn't want a scrap, and so she knuckled. The next man followed his example, and his wife also knuckled, and by and by the thing became a system and was treated as a matter of course.

There has never been a time since the days of Adam that woman, given the same opportunities, would not have been the equal of man in everything but muscle. Here and there and now and then there was a woman that couldn't be bluffed and kept down. They kicked their way to the top, and they stayed there and were heard of. About a year ago I went into a junkshop to look for a hoe, and the junkman called my attention to an old tin box full of ancient parchments. I paid him a dollar for box and contents, and I surely got a great prize.



"I STRUCK ALL PARTS OF THE DITCH AT ONCE."

Women the Poets.

I have learned from those parchments that way back 6,000 years ago the women wrote all the poetry, and it was good poetry at that.

While the men were fooling around with politics women invented the slapjack.

While the men were trying to figure out where the sun went to when it disappeared behind Snyder's hill the women invented breakfast hash.

While the men were off to war, killing each other for very thin glory, the women were inventing soft soap and making the first rag carpets.

There wasn't an Egyptian or Persian ruler that didn't have a wife fully as smart as he was. He sought to hold her down by threats, but she broke out here and there and let history record it.

It was an Egyptian woman that first broached the idea that the world was flat. Her old man boxed her ears for it and tried to steal the patent, but history has placed the credit where it belongs.

Old Xenophon discovered that when the moon lay on her back we were in for a dry time of it for a week or two, but while he was banging around the city hall and asking folks to believe he was a great man his wife went at it and invented the buttonhole. No one ever cared two cents' worth whether the moon lay on her back or stomach, but just think what that first buttonhole meant to mankind! We can do without our poets and statesmen, but we can't spare a single buttonhole!

A Great Beetle Hunter.

Xerxes discovered and catalogued and gave to the world seventeen different kinds of beetles and wanted a monument so bad that he paid all the cost of it. Was his wife asleep while he was beetle hunting? Not much. She just went at it and invented the coffee mill and benefited mankind a hundred times more than the beetle business. You can imagine what would happen if we all had to get up in the morning and pound the breakfast coffee in a rag!

You find nothing in history about Mrs. Diogenes. The old man and his tub and his philosophy are given full swing, and she isn't in it at all. Don't forget, however, that there was a Mrs. Diog. and that she got off a bit of philosophy that beat anything of his all hollow. It was, "No meat—no eat," and referred to the old man's laziness. And while he was lolling around in his tub she goes at it and invents the boot jack, which is worth $50,000 per year to the farmers of New Hampshire alone.

We know that Lucrezia Borgia poisoned a number of people, most of whom ought to have been hung anyway. Why did she do it? Because she wanted to rise and be somebody, and the world was agin her. I have always felt a large measure of sympathy for her.

Cato a Good Sort.

Cato, according to history, was a mighty good fellow. He went around elbowing folks off the sidewalk and living a life of bluff. He had gab and cheek and he made the most of them. Did he accomplish anything to make the world remember him ten years after he had turned up his toes?

On the contrary, while he was sporting his bluff his wife brought out the johnnycake and the clothespin that straddles the clothesline. Those two inventions almost built up the world. They were old when they landed with the pilgrim fathers, but they took right hold and helped to make America what she is today.

And who discovered pumpkin pie?

Was it Plato?

Was it Romulus?

Was it one of the Caesars?

Was it Nero?

Not on your life! While these bluffers were making history, or thought they were, a little widow named Smith who didn't pretend to be any great shakes, goes at it and invents the pumpkin pie and modestly asks some one to try the flavor.

Kings jumped for it.

Queens cried for it.

Emperors offered to take the whole stock at 15 cents a pie.

At least one empress committed suicide because there was no pie in the house for her when she came in from hunting the wild roebuck.

Pumpkin pie jumped the world a hundred years ahead in a month. It buried tyrants from their thrones.

It brought peace to warring nations.

It raised the moral status of the world 50 per cent.

And then, when the old crop of male bluffers had passed in their checks and a new crop was beginning to swagger, came— What? The woman again!

This time she came with apple sass, and she knocked the legs from under statesmen and heroes until they fell by the hundreds. Her apple sass called their every bluff. And then came the hasty pudding and the gingerbread, and where was man!

Tyrant In Last Ditch.

I say to the seven women in this audience, you have driven the tyrant man to his last ditch. He is squirming and kicking and hollering. He is putting up a great bluff. Stand up to him! Get what you demand.

It has taken your sex thousands of years to reach the point you have, and you must not weaken at the last. I notice that the old man with one eye is very uneasy. If he desires to ask any questions he can do so."

"I'd like to ask," said the old man as he arose, "who is goin' to do the housework if the women vote?"

"You are a farmer, I take it?"

"I are."

"Well, do you have to give up your farm because you go to the polls once a year for an hour?"

"Why, I thought they was going to vote every few minutes! All right—all right. My wife has been dead 'leven years, and women votin' can't skeer me a durn cent's wuth! In speakin' of what women have done you might have mentioned that Cleopatra was the one who diskivered catnip tea, but being you didn't, and bein' it's after 9 o'clock, mebbe I'd better chop it off and slide along to the next metropolis!"

And Q. Hope slid.

THE HUMAN BRAIN

Its Crumpled Up Shape Is One of Nature's Clever Devices.

CELLS OF THE GRAY MATTER.

Their Mass and Not the Size Nor Weight of the Brain Marks the Mentality of the Individual—Development of the Brain of an Infant.

The apparent crumpling up of the brain is one of the most remarkable of nature's devices for securing the greatest possible amount of surface in the given space. If you take a page of a newspaper and hold it by the edges, blowing it up to form a balloon, you have the surface of the paper occupying the largest possible amount of space. If you crumple up the paper you can get the same amount of surface by following all the creases in one-fourth to one-tenth of the space. This is precisely what nature has done. In the rabbit, for instance, the cerebrum, or great brain, with which most of the thinking is done, is without a crease, perfectly round and smooth, and the rabbit is about the stupidest of animals.

If you study the brains of animals a little higher in intelligence than the rabbit you will find that creases come into the brain until in man the entire brain is a series of creases and convolutions that puzzle you by their intricacy. It is plain that the actual surface of this creased brain of man is many times greater than if it were all smooth, like the rabbit's, and this is the way in which evolution has provided for giving the brain of man a surface from four to ten times what it would have been if smooth, so as to give space for as much gray matter as possible.

No scientist has yet explained the reason, but the fact is admitted that thought and gray matter are in proportion. The cells of the gray matter seem to store up thought and give it out when called upon to do so. This has been proved by electrically stimulating the gray matter when exposed by an accident or operation and noting the result in the thoughts expressed by the patient. This gray matter is spread in a coat of varying thickness all over the surface of the brain, while the white matter and nerves lie under it and ramify into it.

A man may be said to be intellectual in proportion to the amount of gray matter which he has in his brain. This varies in individuals, one having more gray mater at one spot, another a thicker layer at another, much of this being doubtless due to cultivation, though the laws of the multiplication of gray matter are still secrets which science has not pierced.

Nor can intellectuality be measured by the weight of the brain. The average male brain weighs forty-eight ounces, and the average female brain forty-three and a half, but this does not mean that woman is necessarily man's inferior intellectually. Her brain may have more gray matter in proportion or thicker layers at the parts most in demand by her life. Brains weighing more than sixty ounces have been found in idiots, and some of the most brilliant men and women have had very small brains when put upon the scale. But in all cases of great intellectuality the depth of the convolutions at certain places in the brain is enormous, and the five lobes into which each hemisphere of the brain is divided are very distinctly marked, affording space for much of the gray matter.

The infant has gray matter all over the surface of its brain, and thanks to the generations of development that have preceded it the divisions into lobes and the deep creases are already there. But they are still [illegible] very soft form and development follows in accordance with the intellectual development of the child. Its natural endowment at birth is only an endowment of possibility, and the question of whether that infant will be an intellectual giant or a pigmy in brain power is dependent almost altogether upon the training which it receives and the development of the gray matter in its brain.

The genius cannot be explained and possibly never will be, but a partial explanation of his tremendous power in some one direction is offered by the examination of his brain after death. Only lately a very eminent surgeon of Philadelphia died and when his brain was examined it was found that for a large part it was like a child's, but in those parts especially required by his profession it was developed far more than is usual, and the layers of gray matter at these spots were inordinately thick. It is never right to draw any broad conclusion from a single instance, but science has generalized from many instances of this kind until it is ready now to say that thought power is proportionate to the gray matter in the centers most used or needed.—New York World.

John Bull the Musician.

Few but those who have studied musical history know that the name John Bull was borne by one of the most famous musicians of the sixteenth century. He was as famous a harpsichord player in his day as Liszt was a pianist, but as a composer he lacked the creative power of Liszt, the result being that Bull is practically unknown to the general public today, even in England.

He doubles his troubles who borrows tomorrow's.—Spanish Proverb.

HUMAN PERVERSITY.

HOW simple it would be
To keep from sinful ways
If acting wickedly
Entitled us to praise!

How easily we might Pursue the righteous course
If we in doing right
Were troubled by remorse!

How few of us would care
To go the wicked way
Or find it bright if there
Were not a price to pay!

How soon they who have strayed
Would turn away from vice
If virtue could be made
To cost a heavy price!

How glad we all would be
To do the things we should
If sinning paid and we
Were taxed for being good!

Pardonable Mistake.

Four Lancashire gentlemen recently paid their first visit to Paris, and in a chic restaurant they called the waiter to their aid to fix the menu.

"We don't understand French, and we don't want to know what the name of the dish is," they explained; "but let it be something typically French—something you can't get in England."

"The gentlemen leave that to me," said the waiter. "I will devise a collation exquise."

And, walking to the speaking-tube, he shouted (in clear English, as the visitors thought): "Cat soup!"

Before that waiter had time to turn round, the men, who fortunately were sitting near the door, were hurrying down the boulevards—aghast and pale. Not till their feet were on their native heath again did they find out that "cat soup" was the Parisian for the French "quatre soupes" (four soups).

How To Fill Up Holes In Wood.

It sometimes becomes necessary to fill up cracks or dents in fine woodwork, furniture, floors, etc. The following is the best way of doing it: White tissue paper is steeped and perfectly softened in water and by thorough kneading with glue transformed into a paste and by means of ochers (earth colors) colored as nearly as possible to the shade of the wood. To the paste calcined magnesia is then added, and it is forced into the cracks or very firmly to the wood and after drying retains its smooth surface.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,387 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

THE SPORTING WORLD

DEATH OF JACK BURKE RECALLS THE LONGEST RING BOUT

Jack Burke, famed as the man who fought the longest glove battle died a few days ago in New York from heart failure. Thus passes the last survivor of a record-making fight—the referee, Prof. Duffy, and the other boxer, Andy Bowen, died long ago. Burke and Bowen met at New Orleans April 6, 1893—two lightweights considered near the top of the class in those days—and their bout lasted 110 rounds. The crowd arrived early, watched the fight till midnight, went out and got a meal, returned and found the boys still fighting. Vaudeville actors who saw the early rounds, then left to do their stunts, dropped in after show time, and found the fight just getting good. Daylight was breaking when Burke, feeling very tired in the feet, stumbled and failed to rise. Somehow or other the modern record books call the fight a draw, but if memory serves aright, Bowen got the decision. Bowen kept on battling, and was finally killed in the ring while fighting George Lavigne. Burke, probably exhausted by that long battle, never cut any figure in the ring, but, with his wife, did a boxing turn in vaudeville.

WALTER MILLER WITH MONTREAL

New Ideas in Training of the Wanderers

MONTREAL, Dec. 10.—Eight of the Wanderers Hockey Club players reported for practice yesterday at the gymnasium of the St. Patrick's Amateur Athletic Association, where they will workout until ice is available. The players went through light work under the direction of Manager Dicky Boon. Arrangements have ben completed with the St. Patrick's Association for the use of the gym between the hours of 12 and 1 o'clock each day until the club can secure ice. Several new ideas are to be worked out in the way of indoor training, these ideas including work on bicycles. Kendall, who is one of the newcomers in the club this season, was the first to report. He is a likely looking chap and should make good with the Wanderers. Others to report were Sprague Cleghorn, Oddie Cleghorn, Atchison, Gordie Roberts, Walter Miller and Doheny. The last named is an amateur who will sign a contractshould he make good at practice. Doheny has played goal for several well known amateur teams.

LOOKING FOR MONEY

Huerta's Agents Busy Interviewing European Bankers

PARIS, Dec. 10.—Representatives of the Mexican Government are endeavoring to raise money in Paris. The Mexican financial agent in London, Luis de la Barra, and Manuel Garza Aldape, former Minister of the Interior in the Huerta Cabinet, have opened negotiations with the Banque de Paris at Pays Bas and other members of the London and Paris banking group which took part of the Mexican loan authorized in the spring, with the object of having this group advance $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 more immediately, in order to meet the interest on Mexican railroad bonds and the interest on various loans.

An exchange of views is now going on among the bankers, to whom special inducements have been offered, but they appear to be reluctant to touch the matter and would do so only if they were assured of adequate guarantees.

None of the money, it is said, is to be used for any purpose except payment of interest on national obligations, many of which are held in Paris and London.

LIBERAL IS ELECTED.

Asquith Government Gets Increased Majority In Wick Burghs.

WICK, Scotland, Dec. 10.—The bye-election held in the Wick Burghs Monday resulted in the Government candidate, Robert Munro, retaining his seat by a larger majority than he received at the last election. The result of the polling was: Robert Munro (Lib.), 1,577; Mr. Mackenzie (Unionist), 1,134—Liberal majority, 443.

The Liberal majority at the last election was only 211. A new election was rendered necessary by the appointment of Mr. Munro as Lord Advocate for Scotland.

The poll has been an exceedingly heavy one, in fact, the heaviest one since the 1896 election, being fought almost exclusively on the two burning issues of home rule and church disestablishment.

Lloyd George, telegraphing Munro said: "It is rather sickening to see upholders of sectarian privileges in England profess to be champions of religious equality for Ireland. I wish the English and Scottish Tories would concede the English and Welsh nonconformists the same measure of religious equality and fair play as will be guaranteed to Ulster Episcopalians and Presbyterians under the home rule bill."

"THE IMMORALITY OF SALOME"

Massenetes Beautiful Spectacular Opera "Herodiade" Produced Under the English Title "Salome"

The following extract from a criticism of The Sheehan English Opera Company's production of "Salome" which comes to The Grand on Monday next, Dec. 15, leaves nothing further to be added. It is respectfully submitted as the best evidence of the merit of this wonderful performance.

"It is difficult to write of Massenete's Salome, not because it is hard to praise, but rather because it is difficult to restrain one's adjectives. The beauty, the solemnity, the religious fervor of Salome so impress one that it leaves one spell bound, and the morning after, one still feels that intangible soul-appeal that fascinates and makes dumb mankind in the presence of a great artistic creation. Pity 'tis that sundry and various fakirs have gone through this country giving so-called Salome dances; pity 'tis that the New York press is flaying the Strauss version of Salome, should have created in the minds of some people the impression that there is aught in Salome that is immoral. If Salome is immoral, so is the prayer book, so is the thunder of waves upon the coast when lashed by the storm, so is the majestic mountain, snow crowned at its summit, its feet nestling in the verdant meadows; so is the rippling brook, the dancing glints of sunshine, the sweet prattle of babes immoral. It is the greatest moral sermon on pure love and patriotism ever presented. After listening to Massenete's wonderderful music as interpreted by The Sheehan Opera Co., one pities the poor deluded people, who frightened by a name, missed what might be easily termed the greatest production ever seen here. This is said advisedly, after having seen the Savage productions of Lohengrin, Tannhauser and Madame Butterfly, the Aborn Opera Co.'s two performances of the Bohemian Girl and Il Trovatore, but which were tawdry and flimsy besides this magnificent production. We can but regret that every one in New Orleans could not hear this magnificent musical spectacle, for to hear it was to be uplifted for a while above the fleeting things of earth and claim kinship with the stars. Such is the genius of Massenete and Joseph Sheehan.

ABOUT MEDICAL INSPECTION

Editor of The Review:

Dear Sir,—

Recent agitation for medical inspection of school children and the remarks by Dr. Struthers might lead people to think that only the children of the poor are defective or neglected. The following quotations argue otherwise. Dr. J. G. Adams, of Toronto, (whose portrait was shown by Dr. Struthers), writes: "There are thousands of such children in the well-to-do schools in Toronto, the condition of whose teeth is a disgrace to a city claiming to be civilized. The principle of one of our best schools told me that there were many such children in his school belonging to wealthy families, but that he did not dare to say anything to them for fear of giving offence."

Dr. W. D. Cowan addressing the Canadian Public Health Association meeting, at Regina, said "it is amazing the indifference shown to dental defects; this particularly on the part of the mother toward her children, between the ages of two and six. Dentally speaking easily ninety per cent. of the children have no mother at all at that age. These children don't need dentists half as much as they do mothers. The great bulk of parents think (and say) "oh, well, these are just Mary's first teeth, she will lose them in a little while, so what is the use spending money upon them.' The dental profession don't want her money. All we want her to do is to spend five minutes of her own time twice a day cleaning the teeth of her own child. I will venture the assertion that there are not twenty women in Regina who ever cleaned the teeth of that "little darling" that she would give her life to save. She will wash five dresses if necessary, a day, just to keep the little "sweetheart" clean, but as for the teeth, why she never thought of it. What we want her to do is to get a soft small brush and between the ages of two and six, when the child doesn't know enough to do it for herself, clean the teeth for her. Thousands of children have temporary teeth, decayed until they are a positive menace to health. Why? The cause of decay is just the same in temporary teeth as in the adult, viz., fermentation resulting from uncleanliness. The result of liness and fermentation is just the same in the temporary teeth as it is in the permanent teeth, excepting that in the child it is far more rapid and disastrous. We dentists seldom see these children under six years of age. The harm by that time is largely done. The school boards can't very well reach these, for they can hardly be called of school age."

THE GLAD EYE

An Excellent Company and Superb Stage Dressings.

A fairly large audience greeted The Glad Eye at the Grand Opera House last evening. The all-English Company which presents this farcical comedy is composed of some of England's greatest stars and these assisted by excellent staging makes the show one of the best that has been here this season. The staging of the play deserves special mention for seldom has it been equalled. In the second act it is superb. Douglas Greet as Gaston and Frederick Meads as Maurice, the leading men produced a lot of amusement while Mary Marlowe as Lucienne made a big hit with the audience, with her winsome smile.

IS ORDERED TO SIGN THE PLEDGE

Young Man Said He Got Liquor at the Pantry Shelf.

A young lad, aged 19, appeared before Magistrate Dumble this morning on the charge of being drunk. G. N. Gordon acted for the defendant, who pleaded not guilty.

He claimed that he got the liquor from the pantry shelf at his home and that his mother always kept is there for use around the house. His mother was not aware that he took it from the pantry.

She had however, informed the Chief that she never kept liquor in the pantry or in the house as her husband was on the list.

Further questioned by the Chief, the boy admitted being with a companion last night and treating him. "Did you drink threequarters of that bottle?" enquired His Worship when the bottle was produced in court.

"Only half of it, but then I am not a confirmed booze fighter," was the answer.

The case was settled by the Magistrate imposing suspended sentence and ordering the boy to be taken to the T. A. S. to take the pledge.

ABOUT SOLAR PHENOMENA

Dr. Marsh Will Give Address at Collegiate Institute

At the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday evening, December 16, Dr. Marsh will give an address on Solar Phenomena. It will be his farewell address to the Royal Astrononical Society, Peterboro Centre.

This will be an advanced address for the thinkers and students of Peterboro. Dr. Marsh is one of Canada's distinguished astronomers. He has been honored by the parent society by having conferred upon him the degree of doctor of science and he has honored the society by reason of the knowledge he has acquired.

In the twi-light days of this wonderful system so many of us make the mistake of supposing that when this world was formed, it was created. To create is to make out of nothing. The matter is our solar system doubtless formed other systems that lived out their time to be reformed into binaries and into larger and smaller systems depending upon the causes of fusion.

Sometimes we are apt to think that the sun is very different from the earth and we are surprised when we learn that it differs from the earth in degree of development only.

The earth is still in a condition of fertility. The moon because of its being so very much smaller is now a burnt out cinder. Mars not being so small as the moon, its rapidly tending towards the same condition.

Jupiter being nearly fourteen hundred times larger than the earth, has not yet cooled and still continues to give a sensible degree of heat to its family of moons. Its heat supplemented by the heat of the sun may make its moons habitable. The sun which is over eight hundred thousands of miles in diameter, though glowing with great heat, is aging. In its present state, it illustrates a former page in our earth's history and just as surely will the sun become as the earth now is, with one exception, the sun when it cools, will have no sun to give it light and heat.

At one time our forefathers were afraid of the spots on the sun, fearful that they might have dire effects, but now we know that these dark spots are but great accumulations of cooled gas possessing less luminosity than their surroundings.

The learned Doctor will unfold the various layers of the sun and explain the great waves of heated gas that look so much like flames during a total eclipse.

It is a great privilege to listen to these lectures. Doubtless every thinker in Peterboro will make it a point to be present at the Collegiate Institute on Tuesday evening, Dec. 16.

There will be no charge. Every citizen in Peterboro is invited to come and bring their friends.

THE LATE MRS. AUSTIN

There passed away late yesterday afternoon one of the aged residents of our city, in the person of Mrs. Mary Ann Austin, the beloved mother of Mr. Walter Austin and Miss Phoebe Austin of Weller Street. Afterwards for a number of years she lived in Belleville and Brockville, coming from the latter place to Peterborough some ten years ago. The last five years the deceased had been confined almost entirely to her home through weight of years.

In religion Mrs. Austin was a Methodist, and during her early years her home was always a centre of activity, the minister and church workers being always a welcome guest. Her husband, Mr. Benjamin Austin, predeceased her some twelve years. She leaves to mourn her loss three sons and one daughter: Rev. Dr. B. F. Austin, of Los Angeles, California; Manley Austin of Theodore, Sask., Walter C. Austin and Miss Phoebe Austin of this city.

PETERBORO MUST LOOK AFTER THE FOREIGNER; A GREAT SPEECH AT THE CANADIAN CLUB

Mr. Lee Speaks of the Importance of Immigration Problem—Says the Britisher is not an Immigrant —Better Housing Required for Foreigners —Knowledge of English Language the First Step to Nationalization

Mr. W. W. Lee, Immigration Secretary of the National Council of Young Men's Christian Associations of Canada, was the speaker at the Canadian Club meeting last evening, which was held at Coleman's Savoy Parlor. There was a full attendance, every one of the tastefully laid out tables being occupied by representative men of the city.

Mr. G. C. Wainwright, President of the Peterborough Canadian Club occupied the chair and in introducing Mr. Lee, spoke of the importance of the Canadian Club in the development of public opinion. The Club provided a common ground for the discussion of national problems and in this way it had done good service in bringing men of both parties to a better understanding on vital subjects. On this point the Hon. James Bryce, before the Canadian Club at Ottawa, had spoken very fittingly when he said:

"You have an organization where you can meet together, apart from party differences where you can meet simply as Canadians, forgetting for the moment those minor differences which may divide you, and fixing your minds on those things which unite you; a sense of the greatness of Canada, a sense of your duty to work for her, a sense of the great past behind you, a sense of the still greater future before you. Those are the objects for which the Canadian Clubs exist, and they have usefully thought that they might devote themselves not only to public questions of a political character—I mean a non-partisan political character—but also a large number of other things; and where I have read from time to time the lists of addresses which have been delivered at meetings of Canadian Clubs, I have felt that nothing could be better fitted to stimulate the interest of citizens in all kinds of subjects than to have come into touch with the general thought and general movements of the world by the addresses which are given by those eminent men who from time to time you have invited to meet you at these gatherings."

Mr. Lee's Speech

Mr. William W. Lee has taken an active interest in immigration and is well up in the question which he was present to discuss. He said that the subject was so vast that he believed there was no other question before Canada today so important as immigration. There were three types of people coming into Canada: the British, the American, and those from other countries. He did not regard the Britisher as an immigrant, the man who merely passed from one part of the Empire to another was a migrant, but he was not to be classed with the southern European. He wanted to refer solely to these other people who were not British. He said that Canada's immigration problem was three times as large as any that the States have had to face in the past. The most vital question was not of tariff, but how to deal with this great influx of foreign people. Mr. Lee quoted figures to show the great increase in foreign immigration during the last ten years. He showed that 79 per cent. of European emigrants that have come into Canada during the last ten years has been from Southern Europe, and only 21 per cent. from the north. The Southerner was inferior to the Northerner because his opportunities had been far less. Of these foreigners only 81 per cent. were males. The true significance of the problem was not its volume but its proportion. The primary motive of the emigrant in these days is a desire to better his economic position. There may have been a time when the motive was to escape from some

FINISHING TOUCHES TO ARMOURIES AT NORWOOD

Will be Opened by the Minister of Militia Next Month

Contractor Bogue has all but finished his work in connection with the new armouries says the Norwood Register. The tinsmiths completed their work on Saturday and the plastering in the basement was also about done. The building has exceeded all expectations as to its architectural beauty. It is indeed a creditable addition to Norwood's many substantial buildings. Mr. J. R. McKelvie has acted as building inspector on behalf of the government and has taken pride in seeing that the work was executed just as perfectly as the contract called for. He has also been alert to securing any little improvements that could be made.

A Description

The drill hall section inside measures 65 feet by 42 feet. Here an 1¼ inch hardwood floor rests throughout upon a cement floor, making a very level surface. The floor will be smoothed off, stained in oak and highly polished. The walls and ceiling will be painted lily white by the Militia Department.

The armoury section on the first floor contains a caretaker's room, and two armoury rooms for the local company "E" of the Militia and the Norwood Cadets. A spacious stairway leads to the basement and second floor. The basement contains furnace and lavatory rooms constructed of cement. The large coal furnace is already installed.

The second floor contains an officers' room, sergeants' room and privates' room. The room can be thrown into one by means of folding doors, giving a space of 42 feet by 27 feet. Adjoining the full length of the rooms is a balcony with railing, overlooking the interior of the drill hall. The floor of every room is of stained hardwood.

The building is brilliantly lighted throughout by electricity.

Outside the buildings, a wide cement walk will be constructed along one end and on the side facing Alma Street.

Opening in January

The opening will be held about the middle of January, and will, be one of the grandest events in the history of the village. It is expected that Col. the Hon. Sam. Hughes will be here to press the button. Our local member for the Dominion House, Mr. J. A. Sexsmith, who has been so untiring in his efforts to secure the building, together with Mr. Jas. Thompson, M.P.P., and other prominent men, will take part in the festivities. The colonel of the regiment, Mr. R. E. Birdsall, who has taken much interest in the local company, Cadets and other military organizations of the town will also be on hand to supervise matters, in company with his staff of officers and the regimental band. Definite plans will be formulated in the near future.

A BLACKSMITH IN THE MAGIC FLUTE.

AGAINST THE BRIDGE

W. S. Robinson, to Meet all Comers in South Ward

The first real signs of life in the aldermanic battlefield for the south ward is the announcement made by Mr. W. S. Robinson, 238 Wescott Street, that he is in the field to meet all comers.

Mr. Robinson has been a resident of the south end for seven years.

He is against the proposition to build a new bridge at a cost of $75,000 as he says he does not believe in bringing about a burden on all the people for the sake of a few. The bridge, he says, would be used by a few people only.

He also claims that past experience has shown that the bridge when completed would cost not $78,000, but more like $100,00.

In the West Ward

Another candidate has come forward in the West Ward in the Aldermanic contest, Mr. Jos. W. Worth of the Bonner Worth Co. Mr. Worth is a successful business man and with ample experience to make him an efficient member of the city council, if elected. He will make a good run and is advising the ratepayers of being in the field.

DICKEN'S HAIR HELD AT CUSTOMS HOUSE

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—Charles Dickens' hair, just a little lock of it, valued at $200, is causing a stir at the customs house. The lock of hair was sent here in a consignment of $5,000 worth of rare books for a local dealer who declares that the hair was included in the consignment without his knowledge, and who refuses to pay the $70 duty for the hair, as demanded by the Government officials.

Articles of antiquity must be 100 years old to enter this country free of duty. Dickens was born in 1812, more than 100 years ago, and it has been urged that for this reason the hair should be admitted duty free, even though the lock was cut in later life.

WM. HILL SENTENCED TO COUNTY JAIL FOR MONTH

Was Charged With Stealing Overcoat From Howard McGowan

BROTHER GOES FREE

Wm. Hill, of Dummer, was sentenced to one month in jail with hard labor, on his plea of guilty to the charge of stealing a fur coat valued at $17, the property of one Howard McGowan, by Magistrate Dumble this morning.

Davis Hill, a brother of prisoner, was acquitted on the charge of receiving the stolen overcoat.

G. N. Gordon acted for the prisoners and V. J. McElderry conducted the prosecution in the absence of Crown Attorney Wood, who is under medical care

Howard McGowan, owner of the coat, identified the coat as the one stolen from him in the Munro House on November 22nd.

Detective Newhall gave evidence to the effect that accompanied by Constables Meagher and Cochrane, he found the coat on searching Hill's home. The parents of the prisoner, Wm. Hill, caused considerable excitement by refusing to allow them to search the house. However, on searching the house the coat was found and brought to the Police Station, where it was identified by the owner. During the melee at the home, Mrs. Hill hit County Constable Cochrane twice in the ribs. In the Police Station the prisoner said that they had given him the coat to take home.

Couldn't Remember.

Wm. Zinston said that he knew the Hill boys and that William had been boarding with him for some time. He had placed the coat in question in the house on the request of Wm. Hill. He admitted being in the Munro House on the 22nd of November with Davis Hill. He couldn't remember seeing Wm. Hill there.

"You don't seem to be a very candid witness," remarked his Worship. Witness couldn't remember anything that took place in the Police Station when he was questioned by the Chief and the detective.

"The Third Degree"

"That must have been the third degree," remarked Mr. Gordon. "No it wasn't" retorted the Chief.

"It's getting more like Russia every day," responded Mr. Gordon.

MAGISTRATE TELLS SWEENY WHAT HE THINKS OF HIM

Then He Sends Man Who Failed to Provide for His Family to Central Prison

"Well, you're a case, you selfish mean, hard, man with no sense of shame or decency; you won't help your family and hinder them from helping themselves." The above remarks were handed out this morning by Magistrate Dumble at the conclusion of the case of John Sweeny, charged with non-support He pleaded not guilty, but on the evidence taken, was sentenced to six months in Central Prison.

Mr. George Cochrane, agent for the Children's Aid Society, gave evidence to the effect that the prisoner would not support his wife and family, although he was able to do so. His wife was an industrious woman, and on her fell the entire support of the family. Their conditions at present were very poor. Complaints had been received about the prisoner for the past six or seven yeras. He is also a heavy drinker.

Chief Thompson: "Have you frequently had complaints about him staying in bed till noon when there was nothing to eat in the house?"

"I have."

Magistrate Dumble: "What about the son?"

"Oh, he is the same, both seem to have the same trouble."

Patrick Kane said that the attention of the T. A. S. had been called to the assistance of the man and his family.

"What complaints?" enquired the Magistrate.

"Provisions."

"What amount," asked the Magistrate.

"About $25 since July."

Come to Wrong Place

George Dugan, a stranger pleaded guilty to the charge of being drunk and disorderly and was fined $5.75 at Police Court this morning.

ATTENDANCE AT WINTER FAIR TO DATE IS 25000

Yesterdays Crowds Numbered Nearly 16000—The Big Grand Championship Winner

GUELPH, Dec. 11.—With two days of the thirtieth annual Provincial Winter Fair passed into history the little city of Guelph has abundantly demonstrated her claim to the proud title, "The Smithfield of Canada." For the two days the total attendance approximates 25,000. No fewer than 15,327 people passed through the turnstiles yesterday, two thousand more than on the corresponding day of 1912.

The string of thoroughbreds was an eye-opener to many a blase Fair-goer, while the sight yesterday afternoon of a score of towering draught horses in magnificent harness and dexterously handled was a spectacle probably unequalled in a Canadian show ring. This show has brought out the finest exhibit of young Canadian-bred horses that ever faced judges in Canada, in fact the home bred this year, for the first time eclipse the showing of imported animals.

The annual public meeting in connection with the Provincial Winter Fair was held last night in the armories, when several distinguished speakers, including Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary; J. Lockie Wilson, superintendent of fall fairs; Hon. J. S. Duff; John Bright, Dominion live stock commissioner; Dr. J. Rutherford, ex-Dominion live stock commissioner; H. C. Scholfield, M.P.P.; Mayor Carter, Guelph; Maj. Wm. Smith, M.P., vice-president of the Winter Fair Board; Dr. G. C. Creelman, president of the Ontario Agricultural College, and Hon. Duncan Marshall, Minister of Agriculture, Alberta.

The judging of the sheep was finished in the afternoon and the championship prizes awarded.

The grand championship was won by James Bowman of Guelph, who exhibited a Shropshire and Suffolk wether.

SOME IMPROVEMENTS, STEPS TOWARD SAFETY, UNIFORMS FOR CONSTABLES ARE RECOMMENDED

MEXICAN "PATRIOT" STABS AND ROBS GIRL HE LURED TO EL PASO

MISS IRENE BOURDAULE
MISS GERTRUDE BOURDAULE

A request was made at the Mexican Consulate in New York for the arrest of Ricardo Vianna, who represented himself while in that city as an officer of the army of the constitutionalists in Mexico. He is alleged to have attacked and stabbed Miss Irene Bourdaule, of New York, in Juarez. Miss Bourdaule's sister, Miss Gertrude Bourdaule, received the following telegram from her sister in El Paso yesterday:—

"Vianna got all my money and knifed me. What shall I do?"

Grand Jury Make Their Presentment to Judge Huycke—His Honor Extends Christmas Greetings.

The Grand Jury for the December sittings of the County Court, made their presentment to Judge Huycke, this monring and reported 11 male prisoners in the jail and no female prisoners. This number of prisoners was exceptionally low when compared with other years.

Conditions at the hospitals and public institutions were reported as very satisfactory and recommendation was made that better provisions be made at the House of Providence and Protestant Home, in the interests of the inmates, in case of fire. Some repairing was also recommended for the Court House. Also that the County Council take up the question of providing uniforms for the Court constables.

A Matter of Congratulation

His Honor thanked the jury for the evidently very great care that had been taken during their duties. The absence of crime was a matter of congratulation. The mere fact however, of their being no cases before the Court did not necessarily show the absence of crime as a great many prisoners were tried by the City and County Magistrates. Still he had noticed in the last six months so far as important crimes were concerned, there had been a great scarcity, for which we should be profoundly thankful.

His Honor concurred in the statement made regarding the institutions as he had been able to observe himself. It was a pleasure as well as a duty to see that God's poor are cared for.

It was a matter for congratulation that there were no female prisoners in the jail. It was bad enough to have male prisoners in a house of correction, but it was doubly bad and sad to have women there. He hoped it would be a long time before there were women in the jail.

The matter of fire protection, His Honor said, was a timely and proper suggestion. We had seen and read of many sad fatalities of cases of this kind, where the unfortunate people had been unable to get out. He believed that it was only necessary to point out this matter to the proper authorities and a remedy would be made.

Constables in Uniform

As to the question of uniforms for the court constables, His Honor felt that it was strange that in this growing and prosperous city, the step had not ben taken. A number of the visiting judges had mentioned it. It would add to the decorum and dignity of the court.

In dismissing the jury, His Honor extended Christmas greetings to one and all and their families.

WESTERN FARMERS COMING TO THE CITY DECEMBER 20

Visitors Will Dine at the Oriental Hotel and Give Addresses

May Enter Into an Arrangement With Farmers of Ontario

Arrangements have been completed for the visit in Peterborough on Saturday afternoon, December 20, of a deputation of leading farmers from Western Canada. On Tuesday next representatives of the three great farmers' organizations in western Canada and of the Dominion Grange will wait on the Dominion Government in Ottawa and ask for certain legislation on behalf of the farmers. The members of this deputation will later attend some meetings in Toronto, following which several of their leaders will come to Peterboro to address our local farmers on Saturday, Dec. 20.

Banquet at Oriental

Arrangements have been made by the local committee to give a banquet in honor of the visitors in the Oriental hotel at 1 o'clock following which those present will be addressed by the speakers from the west. As these western farmers are the men who are the leaders of the 32,000 organised farmers in western Canada and who are behind the great Grain Growers' Grain Co., which last year did over $60,000,000 worth of business, it is felt that our local farmers are fortunate in having a chance to hear them.

The Committee

The local committee of management consists of Warden J. H. Garbutt, Chairman; S. Matchett, Stewart Hall; J. O. Bell, Springville; G. W. Mann, Bridgenorth; H. C. Garbutt, Lakefield; A. McGregor and C. Moore, Central Smith; Reeve W. A. Anderson, Keene; Walter Garbutt, T. D. Young and G. M. Hunter of Peterboro; and H. B. Cowan, Peterboro, Secretary. It is rumored that the farmers from the west who now control hundreds of the grain elevators in the prairie provinces and the flour mills, would like to enter into an arrangement with the farmers of Ontario by means of which the Western farmers could forward ship loads of mill feed to lake points in Ontario for distribution among Ontario farmers and by taking in return cheese, butter, eggs, apples and other products of Ontario farms for the farmers of the west.

REVENUE FROM THE BAR RECEIPTS

The revenue from the bar receipts for the Province of Ontario for the last fiscal year will be approximately $325,000, as against $286,000 for the previous year. The total revenue from the liquor licenses last year was $805,151, and it is expected that the total revenue this year will be approximately a million dollars.

CRUISER "TIGER" WILL HAVE SPEED.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—A London cable says: Higher horsepower than that developed by any other vessel in the world will be one of the features of the new battle cruiser Tiger, which will be launched at Clydebank Monday. It is officially stated that the engines will develop 100,000 shaft horse power, which will mean a speed of at least 31 knots.

The merchants and business men have patronized its columns liberally, and their announcements will not be the least interesting feature of the number. Extra copies can be obtained at the office, ready wrapped for mailing purposes.

ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE

Gold Mining Magnate Shot in Neck and Thigh

Canadian Press Despatch.

Johannesburg, Dec. 11.—An attempt was made to-day to assassinate Sir Lione Phillips, a leading gold mining magnate of South Africa, who was associated with Cecil Rhodes and Alfred Beit and one of these sentenced to death by the Boer Government, at the time of the Jameson raid seventeen years ago.

He received two bullet wounds, one in the neck and one in the thigh, but are not necessarily dangerous.

His assailant was later discovered to be a Dutch merchant named Nissum, who it is believed, was actuated by revenge over the loss of a law suit against the mine owners.

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, DEC. 11, 1913.

ENGLAND'S OFFER TO GERMANY.

THE UNITED STATES House has passed a resolution requesting President Wilson to cooperate with Mr. Winston Churchill in his endeavor to secure an international naval holiday for at least one year. If other countries would do likewise some restraining influence might be brought to bear upon Germany in her mad haste to have a big navy at any cost. It is quite clear that Germany is endeavoring to beat Great Britain in the naval business, whether her object be the invasion of the British isles or the supremacy of the seas, it is evident it is not one of peace and good will towards Great Britain and it is therefore an act of persistent aggression. Germany, of course, has a right to be aggressive in this respect. The Spaniards had a right to build their Armada and they built it with a special object of aggression, to annex the British Isles, The result of that naval folly is one of the great lessons of history which Germany ought to pause and observe to-day.

For Germany to say to Britain:—"You have a navy, why should we not have one?" is to display a spirit of envy that is only excusable in a silly boy. The British navy was not founded or built out of any spirit of jealousy, or desire for Empire. It has grown naturally out of geographical circumstances. It was instituted as a bulwark of defence. Great Britain being washed on all sides by the sea, its inhabitants were essentially a sea-going people. Spain was once the mistress of the seas and it was chiefly through the aggression of the Spaniard that Britain came to build a navy at all. Prior to Elisabeth, England was concerned for the most part with internal affairs and had no thought of colonies or Empire. Empire was thrust upon Great Britain by a directing and insistent Providence. With this Empire grew the navy. It was in no spirit of boast or overweening ambition that Britain has built her battleships, necessity has always been the guiding motive, "what we have we hold." That saying originated in the hearts of Englishmen when they only had the British Isles to hold. It has always been with a certain reluctance that Britain has added to her armaments, but when security called for expenditure of money or lives of men the British race has never been lacking in courage and initiative. This is the spirit of the offer of the British Government to Germany to-day. There is no envy on their part they can look across the North Sea and offer the hand of friendship to the German people and say:—"There is no cause for fight—why put your fists up? let us stop this sparring at one another—for a little while at any rate." It would be much more straightforward, and Great Britain would think more of the German, if he would come right out and fight. A man does not feel very comfortable or safe in a house if he knows that his next door neighbor is undermining his cellar in order to blow him up, no matter how much he may smile when he meets him on the street. A man may smile and smile and be a villain—at least it may be so in Europe.

CANADA AND THE HINDUS.

RECENTLY, Chief Justice Hunter gave a decision condemning as illegal, all the Federal Orders-in-Council which have, up to the present time, kept the Hindus out of British Columbia. Last Monday, the Borden Cabinet passed an Order-in-Council excluding Hindus, Japanese and Chinese immigrants until March 31st, and, in the interval, will deal legislatively with the question, "Does Canada Want the Hindu?"

Immigration is one of the most vital questions in Canadian social and political life, for Canada is not peopling its millions of acres of land with English stock, but is making a British nation by a fusion or confederation of many lands. From far-off Lithunaina, where there is only a modicum of liberty, from rugged, beautiful Norway, from the provinces of Austria-Hungary, from sunny Italy and classic Greece, as well as from the British Isles and United States, comes every year to Canada an army four-hundred thousand strong, dispersing itself over mountain, coulee, town and city as a wave rolling on level sands. Men of a hundred tongues imbued with political and social ideals as different as mediaeval from modern times, are finding domicilcs in Canada. With these people and their ideals Canadians of to-day are making the Canada of 1950 and the issue at stake is will the result be a strong vigorous nation, able to grapple successfully with the great problems that will arise in the swiftly moving years? Will the dark, backward peoples of southern Europe fuse favorably with the fair, vigorous men of Norway and Britain for example? Or, will Canadian national life be degraded by importing the ethical, religious and political ideas of Russian, Slavonian and Italian? Everything that makes a people great save wealth is sacrificed in the excuse that Canada needs Italians to build her railways, if her national ideals are lowered by Canadianizing the class of people coming from Italy. If Canada needs Italians to build her railways, Chinamen to do her washing, Greeks to make her candy and keep her soup kitchens, Jews to manage her junk and pawn shops, and Canadian national life is uninjured thereby, why object to the Hindu? True, we have said we would rather the Chinaman and Jap went some place else by placing a large head tax on them, but still they come and still British Columbia objects.

The Hindu is originally of the same stock as Europeans, Great Aryan migrations swept over Europe at the dawn of history, conquered the rough coarse native and settled on the soil Conquerors of the same stock poured through the western passes of India and subdued the numerous population living in the fruitful valley of the Ganges. They became in time the two upper castes of India while the third caste was a mixture of conqueror and native and the pure aborigines became the fourth and lowest.

Delhi, one of the most beautiful cities in the world, became the capital and seat of long lines of illustrious kings. Cradled by the sacred Ganges, the great Vedic literature reached sublime poetic heights when Europe was the habitation of cave-men and hunters of the wild horse. Brahmanism with its offshoot Buddhism, one of the greatest religions in the world, was evolved by Hindu phrophets and priests. Art, distinctive of the Indian imaginative mind, developed to high attainment in vast temples and altars marvellous for their proportions, grotesque sculptoring and wealth of detail. A fertile soil and the prolific rice plant maintained a great population of labourers and wealthy land-owners, who grew continually richer until the wealth of the Indian became a proverb.

Such was the history back of the Hindu nations for the mastery of which England and France fought fiercely in the Eighteenth century. England having gained the upper hand, set about organizing and administering the political affairs of the Hindu nations. She administered the great Hindu law only correcting it in its most barbarous details; she built railways, developed mines, found markets for the products of Indian soil. She organized trade, set up schools, trained an Indian army larger than that of all the other British dominions combined. For many years the sons of Indian princes and wealthy Hindus have received the classic and distinctive education that Oxford and Cambridge give. Now India, like China, is awakening, and the Hindu, a British subject, possessed with the desire to imbibe western ideas or to seek his fortune in less thickly populated lands, desires to come to Canada. Shall we admit him?

Clearly, Canada cannot bar him as a foreigner or on the ground of colour. Canadians, like Americans, are an over-practical people and will emphasize the one valid reason they can advance—that of expediency. The lower classes of India, being very numerous and fed and clothed very cheaply, are accustomed to a wage out of all proportion to that of Canada and if freely admitted would complicate labour problems to a degree that only British Columbia realizes. That Mr. Borden will deal wisely and diplomatically, with a very great and delicate question, we have every confidence the forthcoming session of Parliament will amply prove.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

ARTHUR HAWKES calls himself "a dove of peace"—"very like a whale."

THERE IS A MAN at Niagara who has lost his memory. What a blissful state! especially if he is in debt.

THE KINGSTON convicts are in the limelight just now. The trouble is not that they wont eat, but that they are deprived of tobacco and newspapers. Life will soon not be worth living in jail just now.

MR. LEE said last night that Peterborough would soon have a "foreign-speaking problem" to deal with. That will be the hardest of all problems to understand. We must insist upon every problem speaking English.

THE HAMILTON SPECTATOR says:—"The situation in South Lanark is peculiar. The electorate is so overwhelmingly Conservative that it seems useless to try to elect a Liberal candidate." But the Liberals are equal to all occasions, they offered a "fusion" candidate to East Middlesex, and now they have got a confusion condidate for South Lanark.

"NO OTHER NATION feels a grudge against Italy because it produced Marconi. Italy is proud of Marconi the whole world is benefited by wireless telegraphy."—Says the Toronto Star.

But did Italy produce Marconi? Yes, with the assistance of an Irish woman. It is often said that all great men take after their mothers. Marconi must be at least seventy-five per cent. Irish, for his mother was from the Emerald Isle.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

A Tool of the Liberals.

Toronto News.

The object of Liberals in South Lanark is not particularly to elect Col. Balderson or Mr. Hawkes, but to use any weapon available to embarrass Conservatives. Probably the lesson of this contest will prevent serious division amongst Conservatives in South Lanark for another generation.

Heartburn.

Ottawa Journal.

VANCOUVER Hindoos declare that they will return to their own country "with flames in their hearts." Just as long as they return nobody here will worry if the Hindoos take along the worst case of heartburn on record.

What Next?

Ottawa Journal.

The record of the Liberal party during the past twenty-five years:

1—Commercial Union.
2—Unrestricted reciprocity.
3—Free trade as it is in England.
4—Tariff for revenue only.
5—Protection.
6—Restricted reciprocity.
7—Free food.

The last trade plank of the Liberal platform was sawn at Hamilton a fortnight ago, the others having become "dozy." The leader of the Opposition prefaced the Hamilton announcement with the sentence: "The policy I give you at this moment." Note the significance of the words "this moment." What next?

DECEIVED SAYS ACTUARY.

English Expert Explains Union Life Prospectus.

TORONTO, Dec. 11.—That he was duped and deceived by the pretensions of the Union Life Assurance Co. was the statement made yesterday in a letter from E. A. Rusher, former actuary for the Prudential Insurance Co., placed in evidence before the court yesterday in the inquiry into the collapse of the Union Life. It was Mr. Rusher's eulogy of the company which is said to have sold most of its stock in Great Britain.

Not only does Mr. Rusher state that he was blinded to the facts of the financial condition and that his name and connection with the Prudential were improperly used, but he declares that Mr. Evans was conscious of his illegitimate practice. The only prospectus which he (Rusher) received was one carefully expurgated and vastly different from that which appeared. His hasty order to stop the issue when he learned of its contents was ignored till the effect was manifest. In disgust at the position in which he was placed, he resigned at once from the Prudential.

In court yesterday, Mr. Evans said in reply to Mr. Rusher's statement that Mr. Rusher must have known that his report was going to be used that way.

Mr. D. A. Burns, vice-president and treasurer of the Canada Provident Corporation, was unable to answer most of the interrogations definitely.

"Would you be fairly characterized as a 'Dummy Director?' " asked Mr. Masters.

"I might be called that," answered Mr. Burns.

"Just a case of doing whatever Mr. Evans requested," put in the official referee.

The inquiry will be resumed to-day.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

"Wait, Moloch, wait. You and I are not done with each other yet! Wait! I shall come back, and when I do look to yourself! Two million francs, and every one of them mine!"

He laid his head on his hands. It ached dully. Perhaps it was the wine.

CHAPTER II.

THE BUTTERFLY MAN.

THE great minister gazed across the river, his hands under the tails of his frock, and the perturbation of his mind expressed by the frequent flapping of these somber woolen wings. To the little man who watched him, there was a faint resemblance to a fiddling cricket.

"Sometimes I am minded to trust the whole thing to luck, and bother no more about him."

"Monsieur, I have obeyed orders for seven years, since we first recognized the unfortunate affair. Nothing he has done in this period is missing from my notebook; and up to the present time he has done—nothing. But just a little more patience. This very moment, when you are inclined to drop it, may be the one. One way or another, it is a matter of no real concern to me. There will always be plenty of work for me to do, in France, or elsewhere. But I am like an old soldier whose wound, twinging with rheumatism, announces the approach of damp weather. I have, then, monsieur, a kind of psychological rheumatism; prescience, bookmen call it. Presently we shall have damp weather."

"You speak with singular conviction."

"In my time I have made very few mistakes. You will recollect that. Twenty years have I served France. I was wrong to say that this affair does not concern me. I'm interested to see the end."

"But will there be an end?" impatiently. "If I were certain of that! But seven years, and still no sign."

"Monsieur, he is to be feared; this inactivity, to my mind, proves it. He is waiting; the moment is not ripe. There are many sentimental fools in this world. One has only to step into the street and shout, 'Down with!' or 'Long live!' to bring these fools clattering about."

"That is true enough," flapping the tails of his coat again.

"This fellow was born across the Rhine. He has served in the navy; he is a German, therefore we cannot touch him unless he commits some overt act. He waits; there is where the danger, the real danger, lies. He waits; and it is his German blood which gives him this patience. A Frenchman would have exploded long since."

"You have searched his luggage and his rooms times without number."

"And found nothing; nothing that I might use effectively. But there is this saving grace; he on his side knows nothing."

"I would I were sure of that also. Ah, well; I leave the affair in your hands, and they are capable ones. When the time comes act, act upon your own initiative. In this matter we shall give no accounting to Germany."

"No, because what I do must be done secretly. It will not matter that Germany also knows and waits. But this is true; if we do not circumvent him she will make use of whatever he does."

"It has its whimsical side. Here is a man who may some day blow up France, and yet we can put no hand on him till he throws the bomb."

"But there is always time to stop the flight of the bomb. That shall be my concern—that is, if monsieur is not becoming discouraged and desires me to occupy myself with other things. I repeat: I have rheumatism, I apprehend the damp. He will go to America."

"Ah! It would be a very good plan if he remained there."

The little man did not reply.

"But you say in your reports that you have seen him going about with some of the Orleanists. What is your inference there?"

"I have not yet formed one. It is a bit of a riddle there, for the crow and the eagle do not fly together."

"Well, follow him to America."

"Thanks. The pay is good and the work is congenial." The tone of the little man was softly given to irony.

Gray haired, rosy cheeked, a face smooth as a boy's, twinkling eyes behind spectacles, he was one of the most astute, learned, and patient of the French secret police. And he did not care the flip of his strong brown fingers for the methods of Vidocq or Lecoq. His only disguise was that not one of the criminal police of the world knew him or had ever heard of him; and save his chief and three ministers of war—for French cabinets are given to change—his own immediate friends knew him as a butterfly hunter, a searcher for beetles and scarabs, who, indeed, was one of the first authorities in France on the subjects: Anatole Ferraud, who went about, hither and thither, with a little red button in his buttonhole and a tongue facile in a dozen languages.

"Very well, monsieur. I trust that in the near future I may bring you good news."

"He will become nothing or the most desperate man in Europe."

"Admitted."

"He is a scholar too."

"All the more interesting."

"As a student in Munich he has fought his three duels. He has been a war correspondent under fire. He is a great fencer, a fine shot, a daring rider."

"And penniless. What a country they have over there beyond the Rhine! He would never have troubled his head about it had they not harried him. To stir up France, to wound her if possible! He will be a man of great courage and resource," said the secret agent, drawing the palms of his hands together.

"In the end, then, Germany will offer him money?"

"That is the possible outlook."

"But, suppose he went to work on his own responsibility?"

"In that case one would be justified in locking him up as a madman. Do you know anything about Alpine butterflies?"

"Very little," confessed the minister.

"There is often great danger in getting at them; but the pleasure is commensurate."

"Are there not rare butterflies in the Amazonian swamps?" cynically.

"Ah, but this man has good blood in him, and if he flies at all he will fly high. Think of this man fifty years ago; what a possibility he would have been! But it is out of fashion today. Well, monsieur, I must be off. There is an old manuscript at the Bibliotheque I wish to inspect."

"Concerning this matter?"

"Butterflies," softly; "or, I should say, chrysalides."

The subtle inference passed by the minister. There were many other things to-ing and fro-ing in the busy corridors of his brain. "I shall hear from you frequently?"

"As often as the situation requires. By the way, I have an idea. When I cable you the word butterfly prepare yourself accordingly. It will mean that the bomb is ready."

"Good luck attend you, my savant," said the minister, with a friendliness which was deep and genuine. He had known M. Ferraud in other days. "And, above all, take care of yourself."

"Trust me, count." And the secret agent departed to appear again in these chambers only when his work was done.

"A strange man," mused the minister when he was alone. "A still stranger business for a genuine scholar. Is he really poor? Does he do this work to afford him ease and time for his studies, or, better still, does he hide a great and singular patriotism under butterfly wings? Patriotism? More and more it becomes self interest. It is only when a foreign mob starts to tear down your house that you become a patriot."

Now the subject of these desultory musings went directly to the Bibliotheque Nationale. The study he pursued was of deep interest to him. It concerned a butterfly of vast proportions and kaleidoscopic in color long ago pinned away and labeled among others of lesser brilliancy. It had cast a fine shadow in its brief flight. But the species was now extinct. At least so the historian of this particular butterfly declared. Hybrid? Such a contingency was always possible.

"Suppose it does exist, as I and a few others very well know it does. What a fine joke it would be to see it fly into Paris! But no. Idle dream! Still I shall wait and watch. And now suppose we pay a visit to Berlin and use blunt facts in place of diplomacy? It will surprise them."

Each German chancellor has become in turn the repository of such political secrets as fell under the eyes of his predecessor, and the chancellor who walked up and down before M. Ferraud possessed several which did not rest heavily upon his soul simply because he was incredulous or affected that he was.

"The thing is preposterous."

"As your excellency has already declared."

"What has it to do with France?"

"Much or little. It depends upon this side of the Rhine."

"What imagination! But for your credentials, M. Ferraud, I should not listen to you one moment."

"I have seen some documents."

"Forgeries!" contemptuously.

"Not in the least," suavely. "They are in every part genuine. They are his own."

The chancellor paused, frowning. "Well, even then?"

M. Ferraud shrugged.

"This fellow, who was forced to resign from the navy because of his tricks at cards, why I doubt if he could stir up a brawl in a tavern. Really, if there was a word of truth in the affair, we should have acted before this. It is all idle newspaper talk that Germany wishes war; far from it. Still, we lose no point to fortify ourselves against the possibility of it. Some one has been telling you old wives' tales."

"Ten thousand marks," almost inaudibly.

"What was that you said?" cried the chancellor, whirling round abruptly, for the words startled him.

"Pardon me! I was thinking out loud about a sum of money."

"Ah!" And yet the chancellor realized that the other was telling him as plainly as he dared that the German government had offered such a sum to forward the very intrigue which he was so emphatically denying. "Why not turn the matter over to your own ambassador here?"

The secret agent laughed. "Publicity is what neither your government nor mine desires. Thank you."

"I am sorry not to be of some service to you."

"I can readily believe that, your excellency," not to be outdone in the matter of duplicity. "I thank you for your time."

"I hadn't the least idea that you were in the service; butterflies and diplomacy!" with a hearty laugh.

"It is only temporary."

"Your 'Alpine Butterflies' compares favorably with 'The Life of the Bee.'"

"That is a very great compliment!"

And with this the interview, extraordinary in all ways, came to an end. Neither man had fooled the other, neither had made any mistake in his logical deductions, and, in a way, both were satisfied. The chancellor resumed his more definite labors, and the secret agent hurried away to the nearest telegraph office.

"So I am to stand on these two feet?" M. Ferraud ruminated, as he took the seat by the window in the second class carriage for Munich. "All the finer the sport. Ten thousand marks! He forgot himself for a moment. And I might have gone further and said that 90,000 marks would be added to these 10,000 if the bribe was accepted and the promise fulfilled."

Ah, it would be beautiful to untangle this snarl all alone. It would be the finest chase that had ever fallen to his lot. No grain of sand, however small, should escape him. There were fools in Berlin as well as in Paris, and he knew what he knew. "Never a move shall he make that I shan't make the same, and in one thing I shall move first. Two million francs! Handsome! It is I who must find this treasure, this fulcrum to the lever which is going to upheave France. There will be no difficulty then in pricking the pretty bubble. In the meantime we shall proceed to Munich and carefully inquire into the affairs of the grand opera singer, Hildegarde von Mitter."

He extracted a wallet from an inner pocket and opened it across his knees. It was full of butterflies.

CHAPTER III.

A PLASTER STATUETTE.

FITZGERALD'S view from his club window afforded the same impersonal outlook as from a window in a car. It was the two living currents, moving in opposite directions, each making toward a similar goal, only in a million different ways, that absorbed him. He had seen all manner of crowds, armies pursuing and retreating, vast concords in public squares, at coronations, at catastrophes, at play, and he never lost interest in watching them; they were the great expressions of humanity. This is perhaps the reason why his articles were always so rich in color. No two crowds were ever alike to him, consequently he never was at loss for a fresh description.

Today the Italian vender of plaster statuettes caught his eye. For an hour now the poor wretch hadn't even drawn the attention of one of the thousands passing. Fitzgerald felt sorry for him, and once the desire came to go over and buy out the Neapolitan; but he was too comfortable where he was and, beyond that, he was expecting a friend.

Fitzgerald was thirty, with a clean shaven, lean and eager face, russet in tone, well offset by the fine blue eyes which had the faculty of seeing little and big things at the same time. He was a free lance in all the abused word implies, and he lived as he pleased, spending his earnings freely and often carelessly, knowing that the little his father had left him would keep a moderately hungry wolf from the door. He had been born to a golden spoon, but the food from the pewter one he now used tasted just as good.

"So here you are! I've been in the billiard room and the card room and the barroom."

"Talking of barrooms!" Fitzgerald reached for the button. "Sit down, Hewitt, old boy. Glad to see you. Now I'll tell you right off the bat, nothing will persuade me. For years I've been jumping to the four points of the compass at the beck of your old magazine and syndicate. I'm going to settle down and write a novel."

"Piffle!" growled the editor, dropping his lanky form into a chair.

"Piffle it may be, but I'm going to have a whack at it. If I ever do another article it will be as a millionaire's private secretary. I should like to study his methods for saving his money. What is it this time?"

"A dash to the north pole."

"Never again north of Berlin or south of Assuan for mine. No."

"Come, Fitz; a great chance."

"When you sent me to Manila I explored hell for you, but I've cooled off considerably since then. No ice for mine, except in silver buckets."

"You've made a pretty good thing out of us—something like five thousand a year and your expenses—and with the credentials we've always given you you have been able to see the world as few men see it."

"That's just the trouble. You've spoiled me."

"If it's a question of more money"—

"Perish the thought!" cried Fitzgerald, clasping his knees and rocking gently. "You know as well as I do, Hewitt, that it's the game and not the cash. I've found a new love, my boy."

"Double harness?" with real anxiety. Hewitt bit his scrubby mustache. When a special correspondent married that was the end of him.

"There you go again!" warned the recalcitrant. "If you don't stop eating that mustache you'll have stomach trouble that no Scotch whisky will ever cure. The whole thing is in a nutshell," a sly humor creeping into his eyes. "I am tired of writing ephemeral things. I want to write something that will last."

"Write your epitaph, Jack," drawled a deep voice from the reading table. "That's the only sure way, and even that is no good if your marble is spongy."

"Oh, Cathewe, this is not your funeral," retorted the editor.

"Perhaps not. All the same, I'll be chief mourner if Jack takes up novel writing."

"You've been up north, Arthur," said Fitzgerald. "What's your advice?"

"Don't do it. You've often wondered how and where I lost these two digits. Up there."

Arthur Cathewe was a tall, loose limbed man, forty-two or three, rather handsome, and a bit shy with most folk. Rarely any one saw him outside the club. He had few intimates, but to these he was all that friendship means—kindly, tender, loyal, generous, self effacing. And Fitzgerald loved him best of all men. It did not matter that there were periods when they became separated for months at a time. They would some day turn up together in the same place. "Why, hello, Arthur!" "Glad to see you, Jack!" and that was all that was necessary. All the enthusiasm was down deep below. Cathewe was always in funds; Fitzgerald sometimes; but there was never any lending or borrowing between them. This will do much toward keeping friendship green. The elder man was a great hunter; he had been everywhere, north and south, east and west. He never fooled away his time at pigeons and traps; big game, where the betting was even, where the animal had almost the same chance as the man. He could be tolerably humorous upon occasions. The solemn cast to his comely face predestined him for this talent.

"Well, Fitz, what are you going to do?"

"Hewitt, give me a chance. I've been home but a week. I'm not going to dash to the pole without having a ripping good time here first. Will a month do?"

"Oh, the expedition doesn't leave for two months yet. But we must sign the contract a month beforehand."

"Today is the first of June; I promise to telegraph you yes or no this day month. You have had me over in Europe eighteen months. I'm tired of trains, and boats, and mules. I'm going fishing."

"Ah, bass!" murmured Cathewe from behind his journal.

"By the way, Hewitt," said Fitzgerald, "have you ever heard of a chap called Karl Breitmann?"

"Yes," answered Hewitt. "Never met him personally, though."

"I have," joined in Cathewe quietly. "What do you know about him?"

"Met him in Paris last year. Met him once before in Macedonia. Dined with me in Paris. Amazing lot of adventures. Rather down on his luck, I should judge."

"Couple of scars on his left cheek and a bit of the scalp gone; German student sort, rather good looking, fine physique?"

"That's the man."

"I know him, but not very well." And Cathewe fumbled among the other newspapers.

A Case of Mingled Faculties

By EDWARD L. FORSYTHE

I am an artist—an American—and till recent years forced to make a living as best I could illustrating for magazines. When I reached middle life a legacy enabled me to go abroad with the view to try to make a painter of myself. I realized that I was beginning too late in life to hope for much success. One should learn to handle a brush when the muscles are young and flexible.

I studied awhile in Paris, but my fears were realized. In my conceptions I felt every confidence, but when I attempted to put them on canvas I failed. I determined to return home by way of Italy, where I proposed to regale myself among the works of art I would find there. Having spent some time in Florence and Rome, I went on down to Naples, where I intended to take passage for America.

I found here in the most beautiful bay in the world a temptation to make one more trial with my brush. While I was at work I fell ill. My room was with a widow in a house that overlooked the bay. During my sickness I would get out of bed and, seating myself in an easy chair, wrapped in rugs, sit gazing out through an open window upon the scene before me.

What is especially fixed in my mind is the varying views which seemed to be passing before me like a panorama. At one time the water in the bay would be a deep, then a light green. Again it would be a deep or a pale blue. There were times when there were streaks of silver in it. At one time the island of Ischia, to the northward, was bathed in purple; then Capri, directly before under the influence of the setting sun, would be tinged with scarlet hues.

My landlady had a son, Emilio, about fourteen years old, in whom I was interested, because he showed a considerable inherent artistic taste. His conceptions were of little or no value, but his ability to execute them was considerable.

"Ah, my boy," I said to him, "if I could return to your age and devote myself to art I could put the beautiful things I am capable of seeing on canvas for the admiration of the world. These pictures the bay affords are commonplace to you. If they were to you what they are to me you would be esteemed a great painter."

While he made no reply to this, I noticed that it made a great impression upon him. I said it before I was taken ill, and afterward, when I was suffering, he came in often to see me, not to talk, but merely to be with me. I remember especially his doing this when I sat in my easy chair before the window absorbing the different views the bay afforded me.

As soon as I recovered I sailed for America and did not revisit Italy for eight years. On my return I found in the National gallery in Naples several paintings of the bay of Naples that brought me a strange sensation. They represented the bay under different conditions that had impressed me during my illness. As no human face is exactly reproduced in another, so none of these views could be exactly duplicated on different days. What especially impressed me was that there were five of these views, each one of which I had seen in nature itself. I looked for the name of the artist on the painting, but it was not there.

Accosting one of the gallery officials, I led him to the pictures and asked about the artist.

"Those pictures," he said, "were painted by a mere boy. It was supposed that he would become one of the famous artists of the world, but he produced only these works, which were all executed about the same time."

"Why is there no name on them?"

"Because the boy who painted them would not consent to put his name there."

"Why not?"

"I have understood that he had some childish whim that he was not entitled to any credit for their merit."

"Do you know his name?"

"Yes. It is Emilio Murelli."

"Emilio Murelli?"

"Yes, signor. Why are you so surprised?"

"Eight years ago I knew an Emilio Murelli," I replied when I had collected my faculties, "a boy who had considerable ability to execute, but not the true artistic individuality. He was a worker, not a dreamer. I cannot understand how he could have produced these pictures."

The official shrugged his shoulders, as the Italians do when they are stumped, and left me.

I tried to find Emilio, who was now a man, and failed. More years have passed since then, during which I have taken a deep interest in those subtle conditions which on rare occasions indicate a mingling of two different souls. I have put upon the incident I have related an interpretation of my own, though I confess it is a mere suggestion. I consider it possible that, while my personality was weak and pliable through illness, there was something in Emilio that enabled him to draw from me my appreciation of the beautiful scenes I saw in the bay of Naples, and he was competent in himself to transfer them to the canvas. I believe the day will come when certain laws upon which such intermingling depends will be known, just as the electric laws guiding wireless telegraphy are known.

MONEY IN COLOMBIA.

A Dollar of That Country Is Worth Just a Cent of Our Currency.

Money in Colombia is a rather unstable institution, and big figures do not always mean much. It may be just as well to mention here that when I paid $80 to ride the seventeen miles from Savanilla to Barranquilla I was not guilty of such reckless extravagance as may at first glance appear; also that when the agent at the latter place charged me $40 for riding back the same way and in the same car he merely suffered from an astonishing lapse of memory, forgetting for the moment that he needed the money.

The fact is that the Colombian dollar, or peso, has depreciated until it is worth just exactly 1 cent in United States currency, and there being no room left for the centavo of old it has vanished utterly from the reckoning of man. There are no silver coins whatever, and after a little bargaining one is apt to accumulate an astonishing number of yellow bills—tens, twenties, fifties and hundreds. Then there steals insidiously over one the peculiar exaltation of the wealthy, and it causes not a single pang to pay $5 for a shine or to toss away $10 for a bottle of ginger pop.—William Hard Lawrence in Harper's Magazine.

Testing His Love.

"Pshaw," said the pretty brunette, "it's the easiest thing in the world to find out whether a man loves you!"

"What is your method?" asked the stately blond.

"Make him spend his last dollar on you, and if he seems to enjoy it you may be sure that he really cares for you."—Chicago Record-Herald.

When Reynolds Signed.

Reynolds hardly ever signed his work. But upon the completion of the portrait of Mrs. Siddons as "The Tragic Muse" he wrote his name large on the gold embroidery of her dress. He was unable, he said, "to resist the temptation of sending my name to posterity on the hem of your garment."

At Home.

"He was perfectly at home at the banquet."

"Why, he didn't have a word to say."

"Well, that's being perfectly at home for him."—Houston Post.

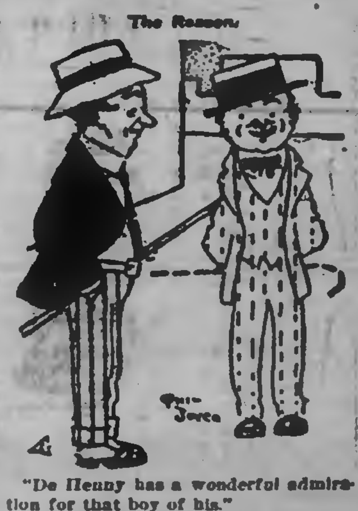
Two of a Trade.

Knicker—Why didn't the cook stay?

Bocker—She was a sociologist investigating mistresses and the mistress was a sociologist investigating cooks.—New York Sun.

If there is good in us it will bring out good in others.

The Reason.



"De Henny has a wonderful admiration for that boy of his."

"Yes; the youngster actually talks back to his mother."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Unreasonable.

A man entered a store and bought three cigars and lighted one.

"My, this is a rotten cigar!" he exclaimed.

"Say, man, what are you complaining about?" replied the dealer. "You have only three of those cigars and I have 1,000. Be reasonable."—Kansas City Star.

Vote Getting.

"How do you expect people to listen to your speeches if you don't make your ideas clear?"

"I don't want 'em to listen," replied Senator Sorghum. "I simply want to talk enough to get a good crowd together and then shake hands with everbody."—Washington Star.

Wanted Tone.

"And when they call up from the office, dear, and ask what's the matter with you, shall I say indigestion?"

"Indigestion! Nobody has indigestion now. Do you want to disgrace me? Tell 'em it's complicated ptomaine!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Vicious.

"My hand," said Polly, holding out that exquisite member, "is a good deal smaller than yours."

FEDERAL FORCES REPULSE REBEL ASSAULT ON TAMPICO

Oil City is Scene of a Battle, But Government Reports That After Several Onslaughts Defenders of the Place Have Been Victorious—New Bill Makes Gen. Huerta Full Autocrat.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 11.—Tampico was attacked at eleven yesterday morning by large bands of rebels supposedly under Pablo Gonzales, possibly with the co-operation of Candido Aguilar. The latest despatch received by the Government indicated that the rebels were repulsed in several assaults against the place.

The rebels advanced from Altamira, where they reported Tuesday. In view of the alarming reports reaching Vera Cruz regarding Tampico Tuesday the scout cruiser Chester left there shortly after noon at full steam, shortly folowed by the Tacoma. The British cruiser Suffolk also left for Tampico. Troops under Gen. Joaquin Maas, jr., stationed at Tuxpam, left Tuesday to reinforce the garrison at Tampico, anticipating an attack.

A fight took place yesterday at Coco, seventy kilometres north of Tampico on the line to San Luis Potosi.

Much alarm is caused here because of the fighting at Tampico owing to the large number of foreigners there, also to the belief that this may possibly be made a pretext for landing marines. Rebels are reported to be active northward, cutting the line and dynamiting military trains on the Peadrasnegras and Laredo lines. The casualties are not reported.

A bill has been introduced by Huerta asking Congress to grant him an extraordinary, practically dictatorial, recess. The measure, sent to committee, probably will be reported before the end of the week, and undoubtedly favorably, which will give Huerta power to authorise another series of interior bonds.

Rebels Coil Around Ojinaga.

PRESIDIO, Mex., Dec. 11.—Like a great snake the rebel line is gradually coiling itself around the little town of Ojinaga, which sits on a mesa overlooking the terrible Camargo desert, across which the refugees recently came from Chihuahua. The rebels who followed the Federals from Falomir are waiting in the mountain passes for the command of their leader, Sancho Villa, to begin the attack on the fatigued Federal garrison, which is trying to fortify itself in Ojinaga with nothing more than sundried bricks and small trees to build earthworks with. Villa has left Chihuahua for the new rebel front between Paso La Mula and Ojinaga, and will take personal charge of the final effort to crush the Huerta power in northern Mexico. Maclovio Herrera, the bravest man in the rebel army except Villa, is second in command, and Tomas Urbina and Trinidad Rodriguez are also on the ground.

POULTRY SHOW WILL BE HELD IN THE MARKET HALL

By all appearances the Poultry Show to be held in the Market Hall on January 6, 7, and 8, will break all former records. Requests are pouring in from all over the province for prize lists and already applications have been filled out by parties as far west as Strathroy, as far north as Bracebridge, as far east as Point Fortune, Que., and all the towns along the front from Napanee to Bowmanville. It is expected that 1500 birds will be on exhibition and to be in readiness for this large number the Committee have reported that they can all be accommodated because of the large amount of extra coops which have been built.

The general managerial reigns will once again be in the hands of Mr. G. Paxman and that gives the public the assurance that everything will be carried out in a proper and business-like way. The Association tried to obtain the armouries, but suitable arrangements could not be made, thus necessitating the use of the market hall.

At a recent meeting of the Directors of the Association it was decided that owing to the extensiveness and popularity of this annual show, ribbons would be used in place of cards.

OBITUARY

THE LATE MR. DEYELL

William Burton Deyell, the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Deyell, Lot 19, Concession 14, Otonabee, passed away last night at the early age of 30 years. Some three years ago the deceased met with an accident, falling out of a tree, in which he sustained internal injuries which eventually caused his death. He was a young man of excellent character and his demise will be learned with deep regret.

His parents and three sisters Mary Luella, and Annie all at home, are left to mourn his loss. The funeral will take place on Saturday afternoon from his late home to the Little Lake Cemetery. Service at the house at 2 o'clock by the Rev. C. E. Cragg.

PETERBORO MUST LOOK AFTER THE FOREIGNER

persecution, but that day was past, and now, when a man comes out to Canada and succeeds he writes home and invites his friends to come out and share his prosperity. Then the decrease in the cost of transportation has had much to do with this increase in European immigration.

Economic Effect

"What effect has this had upon our national life?" asked the speaker. He said it had an economic effect. For one thing, the importation of foreign labor had not so far put the English speaking laborer out of employment. The supply of English speaking workmen had not been sufficient for the demand. He said he had yet to see the case where the foreign speaking laborer had displaced English speaking workmen. If such had ever been the case it merely meant that the Britisher had been driven to a higher sphere and more skilled employment. There was a time when our digging, road and sewer making and all the rough work was done by none other than English speaking laborers, but they no longer engage in this work, for one reason, they do not care to work along side of "Dagoes."

This was not so much an economic but a racial displacement. The problem arising out of this state of things was that the standard of living was lowered by this introduction of foreign speaking labor. These foreigners send the best part of their wages home and they live under conditions which an Englishman would not live under." Mr. Lee gave illustrations from his own experience and observation on this point. He said that in an Eastern Canadian city he once visited a house in which there dwelt 156 laborers. In one room, 16 feet by 12 feet, there lived, eating, cooking and sleeping, thirteen men. The vermin were so thick on the walls that you could scarcely tell the original color of the wall paper.

In a western city he visited a house which had 19 double beds fixed up in a cock loft between the roof and the ceiling of a house.

Housing the Foreigner

"This is a very serious problem," said the speaker, and one that we must face. We must provide proper facilities for the housing of these people if we are going to permit them to come into this country. Should we exclude consumptive and unhealthy persons landing in Canada and then allow people to live under conditions that produce these diseases?"

The social effect of this immigration may be judged by the number of criminals that emanate from the foreign element. The speaker showed that they are 2 per cent. less than the English speaking criminal. But the tendency was for the children of these foreigners to swell the ranks of the criminal classes, and for this we Canadians were responsible by our treatment of the parents of these foreign children. We were by our actions toward the parents making criminals of these children. The children who get an English education begin to despise their parents as other people despise them, and from this they go from bad to worse and the streets finish their schooling in crime.

Mr. Lee also dealt with the question of the franchise which he said was too easy of attainment. He thought it was unjust that one of these illiterate men should be permitted to vote on vital issues, of which they knew nothing, that they should after only three years of residence in Canada have the same advantage at the poll as each man in that room. He said this was an injustice to the man himself, as well as to the English speaking voter. "The balance of power is in the hands of men who know nothing about the government of the country," said Mr. Lee. He thought that every foreigner should be a resident for at least five years before he should be allowed to vote, and that a knowledge of the English language should be the first step to nationalization. Intelligence depended entirely upon information.

We have got to see to it that these people have better conditions if they are to become assimilated and made into intelligent citizens. The time will come when you will have to deal with this foreign problem in this city of Peterborough. Insofar as you attend to this problem you will be building up the most glorious Dominion this world has ever known.

The speech was received with long and loud applause. A vote of thanks to the speaker was proposed by Dr. Harrison and one of the best meetings of the club was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem.

MURDERER IS IN THE TOILS

Slayer of Bank Manager Admits His Crime.

$1,500 RECOVERED

WINNIPEG, Dec. 11.—John Krafchenko, for whom a warrant is out in connection with the murder of H. M. Arnold, manager of the Bank of Montreal at Plum Coulee last week, was arrested yesteday morning in a house on College avenue, in the north end, and taken to the police station.

Krafchenko was captured without bloodshed. The police received a tip that he was within the place, and 40 of them surrounded the house early yesterday afternoon and effected the arrest without difficulty. Krafchenko was taken to the police station in an automobile. He made no resistance.

During his stay at the house on College street, Krafchenko passed as a student named Andrews. When arrested the murderer made no denial of his identity nor of his guilt, but exclaimed:

"It's all up, I guess. I'll come quietly. I didn't intend to shoot anyway."

On searching the apartments an automatic revolver was found lying on the bureau beside the bed, while under the pillow was another fully loaded revolver.

Arriving at the police station, the prisoner asked for a private interview with the chief of police, in which he made a long statement regarding the crime with which be is charged.

Krafchenko admitted to Chief Macpherson the holding up of the bank and informed the police that they would find $1,500 in bills under a fence at the rear of the house in which the arrest was made. This money the police have since recovered.

Of the money recovered, a considerable amount is bloodstained. In addition to that found under the fence behind the College street house, were further rolls in the southwest of the city and others in a northwest suburb.

GOES TO THE CHAIR

AUBURN, N.Y., Dec. 11.—Nelson Sharp of Monroe Co., N.Y., died in the electric chair yesterday for the murder of Patrolman Frank Ford of the Rochester police, May 18, 1912. Two contacts of 1,800 volts were administered. The murderer went unaided to his death.

Sharp was one of the most tractable men ever confined in condemned row and had long been reconciled to his fate.

Conference on Church Union.

TORONTO, Dec. 11.—A conference of the church union committee of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational bodies begins to-day at the Wesley Buildings. The conference will include ten Methodists, ten Presbyterians and five Congregationalists.

The object of the conference is to decide whether it will be necessary to re-open the consideration of the basis of union.

Rev. Dr. Chown, speaking for the west, says that "on every hand large enterprises for good are being held up and the work of the church partially paralyzed by reason of the uncertainty as to what the future may bring forth."

MAY REMAIN FOR THE WINTER

Mr. Frank Sandy Will Not Be Moved for Some Time Yet.

No doubt it will be gratifying to the Grand Trunk employees and to the citizens in general to learn that in all probability Mr. F. Sandy, the popular local G. T. R. agent, will not be moved till spring.

It became known some time that Mr. Sandy's transfer was under way but nothing definite could be ascertained. A Review reporter called on him this afternoon and while he had no definite word, his conversation led to the belief that he would be here for the winter.

BURNED TO DEATH

Worker In Chemicals Neglected to Change His Clothes.

DESERONTO, Dec. 11—A very sad fatality occurred here yesterday morning when Mr. Wilson Peterson died from the result of burns received Tuesday night. The Peterson family were moving from one house to another, and had lighted a fire in a small heater. Mr. Peterson was employed as sifter in the chlorate of potash building at the Olympic Powder plant, and on his return home neglected to change his clothing.

About seven o'clock he was sitting near the stove playing with the children, when the gas burst out of the stove in flames which soon found an easy prey in the chemical-saturated clothing of Mr. Peterson. Half crazed with the pain, the unfortunate man rushed from the house. A meeting was in progress in the adjacent Gospel Hall of the Plymouth Brethren, and the minister, seeing the occurrence through the window, at once took several pails of water from the baptistry, and poured them on the afflicted man and extinguished the flames. Mrs. Peterson and the baby were severely burned.

Young Man Confesses.

ALBION, Neb., Dec. 11.—Hugh M. Fins, 20 years of age, arrested two days ago on suspicion of being the man who robbed the bank at Primrose, Neb., last Thursday, confessed the crime yesterday, according to Sheriff Sutton of Greeley County.

His confession is said to have implicated Paul Carston, a farmer living six miles from Primrose, and on whose farm the officers found $2,700 of the $4,000 taken from the bank by Fins. The money was hidden in corn shucks. Carston was arrested.

U. S. Officials Seek Chinamen.

BOSTON, Dec. 11.—A search for nine Chinamen supposed to have been smuggled into the United States from Canada was made yesterday by the police of Boston, Lowell and all places between the two cities. The Boston police were notified early yesterday that two automobiles containing the Chinamen had raced through Lowell from the north at sixty miles an hour.

Seeks Social Legislation.

OTTAWA, Dec. 11.—Rev. T. Albert Moore and Rev. Dr. Shearer of Toronto were in Ottawa yesterday interviewing members of the Government with the object of making the penalties attached to social crime more severe. They also asked that racetrack gambling in every shape and form be ordered stopped. The Minister of Justice promised consideration.

Justice Moves Slowly.

WASHINGTON Dec. 11.—It may be three years before Supreme Court settles the Thaw case, court officials estimated yesterday. Unless Attorney Jerome asks and the court grants a motion to advance the questions certified by Judge Aldrich at Concord, the case cannot sooner be reached for hearing in its regular order on the congested court docket.

Even if the case is advanced there would be no final decision for about a year.

Row In Austrian Parliament.

VIENNA, Austria, Dec. 11.—Such a din was created by the Ruthenian deputies in the Austrian Imperial Parliament yesterday that the sitting was suspended by the Speaker. For over an hour the Ruthenians, as a protest against the alleged passive attitude of the Government in the matter of electoral reform, blew shrill whistles and bugles, rang electric bells and trumpeted with motor horns, at the same time wrenching the lids from their desks and beating the pieces furiously together.

CANADIANS DISCUSS PEACE AT INTERNATIONAL DINNER

Hon. W. T. White, Hon. W. L. M. King and Sir John Willison Represent Canada.

William Jennings Bryan Is Chief Speaker For U.S.

NEW YORK, Dec. 11. — Cabinet Ministers and leading citizens of both countries, and some three hundred Canadian residents of New York, attended last evening the 17th annual dinner of the Canadian Society. Wm. Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State represented the Wilson administration, while Hon. W. T. White, the Canadian Minister of Finance, was the Canadian Government's envoy. In addition, Sir John Willison, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, Justice W. R. Riddell and F. B. Featherstonehaugh, of Toronto, and Alex. D. Fraser, of Montreal, came to the city for the occasion, while Governor Taylor, of New Jersey; Bishop Courtenay, and representatives of the St. George's, St. Patrick's, St. Andrew's, St. David's, and other societies formed the American representation.

The British embassy was represented by Viscount Campden and Consul-General Courtenay and Walter Bennett.

Mr. Bryan delivered an eloquent plea for international peace.

Hon. W. T. White referred to the coming peace celebration. That celebration would usher in a thousand more, a millenium between the two great English-speaking races.

"Why should it not be so?" be continued. "Neither nation seeks further territory. The bounds of our physical dominion are set: Both are interested in the peace of the world. No two peoples understand each other better than the American and Canadian."

SIR JOHN S. WILLISON.

He spoke of the love and loyalty, unchanged and unchangeable, of Canada for the Empire, of which the symbol was the throne and crown.

Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, former Minister of Labor at Ottawa, said in part: "If to international peace we on this continent can add industrial peace, in the furtherance of which beginnings have already been made, so that men's minds may be liberated and men's energies freed to give to the problems of humanity the consideration they deserve, to what joint service for mankind may we not yet be called?"

Chang Hsun In Revolt.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—Chang Hsun, commander of the Chinese Government troops at Nanking, who, in September last, was compelled to apologise to the Japanese consul at Nanking, has proclaimed the independence of the Province of Kiangsu, according to a despatch received yesterday by the Central News from Shanghai.

Thirty thousand troops have been despatched by the Pekin Government against the city of Nanking, and Chang Hsun is reported to be retiring in the direction of Shanghai.

Great unrest, the message adds, prevails in the southern provinces.

COW TESTING ASSOCIATION

Peterborough Centre Now the Largest in Ontario.

The cow testing movement is rapidly spreading in this country and the Peterboro Centre now contains more herds than any other centre in the Province. With the high cost of labor it is but natural that every farmer should wish to know whether every cow in his herd is returning him a profit, and if not, she must be disposed of, and quite a number of the cow testing men have informed the local recorder that they intend to dispose of one or more cows this fall as a result of the information they have secured through cow testing. While a great improvement may be made by eliminating the poor cows, we must also be sure to use a first class sire, and many excellent animals are being placed at the head of our Peterboro herds. Mr. R. A. Nelson of Keene recently purchased a pure bred sire from Mr. P. W. Mann of Bridgenorth.

Building Silos

A large number of silos were built during the past summer by members of the Peterboro Centre and no doubt a large number will be built next year. Quite a number of new members have been secured recently and there is every sign of a very large membership next year.

RHEUMATIC SUFFERERS ASTONISHED

RHEUMA Acts on Kidneys, Liver and Blood the First Day—and Out Goes Uric Acid Poison

Rheumatic sufferers astonished;;;

Anybody can afford to pay 50cts. to get rid of terrible Rheumatism, Sciatica or Gout, and that's all RHEUMA costs at Warne Drug Co. and they say if it doesn't do all that is claimed for it, money back.

It's wonderful how speedily this simple remedy takes hold and how the sore muscles limber up and the swollen joints come down to normal. Make no mistake—RHEUMA costs but little, but it's the best remedy you can find to drive Rheumatic poison from the system and bring back health to misery-racked bodies.

"I had Rheumatism for a long while, and tried many medicines, but was not cured until I used RHEUMA I cannot praise RHEUMA too highly. My advice to those suffering from Rheumatism is to use the great remedy, as I believe it will effect a permanent cure in any case." — C. B. Lanham, Belton, W. Va., April 27, 1912.

Needn't Add To Fleet.

LONDON, Dec. 11.—No request for the strengthening of the British naval forces in Mexican waters has been made so far as is known here, where it is considered that the two vessels already there, the cruisers Berwick and Suffolk, are quite sufficient for all purposes.

It is stated that if the cruisers Lancaster and Hermione have been ordered to proceed to the Mexican coast it is a local matter which has been decided by Rear Admiral Sir Christopher Cradoc, the commander of the cruiser squadron.

BURNING IRON CHIPS.

Combustion Proceeded Exactly as in a Pile of Coal.

To the average man it is inconceivable for iron or steel chips to actually burn as so much inflammable material, but nevertheless such is possible, and such incidents are the part of positive record. This phenomenon is explained by the fact that finely divided iron or steel may sometimes oxidize faster than it can get rid of the heat and consequently gives signs of complete combustion.

A large pile of chips took fire in the yard of a machine shop not long ago, and the fire was described by a witness as follows: The chips were put through a centrifugal separator, and the small amount of oil remaining had nothing to do with the fire. It was a plain case of burning iron. The metal was so finely divided and presented so much surface to the oxygen in proportion to the underlying surface of the pile that, once started by the heat from a nearby rubbish pile, the combustion proceeded exactly as in a pile of coal, only apparently at a more rapid rate.

The metal had not melted. Where the fire had been hottest the chips were a dark brown. The pile sank about a [illegible] in height, and a lot of [illegible] must have been oxidized to create so much heat.—American Machinist.

PASTEUR'S PLAYTHINGS.

The Great Scientist a Man of Many Medals and Decorations.

The great Pasteur gracefully accepted all decorations. While he had a passion for discipline, he never had any [illegible] criticism of the distinctions established by society. He attached a value to the glory that came to himself and discovered that men in the world of politics were his inferiors.

In Rue Dutot, in the salon of the apartment that the great Pasteur occupied, one saw in the place of honor a glass case in which brilliantly scintillating were hundreds of decorations. They came from all the countries of the world. There were lions, leopards, elephants, eagles with one and with two heads, roses, saints, angels, all the fauna, all the flora of the world and of paradise. There were diamonds, rubies, emeralds and gold—enough to furnish a jeweler's shop.

Pasteur often gazed upon this case. His little granddaughter remarked the joy that brightened the countenance of the demigod when he contemplated this prodigious display. And one day, pointing to the case, she said [illegible]: "These are grandpa's playthings."—Gil de Paris.

"Smith, sure enough, came straight toward us. He sat down, lighted a cigar, beamed on us and said:

"'Well, boys, how goes it? I've just returned from a three months' European tour'—

Women of Influence.

We are, all of us, whether young or old, famous or obscure, women of influence. We cannot live a day without affecting the world somewhat for good or ill, whether we will or no. We are all a part of life's forces, whether we know it or not. Be we humble as you like, you are still a power of influence, if not by your own choosing, then often by God's decree. It may be only a smile or a simple kindness that you have given to a little child, but it starts agencies you little dream of; or it may be some selfishness and lack of humor, whose workings in you they set in motion a long train of hurtful and evil influences or circumstances. For all life is connected, and whether you wish it or not your life affects other lives.—Woman's Home Companion.

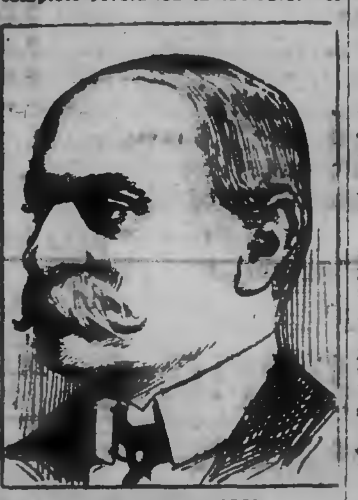
RADIUM FOR THE POOR

NEW DISCOVERY REVOLUTIONIZES TREATMENT OF CANCER.

Sir Frederick Treves Has Announced That Not Only Can the Emanations of Precious Metal Be "Bottled," But That Water Can Also Be Impregnated With Its Curative Powers.

In the battle against cancer science has accomplished one of the wonders of the age. Into the lives of countless sufferers a sensational discovery just announced brings a new gleam of hope. Sir Frederick Treves, sergeant-surgeon to the King, whose name as a cancer specialist is almost a household word, has just made known the fact that radium rays can actually be bottled. In this manner they can be sent all over the country and used just as effectively as the precious substance itself. Radium is enormously expensive and exceedingly scarce. The new discovery has this extraordinary advantage, that it multiplies almost to infinity the existing stock of radium. The discovery will bring the treatment within reach of the poor, and will provide a far more widespread test of its efficacy than has hitherto been possible. In future the doctor will be able to obtain the bottled rays at small cost, using them in exactly the same way, and with the same results, as the radium itself. Further, a way has been found of charging water with radium emanations, and remarkable cures have been effected by its means.

In explaining the discovery, Sir Frederick Treves described it as "a complete revolution in the future of radium." He said: "There comes off radium a gas called the emanation, which has exactly the properties of pure radium, and we have proved now—the discovery was made some months ago, but nothing was said about it—that for curative purposes the emanation of radium is as efficient as radium itself. Radium gives off these emanations constantly, the amount depending upon the quantity of radium that is used. The emanation never weakens the radio-activity of the piece of radium from which it exudes."



SIR FREDERICK TREVES.

Mr. A. E. Hayward Pinch, medical superintendent of the Radium Institute, stated that according to the most reliable authorities, an atom of radium would only shed one-half of its radio-activity in something between 2,000 and 2,500 years, so that it would be a good many generations ahead before there need be any worry about the degeneracy of the radium actually possessed by the institute. But more marvelous than the discovery that radium emits gases of equal curative power to the substance itself without destroying its own efficiency are the remarkable inventions made by the institute staff to capture and confine the emanations in tubes, plates and bottles. Sir Frederick Treves showed the company some flat plates, about as large as two postage stamps, into which 50 to 80 milligrammes had been sealed. These can be sent out to country doctors who want to treat patients. The emanation loses its radio-activity very rapidly, declining to one-half of its original strength in three and a half days. Still, the doctor in Edinburgh who wants to apply the equivalent of 50 milligrammes of radium to a patient can have a tube sent to him overnight which will represent that strength on arrival to him the next morning. Fifty milligrammes of pure radium would cost £1,000; 50 milligrammes of radium emanation, of equal curative powers to radium itself, would cost him six shillings for 24 hours' use. This is bringing radium treatment, where there is no radium, within the reach of the most modest purse. "During the last 30 days," remarked Sir Frederick Treves, "the institute has sent out 73 pieces of apparatus, representing 860 milligrammes, in the form of radium emanation, which, if the actual substance were used, would represent £17,200 worth of radium." One of the four grammes of radium possessed by the institute (the total value of the four is £80,000) was recently set aside exclusively for the production of radium emanations. From this 100 milligrammes of emanation are secured in plates and tubes every day. Anticipating the calls for radium emanation that the announcement of this discovery will lead to, the executive committee have now decided to devote another ½-gramme of their precious substance exclusively to this work. Sir Frederick Treves frankly said he could not go beyond the expression "apparent cure" which he had applied last year to the results of radium treatment on cancer, tumours, etc., though the observations of the past year were "very hopeful."

He Wanted His Adversary's Ears

By MARK HATHAWAY

At a table d'hote in Berlin a party of Americans sat dining and chatting with each other in their native language. The party consisted of a father, mother, a daughter nineteen years old and a young man, also an American, whose method of speaking indicated that he was a southerner. Opposite these persons sat a couple of young men in the uniform of the German army. Hearing those opposite them conversing in English, but not being sure that none of them spoke German, they refrained for a time from saying anything that they would not like to have overheard.

But finally the younger of the two remarked to his friend in a low tone that the young lady opposite was very pretty. The other cautioned him to say nothing about the party in their hearing, but without effect. The young man made several remarks that were complimentary with a view to testing the Americans' comprehension of the German language, and when he discovered that they paid no attention to him he gathered confidence and criticised them unmercifully.

It happened that the young man sitting beside the young lady was a student at a German university. His name was Thibadeaux and his home was New Orleans. He was a member of a dueling corps and at the time its champion. He spoke German fluently, and, though he pretended not to understand what the pair were saying, he took in every word. While chatting with his young lady companion the question arose as to the date of the blowing up of the tower of the castle of Heidelberg. Thibadeaux said that he would ask one of the officers opposite. Then he said in German to the younger of the two:

"Herr, I have heard your remarks about our party and especially the young lady on my right. Kindly tell me where a friend of mine will find you after dinner."

The man addressed saw from the young lady's—Miss Archard's—action that she was ignorant of what was being said and, though he colored slightly, did not give the matter away. He could only give the address required and his name, which was Von Wragler.

"What does he say?" asked Miss Archard.

"He says he doesn't know."

After dinner Thibadeaux left the others to smoke, but more especially to find a fellow student named Reinhart.

Reinhart, who acted for Thibadeaux in the affair, said nothing as to his principal being a student in Germany, a member of a corps or a champion with the small sword. A meeting was arranged in a wood near the city, where a number of duels had been fought, for the next morning at 6 o'clock.

Thibadeaux, having smoked his cigar, returned to Miss Archard and spent the rest of the evening with her. But by 10 o'clock she gave a slight yawn, which she hastened to cover with her handkerchief, and her visitor soon bade her good evening without giving the slightest hint that in the morning he would risk his life in her behalf. Indeed, he was not sorry to depart, for he knew Reinhart was waiting for him to give him the final details for the meeting. These having been transmitted and approved, Thibadeaux went to bed. Reinhart was to call for him the next morning at 4.

Long before daylight the second burst into the room and stood over Thibadeaux's bed.

"Is it 4 o'clock?" asked the latter, trying to rouse himself.

"No; it is but 3."

"Then why do you awaken me?"

"To show you that."

He shoved a paper under Thibadeaux's nose and held a lamp, which he had lighted, so that his friend could read it.

"An apology!" exclaimed Thibadeaux. "What does it mean? Surely that young officer would not dare to apologize under a challenge. He will be tabooed by his brother officers."

"Not under the circumstances. It's your fault that the affair has gone amiss. What induced you to give a challenge in the presence of the woman about whom the duel was to have been fought?"

"Miss Archard! She doesn't understand a word of German."

"Perhaps she doesn't. But what these women don't hear with their ears they see with their eyes. The young lady must have known that you were giving a challenge, for at midnight she called upon Von Wragler in company with an escort. He was in bed, but dressed himself and came down to receive her. She said that she knew he was to fight you, but since the duel was about her he should fight her first. He tried to explain that if he fought a woman he would be disgraced, whereupon she said she would accept an apology. Von Wragler offered to apologize to her, but fight you. To this she demurred.

"Finally Von Wragler, fearing the affair, which was to his discredit, would reach the ear of the emperor, consented to write you an apology, with the understanding that the affair was to be kept a secret. Miss Archard gave this pledge for you as well as herself."

"Ears!" exclaimed Thibadeaux. "I wanted his ears to take back with me to the university."

A rich young widow and her weeds are soon parted.

CANADIANS OFF DUTY

MOTORING AND GOLF THEIR POPULAR RECREATIONS.

Sir William Van Horne Is an Artist of No Small Skill and Several Others Are Art Collectors—W. H. Brouse Collects Stamps and Col. Hendrie War Medals—C. C. James Is a Bibliophile.

While Canadians are strong believers in the necessity of recreation, they cannot be described as hobbyists, says W. A. Craick in The Toronto Globe. The number of out-and-out hobbyists in Canada is exceedingly small. It is true that here and there one encounters some man who is making a specialty of collecting certain objects, or is devoting his spare time to certain odd pursuits, but it will be found that in most cases these are of very secondary importance in his scheme of existence. The great objective of Canadians of the present day is to collect money, and any time that remains over from this pursuit is devoted principally to keeping up physical health and strength. By and by, when future generations begin to spend the money that their progenitors are accumulating, they will doubtless find many odd and eccentric ways of doing so.

Meanwhile it may be said that the favorite recreations of prominent Canadians of the present day are golf and motoring. To attempt to enumerate all the illustrious people who are devotees of the royal game would make a list that would be wearisome by reason of its length. From Premier Borden down the list, there are scores and scores of citizens who place the word golf after the inquisitorial query: "Your favorite pastime?"

And, then, it may be taken for granted that every Canadian of repute nowadays owns his automobile, and derives a certain amount of pleasure from its use.

Probably the most interesting instance of a prominent Canadian who spends his spare time in an out-of-the-ordinary way is Sir William Van Horne. Sir William was a great railway capitalist, with immense interests in commerce and industry. But his contact with the business world has not spoiled his love for art or lessened his skill as an artist. His happiest hours are spent in his studios, either at his city residence in Montreal or at his beautiful seaside home at St. Andrews, where he indulges his fancy to his heart's content. Nor are painting and the collection of works of art his sole recreation. He is a skilled agriculturist, and his farms at St. Andrews and in Manitoba are models of excellence, due not less to his own work than to that of his superintendents.

Toronto's parallel to Sir William Van Horne is probably Sir Edmund Walker, who, while not an artist himself, is an excellent critic of art. He, too, is a collector of painting and curios, a lover of good books and an enthusiastic student of science and history. Indeed the Toronto banker is a marvel of versatility, who has found time to crowd into the leisure hours of a remarkable business career a vast amount of vicarious knowledge.

Of prominent Canadians who indulge in real boyish pastimes, such as collecting stamps and coins, bugs and beetles, butterflies and moths, it is difficult to find any examples. Mr. W. H. Brouse, ex-president of the Toronto Stock Exchange, with his splendid collection of Canadian stamps, and Col. William Hendrie, commanding officer of the 48th Highlanders, with his fine array of war medals, are in a distinctly small class by themselves.

While practically all Canadian men of means have done much for philanthropy, the number who have adopted charitable, benevolent or educational work as a hobby is comparatively small. Mr. J. W. Gage is an outstanding example. His work in establishing sanitariums for tubercular patients is well known. Likewise Mr. J. Ross Robertson's work for sick children in Toronto needs no elaboration.

The collection of pictures, books and works of art in Canada is confined to the few. There are several prominent people who make an effort to secure fine paintings, but practically none is interested in gathering together first editions or other rare copies of books. Mr. R. B. Angus is one of a group of wealthy art collectors in Montreal, who was a former president and liberal supporter of the Montreal Art Association. Mr. E. B. Greenshields, not only collects paintings, but writes learnedly on art subjects. In Toronto, Mr. D. R. Wilkie, president of the Imperial Bank, divides his interest between playing golf and admiring pictures, while Mr. E. F. B. Johnston, the noted criminal lawyer, possesses one of the best collections in Canada, his specialty being Dutch paintings and old china. Mr. Chester D. Massey is yet another Torontonian who is interested in collecting paintings.

As a collector of books pure and simple, Mr. C. C. James is probably the most outstanding figure. He long made it a hobby to secure copies of all Canadian books of poetry, of which, strange to say, there has been an astonishing number.

At least one Canadian of note has gone in for literary work as a sort of hobby, that being Dr. Andrew Macphail of Montreal, who established The University Magazine a few years ago, and is reported to conduct it largely for his own gratification and at a decided loss financially.

Try a Want Ad in The Review.

HE WAS AN OUTLAW.

And Presumed to Violate the Rules of the Canal Zone.

Almost as important in the work of building the Panama canal as the blue eyed czar at Culebra (by which title Mr. Harry A. Franck, in "Zone Policeman 88," distinguishes Colonel Goethals), was Colonel Gorgas, who made and kept the zone a healthy place.

Among the colonel's big tasks was the extermination of the mosquito. How thoroughly he did his work is humorously indicated by a letter that Mr. Franck quotes:

Gatun, —— 28, 1912.

Dear Colonel—I am writing to call your attention to a gross violation of sanitary ordinance No. 321 and an apparent loophole in your otherwise excellent department. The circumstances are as follows: On the evening of —— 21, as I was sitting at the roadside between Gatun and New Gatun (some sixty-three paces beyond house No. 126), there appeared a mosquito which buzzed openly for some time about my ears. It was probably merely a male of the species, as it showed no tendency to bite, but a mosquito nevertheless. I trust you will take fitting measures to punish so bold and insolent a violation of the rules of your department. I am, sir, very truly yours,

MRS. HENRY PECK.

P. S.—The mosquito can be easily recognized by a peculiarly triumphant, defiant note in his song.

Mental Growth.

One fact which seems to distinguish superior from ordinary families is that, while members of the latter seem almost to stop growing at about the age of thirty-five, the lives of the former deepen and expand even into the vanishing years of old age. A visitor returns to the village after an absence of ten years. He is shocked at the relative standstill of a large part of the population. This lack of development after the age of thirty-five or forty represents primarily an innate deficiency in the protoplasm of the nervous system. It is a psychological fact undoubtedly of eugenic import. Superior individuals exhibit a lengthening of the period of plasticity and growth. Their personalities are correspondingly the richer from experience.—American Magazine.

Thimble In Sight.

Among games of search this is popular. The greater part of the company being sent out of the room, a thimble must be placed where it will not be noticed and yet be in plain sight when once the attention is directed to it.

As each of the party discovers the thimble he does not give any clew to its whereabouts by looks or actions, but indicates that he has found it by saying, "Rorum, torum, corum," and takes a seat, leaving the rest of the party to continue the search. The last one to find it must pay a forfeit for slowness.

In some games where a small object is hidden there are various ways of assisting the seeker when in doubt. Thus it is said you are "cold," you "freeze," you are "warm," you "burn," according to your distance from the object.

More original is a practice common in Massachusetts, where one of the company says, as the person who has been sent out re-enters the room to begin searching, "So high water," indicating the height of the object above the floor.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 300, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1912, last year, 1,646 in-patients, 25,567 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,306 were from Toronto, and 5,812 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,247 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,646 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 3 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1912, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 437 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-foot splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

NEW CANADIAN LEAGUE UMPIRES NEXT SEASON

Umps Riley and Miller to Come From International League—Salaries to be Boosted to Insure Good Men

Announcement is made that the Canadian Baseball League will have two first class umpires next year, in addition to the men already on the staff. Some time ago the International League purchased Messrs Riley and Miller from the Pacific Coast League and the Carolina Association respectively. The International vacancies have since filled to an overflow, and President Barrow has turned both men over to the Canadian League. Riley and Miller are good arbitrators, and President Fitzgerald will use them regularly when the championship season gets under way in May next. In addition he will retain Billy Evans, Jack Flynn, Jack Daley, and perhaps Ira Davis. Billy Phyle will remain at the coast, and Jocko Halligan has made good in the International.

President Fitzgerald intends to increase the salaries of the Canadian Leaguers, and will get the best umpires available. Last year the staff was generally good, but it can stand improvement. One or two of Ottawa's baseball celebrities, including men who have officiated in the City League, aspired for berths in the Canadian League, but it is doubtful if they could qualify. Good umpires cut a big figure in all league races, and those in the Canadian circuit next summer will be given more authority than ever, as President Fitzgerald intimated in his annual report last Friday that the lid would positively go down on the rowdies. —London Advertiser.

SPORTING NOTES

Sarnia will play an exhibition game in Detroit Friday night. Percy Lesueur is still angling for big Frank Heffernan of the Torontos. "Heff" has received letters from the capital offering anything within reason, but the big defence player says he will stick where he is for another season.

"Hope" Armstrong, who was considered one of the fastest defence players in the O.H.A. two years ago, is now located in Midland, and will play with the northern town seniors this winter. "Hope" was then a member of the Trenton Juniors, and also played on the All Star team that year. He was out of hockey last season.

St. Thomas will benefit by the new O.H.A. rule sanctioning the signing of players resident in neighboring districts and police villages. The Saints claim to have the best team they have ever put in the O.H.A., and many of their prospective stars would not have shone under the old ruling.

A meeting of the Junior City Hockey League will be held at the rink, this evening at 7:30. All representatives of the clubs are asked to be on hand in good time.

Junior and intermediate players are asked to attend training at the rink tomorrow evening at 7 sharp. Mr. Thompson, physical director at the Y.M.C.A. will be present and put the boys through a few turns.

Always the Irishman.

In the New Brunswick local elections of 1903, the present Judge McKeown was a candidate in St. John City. During his nomination speech, he was repeatedly interrupted by a crowd of young opponents who were members of a political organization known as the "Development Club," and trouble seemed imminent, when the situation was relieved by an unconscious flash of wit from one of Mr. McKeown's Irish supporters, who shouted out:

"Niver moind thim, sir, it's only the remnants of the 'Divilment Club.'"

MERCANTILE HOCKEY LEAGUE MEETS TO-NIGHT

Organization Meeting Called for the Y.M.C.A. at 8 O'clock.

A meeting of all those interested in the Mercantile Hockey League is called for tonight at eight o'clock, in the Y.M.C.A. By all appearances this league will have a banner year for the clubs who were in last year and also several others have signified their intention of entering.

The meeting is called for sharp at 8:00, and it is requested that representatives from the various teams intending to enter be on time.

London's Dullest Job.

The dullest job in London may become an absorbing occupation in time. There is a clerk at the law courts whose sole duty is to take papers, one by one, from a pile on the left side of his table, bang a stamp down on them and place them in the same order on his right. He has been doing this job for about thirty-five years and recently confessed that it has become such a part of his nature that, if the supply of documents dried up he would have a nervous breakdown. Fortunately, the block of litigation at the courts will prevent such a catastrophe for some time.—London Standard.

WORK OF THE OCEANS.

They Do More Than Merely Separate Acres of Dry Land.

Oceans are found in various parts of the world, where they spend their time in lapping shores, infringing upon the rights of continents and swallowing up islands, ships and people.

Oceans are salty to the taste and are used by yachtsmen to get away from their wives, also to cover up cabled newspaper stories about kings and queens and to float navies and other debts.

An ocean spends its time in having storms and making surf. It delights in making innocent people sick and in playing with children's legs. Without oceans there would be no steamships and gambling would decline.

Every ocean has a set of fish which do not even pay ground rent, but spend their time like people who live on land—namely, in devouring each other. Besides ordinary fish, oceans have whales, lobsters and mermaids. The mermaids live on rocks just as girls on dry land do. The lobsters also live shellfish lives in lobster palaces. The whales lie around and wait for the happy time when they can perform useful work supplying bones for corsets.

Some oceans employ professional sea serpents, which they use during the summer for advertising purposes. Oceans also have sound, seaweed and sponges. When an ocean has been out all night it likes to take a sponge bath; hence it always keeps on hand a constant supply of these useful toilet articles.—Life.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 10.—At the C. P. R. live stock market the offerings this morning amounted to 1200 cattle, 800 sheep and lambs, and 760 hogs.

There was no further change in the condition of the market for cattle today, prices being firm at the advance noted in the early part of the week, owing to the fact that the supply was smaller than expected and choice stock continues to be scarce. In fact, there were no choice animals on the market. The wether was more favorable, it being colder with a fair fall of snow, consequently the demand from local buyers was good and a fair amount of business was also done for shipment to the United States. Best steers sold at $7.50, but the bulk of the trade was done in cattle, ranging from $5 to $7, and the lower grades, including rough stock, at from $4 to $5 per 100 pounds. The trade in butchers' cows was fairly active at prices ranging from $4.50 to $6.50, and bulls sold at $5 to $6.50, while canning stock brought $3.50 to $4 per 100 pounds.

The tone of the market for small meats was very firm on account of the limited supply available, for which there was a keen demand, and sales of lambs were made at $8 to $8.25, and sheep at $5 to $5.50 per 100 pounds.

The demand for hogs was good and the market was active with a steady undertone and sales of selected lots were made at $9 to $9.25 per 100 pounds.

HALLELUJAH WEDDING AT THE ARMY TEMPLE

Miss Elsie Simpson Becomes the Bride of Frank W. Robinson

Members of the Salvation Army, with their many friends gathered at the Temple last evening to witness the marriage of two of the most popular young members of the local corps, Miss Elsie Simpson, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Simpson, Downers Corners and Frank W. Robinson, son of Mr. and Mrs. George Robinson, 49 Jackson Ave. The hall was filled to capacity and many were unable to gain admittance.

For some years has the bridegroom been a member of the Army and has rendered faithful service as has also the bride and they were the recipients of the numerous kind wishes of their friends. Adjutant McElheney officiated. The bride was assisted by Miss Nellie Northcote and Mr. Victor Boorman, a life long comrade of the groom, was best man. The young couple stood under the Army flag, held by Bandsman Harding, as the ceremony was performed. Both the bride and groom wore their Army uniform.

This is the first wedding that has been solemnized in the Temple for over three years and the occasion with the delightful spread provided by the ladies, will be long remembered by the members.

The Marriage Ceremony

We solemnly declare that we do not seek this marriage simply to please ourselves, but that we believe it will enable us to do better, serve and please God, and work in the interests of the Salvation Army.

We promise never to allow our marriage to lessen in any way our devotion to God or to the Army.

We each severally promise that we will each never try to prevent the other doing or giving anything that is in his or her power to do or to help the Army.

We also promise to use all our influence with each other to promote the constant and entire self sacrifice for the salvation of the world.

We promise to regard and arrange our home in every way as a Salvation Army Soldier's quarters and to train every one in it to faithful service.

We promise, whether together or apart, always to do our utmost as soldiers of the Salvation Army, and never allow it to be injured or hindered by anything or anyone, without doing our best to prevent or overcome such hinderance or injury.

Should either of us cease to be inefficient through sickness, death or any other cause, we engage that the remaining one shall continue to do his best or her best of ability to fulfil these promises.

On the contracting parties signifying their acceptance of these terms they stood forward and clasped hands.

The wedding vow was then taken, as follows:

The bridegroom said "I put this ring upon your finger as a continual sign that we are married under the solemn pledges we have this day taken to live, and fight for the God and the Salvation Army. The Adjutant then joined hands between the two saying "In the name of God and the Salvation Army, I declare you man and wife together. Then the groom kissed the bride.

Mr. and Mrs. Robinson will reside at 488 George Street.

HANS SCHMIDT IS ON TRIAL

Former Priest Unmoved by Evidence Against Him

NEW YORK, Dec. 11.—Hans Schmidt sat unmoved for three hours Schmidt sat unmoved for three hours Courts building, and heard from the lips of witnesses the story of the murder of Anna Aumuller.

The ex-priest remained unmoved when a stenographer read the confession he made to the police, and when a physician told minutely of the manner in which the victim's body had been dissected. The only expression of interest manifested by him was shown when Anna Hart, friend of the girl Schmidt is charged with slaying, said that Anna Aumuller told her Schmidt wanted to marry her.

"We will get married," Schmidt told the Aumuller girl, according to Miss Hart, "and go to some far off country, and I will hang my cassock on a high hook."

Schmidt told the police in his confession that he bad married Anna Aumuller, acting as both bridegroom and priest. The witness knew nothing of this so-called ceremony.

FIRST TRAIN RUN

Montreal Citizens Travel Under Mount Royal

MONTREAL, Dec. 11.—With the firing of a charge of dynamite in the Canadian Northern tunnel at a point over 600 feet below the highest point of Mount Royal, the two headings were joined shortly before three o'clock yesterday morning, and the first step in the actual completion of the tunnel marked. Mount Royal is now pierced from side to side with a heading some three and one-third miles long, and within another year passenger trains will be running.

The first passenger train, bearing a representative gathering of Montreal citizens, was run through from the west portal to Dorchester street, in the afternoon. Work was practically suspended during the latter part of the day, the event being celebrated at the Dorchester street offices, where the guests of the company were entertained, and in a garage at the rear of the building the tunnel workmen held a joyous festival of their own.

FIRST TIME IN HISTORY

Submarine Sinks, But the Crew is Saved

LONDON, Dec. 11—The submarine C14 was sunk in collision with the barge Plymouth last night. The officers and crew were rescued. This is probably the first time that a submarine has been rammed and sunk without loss of life. The submarine was returning to headquarters at Devonport with other submarines belonging to the third flotilla.

While traveling on the surface a short distance from the entrance of Devonport harbor the hoppers of the barge struck the C14 on the port side aft, causing a rent in the plating. The submarine began immediately to fill with water. Splendid discipline was maintained. The officers and crew climbed out of the coning tower and endeavored to stop the inrush of water. Finding this impossible the officers and the crew of nineteen men were taken aboard a coastguard boat. Endeavors to keep the C14 afloat were unsuccessful. She gradually went down, stern first, and a quarter of an hour after the collision disappeared altogether.

RATES REASONABLE

C.P.R's Revenue Will be Affected by Canal Says Counsel

OTTAWA, Dec. 11.—F. H. Chrysler, K.C., and E. W. Beatty, counsel for the C.P.R., submitted their argument in the western freight rates case before the Railway Commission yesterday afternoon, in rebuttal to the evidence and arguments put in principally in opposition to the company.

Mr. Chrysler reminded the board that the opening of the Panama Canal is likely to affect railway conditions in Canada very considerably.

"The solitary position of the C.P.R. in the west is at an end, two rival companies being ready to share the traffic that has entirely gone to the C.P.R. in the past," said counsel. "It is impossible to say what the effect of this will be on the C.P.R. earnings.

"The rates charged by the C.P.R. in the west are fair and reasonable charges for the service performed for the shippers," he insisted.

So long as the railway keeps its charges within the realm of reasonableness, the board has no jurisdiction to interfere with such rates except on the one ground of discrimination, and discrimination does not exist under the circumstances of this case.

He proceedd to discuss the effect on C.P.R. earnings of the approaching competition of the G.T.R. with its enormous condection in Ontario and Quebec. The same, he said, was true in a lesser degree of the C.N.R.'s prospective place in Canada.

Counsel said that these circumstances must inevitably result in a greater loss of through tonnage on the part of the C.P.R. than would ordinarily result from competitors entering its field.

F. H. Phippen, K.C., for the C.N.R., and Eugene Lafleur, K.C., for the G.T.P., will be heard to-day.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY

In the Field for Water Commissioner.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The retirement of Mr. W. H. Hill from the board of Water Commissioners has decided me to offer myself as a candidate for the vacancy made by his withdrawal.

Realizing that the Board of Water Commissioners to be an efficient and business-like organization and that the local Hydro-Electric will be an addition to the duties of the Commission for the coming year it will be my aim, if honored with a seat at the board, to co-operate with the present members of that commission and to assist in continuing the success already achieved by the Waterworks department, and help, so far as in my power, with the organization of the local Hydro-Electric system, (which has had in our city since its advent, my loyal support), to make this public utility of the greatest possible service to the citizens of the municipality.

The qualification which I present to you in support of my candidature is service in your interest for five years on your board of Aldermen.

On this record I ask your support at the polls.

Respectfully,
ROBERT HICKS.

THE SNOWBALL PARTY.

The children in the big Orphanage were not looking forward to Christmas very much. They had no friends to send them even a Christmas card, and the people who looked after the Orphanage spent so much money in buying food and warm clothes for the boys and girls that there was none left over for treats or Christmas presents. Carols would be sung in church on Christmas morning but the rest of the day would be much like any other, and there would be nothing to remind them that was the best day in the whole year. But they did not know what was being planned at the home of their doctor, a kind-hearted man they all liked, and looked forward to his visits with joy, except when he gave them very nasty medicine.

"HIDE AND GO SEEK." Copyright by F. A. Schneider

"If we don't have a party this year, mother," said Kitty, the doctor's eldest girl, "could we give the Orphanage children a treat? They never seem to have a very jolly time at Christmas."

"I think we might manage it," replied mother. "We will hear what father says. I'll ask him as soon as ever he comes home."

Father thought the idea splendid, and promised to dress up as Santa Claus in the scarlet coat mother made from an old dressing gown. So the four little girls spent their holidays planning a surprise party for the children who enjoyed so few treats, and they found it great fun; there were so many things to think of and do.

Thus it came about that on Christmas Day the Orphanage children were startled by a loud rapping at the door, which opened to let in Santa Claus. They knew it must be Santa Claus because he was so like his pictures, and they clapped their hands joyfully as he entered Behind him came four little girls, who they knew must belong to Santa Claus, for they wore scarlet hoods like his own, and pretty scarlet capes trimmed with fur and holly.

"A merry Christmas!" cried Santa Claus, smiling and opening his big sack. The children hoped it held toys, but it seemed filled with snowballs.

But the white balls did not melt or break even when Santa Claus took out an armful and threw them to his little ones, who caught them very carefully. For some time a merry snowball fight went on between Santa Claus and his helpers; then one of the balls flew across to the children who watched.

"Open it and see what is inside!" said Santa Claus, and the little boy who had caught the ball saw it was covered with soft white paper. He quickly tore a hole in the cover, and, to his surprise, out tumbled a packet of lovely chocolate creams!

And now Santa Claus and his four helpers snowballed the other children, and somehow managed it so that each child got two snowballs filled with sweets. Then Santa Claus began to unpack big parcels from his pockets and the bottom of his sack. Each one had on it a name. Santa Claus knew just whom it was for, and the children thought he was very clever to know their names so well. Everyone got just the toy they wanted, too, so you may think how happy they were. They were very, very sorry when Santa Claus and the four little girls said good-night to them and went a way carrying the big empty sack.

"It was the nicest party we ever had." declared the doctor's children that night, which was just what the other children felt.

CHRISTMAS NIGHT GAMES.

FLY AWAY.

Another bewildering game. One player, who is seated on a stool or low chair, must place the first finger of her right hand on her toe. The other players all crowd around her, each one placing a finger close to hers. When all are settled the leader raises her finger suddenly, saying: "Fly away!"

If she mentions something (such as a bird, a witch, a bat, butterfly, a feather, or a kite) that has the power of flying, the others must raise their fingers. But if she mentions something that cannot fly, such as a book, a pumpkin, or a train, no notice must be taken.

If a player makes a mistake he must pay a forfeit or retire from the game. It frequently happens that when one player makes a mistake, several others do so at the same time.

RHYMING LIGHTS.

This is an excellent game because, besides being so simple that it can be understood by even the smallest children, it exercises the thinking faculties of all.

One of the players thinks of a word, which must be guessed by the others, and in order to help them discover the word she tells them the name of a word that ryhmes with it. For instance, we will suppose that "Book" is the word thought of, the leader or player who thinks of the word tells the others that it ryhmes with "look."

Each player is then allowed to ask a question, the questions and answers being something like the following:

"Is it running water?" "No, it is not a brook."

"Is it something belonging to a shepherdess?" "No, it is not a crook."

"Is it the name of something upon which we hang our clothes?" "No, it is not a hook."

"Is it a cosy corner?" "No, it is not a nook."

"Is it used in School?" "Yes, it is a book."

Gets wet.

Why are days longer in summer than in winter?
Because heat expands and cold contracts them.

Why is the nose in the middle of the face?
Because it is the centre (scenter).

What is that which makes everyone sick, but those that swallow it?
Flattery.

What is that which is often brought to the table, cut, but never eaten?
A pack of cards.

What is a put-up job?
The paper on the wall.

Why is the letter G like the sun?
Because it is the centre of light.

A CHRISTMAS PUZZLE.

Here is a little Christmas puzzle which may amuse some of the younger members of the family while they are trifling with the dessert after their mince pie and pudding have all disappeared.

Take four raisins, four nuts or almonds, four lumps of sugar and four pieces of candy and arrange them in the form of a square this way:

C A R S
C A R S
C A R S
C A R S

The letters stand for the initials of the various substances, candy, almonds, raisins and sugar. Now re-arrange these in such a manner that no two pieces of the same substance shall be in line vertically, horizontally or diagonally, and see how many of the sixteen pieces you can still use. It is possible to use all but three if you hit the right combination so that there shall be only three empty spaces.

WHY ARE CHRISTMAS TREES USED?

This custom, as far as Christianity is concerned, is German in its origin, and is identified with the labors of St. Maternus, one of the earliest, if not the very first, of the preachers of the gospel among the Teutons.

Just how the people became latter day sponsors for the Christmas tree is doubtful, though it is possible that it is traceable to the Saturnalia, and may have been imported into Germany by some of the conquering legions. The Germans have a legend of St. Maternus' sleeping beneath a fir tree, and of a miracle that occurred upon that occasion.

There is another theory that the notion of this tree came from Egypt. The palm tree is supposed to have put forth a shoot every month, and a spray of this tree was used in Egypt at their winter solstice celebration as being symbolical of the ended year. The Germans attribute the actual institution of the fir tree as part of the Christmas celebration to Martin Luther, but there is no reliable information on this subject. The Dutch, especially in New Amsterdam, were responsible for the vogue which the tree gained in America. It is now one of our oldest holiday customs.

The Children's Grand Old Man

WHO IS SANTA CLAUS?

Who is this grand old man, adored by every one, and where was he born? The answer to this question is not easy, for Santa Claus was born ages ago, and he has been so busy ever since that he never has taken the time to study his family tree. One thing he knows, and that is he has many names. Canadian children call him Santa Claus, the little Dutch folk, St. Nicholas, the French, Pere Noel, and the Germans Prince Ruprech or Kriss Kringle, but they all mean the same thing.

The story of his birth is told in medieval legend. This Italian story says that his name was St. Nicholas, and he was a bishop in the fourth century. He had a great deal of money, but he was so good to poor people, and especially to children, that he gave it away as fast as he got it. There are many tales about his good deeds, but perhaps the most interesting one is how he brought back to life three children who had been killed.

In Italy he was known as a tall man, dressed in white robes and wearing a crown. But the happy Dutch did not think of this kind man that way. To the Dutch people he always appeared as short-legged and fat and well wrapped in furs. He was accompanied by a black slave, who carried a bag full of sweets and presents. St. Nicholas carried a birch rod with him and asked the children who had been good and who had been bad. If they were good he gave them nuts, crackers, and candies, but if they had been bad they got a flogging. The children put their wooden sabots in the open fireplace so he could put some more presents in these on going out.

In Russia he was worshipped the same way, but he always appeared as a tall person wearing the vestments of a bishop, with miter and crown. His companion was a bearded man wearing a fur coat, carrying a stick and a basket full of presents.

A WONDERFUL TRAVELLER.

Though Santa Claus has a large sleigh and two splendid horses or reindeers, according to the countries he visits, he has such long distances to cover that he cannot appear in all countries on the same day. Santa Claus was born in Holland, or rather it took the Dutch children to find him. But he is a great traveller and goes to all countries, where he has many shops and thousands of men and women working for him. He goes to all the forests of Germany, especially to the wonderful "black forest," and gets thousands and thousands of trees.

"WHY! IT'S ME." Courtesy of The London Life Insurance Co.

Then he takes a fast steamer to America, and by the time he lands in Canada he is pretty well tired out. He always brings one or more servants with him and he has so many homes to visit that only a few of the children get to see him. He hurries in and out of the chimneys just as fast as he can.

He catches another steamer bound for France, where the children are awaiting their Pere Noel. Sometimes he is so late that the children have to celebrate their Christmas and New Year together. But his journey is not yet ended, for he goes back once more to Russia, especially into the interior, where he has not yet been. But he is the friend of all children and must therefore extend his journey into farthest Norway and even into Iceland.

While he is so busy with the children of the north, his wife is looking after the children in the south, in Italy, Spain, and Greece. At dark on the eve of Epiphany, the Befana begins. The open squares are crowded with trees of all sizes, wax figures of the Christ-child, candies and toys, while the air resounds with the sounds of whistles, horns, and carols.

When these celebrations are finished Santa Claus and his wife go off for a short holiday, nobody knows exactly where. It is said that they have been seen in the high mountains of Switzerland enjoying the winter sports. Wherever they enjoy their holiday it is short, for as soon as they are rested they commence their work for the coming year.

ADVANCE COURIER IN GERMANY.

In Germany he was at first considered as an advance courier for the Christkindlein, distributing part of the angel child's gifts and promising a visit of the Christkindlein on Christmas eve when he heard that the children were good. In some of the small places he appeared grotesquely—sometimes in goatskin and danced like a goat, again in a white sheet with a stick and two lights in his mouth. The legend says that Claus, Nicholaus, Necht Ruprecht, or whatever his name is, "comes in wearing a white sheet and holding a stick in his hand." He tells the children to pray, and if they disobey he flogs them, but if they obey he gives them plenty of nuts and apples.

The Italian children also believed in their patron saint, but they worshipped his wife instead. Her name is La Befana and they pay as much homage to her as the other children do to the saint. She is not good looking, for she is supposed to be more than 2,000 years old. The legend says that when the three wise men were about to pass her window she refused to go to the window and salute them. She saw her mistake when it was too late, and has tried to repent by making the children of Italy happy on her birthday, which is the 6th of January. She is supposed to be Santa Claus' wife, and when she is not busy helping him she is in Italy getting ready for her yearly celebration, which takes place on the 6th of January, when she gives the children toys, fruits, candies, etc.

She is also known in Russia and a great many children believe in Mrs. instead of Mr. Santa Claus. There she is called Babouska, and the story tells that she is so kind because she is repenting of her sins.

When the Dutch came over to America they brought their stories of their patron saint and their Christmas celebrations. And the children commenced to hang up their stockings instead of putting wooden shoes into the open fireplace. Their saint was the same kind, jovial man, excepting that he came with reindeers instead of driving horses as in Holland. The German children told their stories of the Christ child, who sent Prince Ruprecht as his servant to inquire into their behavior and to distribute their presents. They did not see a great deal of difference in the stories and so took the twenty-fifth of December as the day for Santa Claus' appearance.

In France it was the angel child who came every year to bless the children and to remember them with some small gift. Afterwards he had so much to do he sent his servant, Pere Noel, which is the Santa Claus of the French and Dutch children, to help him distribute his gifts and to tell them that he will come to bless them before the New Year.

A BEAUTIFUL LEGEND.

A legendary tale runs that a century after the first Christmas a missionary stood on the banks of the Arno, telling the story of the Christ-child. That night a prince returned to his mansion, to feast. In the dark he heard a tap on the window, and beheld a child's face, while a voice like music in the air whispered. "The Christ-child is hungry." Irritated, the prince sent his soldiers to drive the child away, but from that moment his rich viands became tasteless as ashes and sand. Again startled by a tap upon the window, he beheld the radiant child standing there in the darkness and the storm. Then came the voice saying, "The Christ-child is cold." In his selfishness again he bade the soldiers drive the child away, and told his servants to draw the curtains close. In that moment the very fire grew cold and the blazing embers threw off darkness, and chill crept to the heart of the selfish prince and then the ice began to melt. Springing up, he flung wide the door, and plunged into the darkness, calling for the child. Faster and faster fled the vision, until it came to a house, where a widow was dead, and a group of orphan children were sobbing in the night. Obedient to the Child's command, the Prince and his servants took them to his stately house, and brought other hungry children in, and feasted them, and henceforth his table was their table, his house their home, his sword their shield, his feet their wings. In giving happiness to Christ's children his heart became the very citadel of joy and gladness.

SANTA'S COMING.

Don't look for Santa and his sled, for Santa's deer have long been dead; and Santa chuckled at their fate, for deer have long been out of date; and old-time things are not worth while—and Santa wants to be in style. Oh, deer are awkward things and slow—the good old deer of long ago! Don't listen for the merry bells; no more, no more, their music swells, as sweet as music of the spheres, for bells are things of bygone years; the honk-honk horn will take their place, when Santa makes his midnight race, beneath the clouds, above the snow—oh, good old bells of long ago! He'll come (reporters in his train) upon his nice new aeroplane; he won't take time—impatient soul!—to scramble down the chimney hole; and folks who know him say he knocks on wasting time with hanging socks; he's changed so much in recent years—since I was young like you, my dears—I speak about him with a sob, and almost wish he'd quit his job. The good old saint I used to know—the Santa Claus of long ago!

SANTA CLAUS.

At five—A reality. At fifteen—A joke.
At ten—A suspicion. At thirty—A worry.
At fifty—A regret.

AN OLD TIME CHRISTMAS.

THE damsel donned her kirtle sheen
The hall was dressed with holly green.
Forth to the wood did merry men go
To gather in the mistletoe
Then opened wide the baron's hall
To vassal tenant, serf and all
Power laid his rod of rule aside,
And ceremony doffed his pride
The heir, with roses in his shoes.
That night might village partner chuse.
The lord underogating share
The vulgar game of post and pair
All hailed with uncontrolled delight
And general voice the happy night
That to the cottage as the crown
Brought tidings of salvation down
The fire with well dried logs supplied
Went roaring up the chimney wide
The huge hall table's oaken face,
Scrubbed till it shone, the day to grace,
Bore then upon its massive board
No mark to part the squire and lord
Then was brought in the lusty brawn
By old blue coated serving man.
Then the grim boar's head frowned on high.
Crested with bay and rosemary
Well can the green garbed ranger tell
How, when and where the monster fell,
What dogs before his death he tore
And all the baiting of the boar
The wassail round in good brown bowls
Garnished with ribbons, blithely trowls
There the huge sirloin reeked, hard by
Plum porridge stood and Christmas pie
Nor failed old Scotland to produce
At such high tide her savory goose
Then came the merry maskers in
And carols roared with blithesome din.
If unmelodious was the song
It was a hearty note and strong
Who lists may in their mumming see
Traces of ancient mystery.
White shirts supplied the masquerade,
And smutted cheeks the visors made.
But, oh, what maskers richly dight
Can boast of bosoms half so light?
England was merry England when
Old Christmas brought his sports again.
Twas Christmas broached the mightiest ale;
Twas Christmas told the merriest tale
A Christmas gambol oft would cheer
The poor man's heart through half the year

—Sir Walter Scott

AN UNORTHODOX CHRISTMAS.

I WENT to spend the day with Rose, and then
A Christmas greeting passed between us two.
But 'twas not "Peace on earth, good will to men"
We only said "Good morning!" "How d'ye do?"

AND then to her I offered smilingly
The present she expected me to bring
There were no hanging hose, no Christmas tree
The box was tied in paper with a string

WE didn't sit beside the Yule log's blaze
We just turned on the radiator's steam
And dinner, unlike those of storied days,
Gave no plum pudding, but some bisque ice cream.

WE didn't hear the church bells' solemn toll,
And when we had our Christmas evening lunch
We didn't have a steaming wassail bowl,
But just a jug of simple claret punch.

WE trampled on traditions, I suppose,
Yet one rite we observed with care—but, no;
Although I well remember kissing Rose,
It wasn't under the mistletoe.

—Life

The Giving of Gifts

If one is going to give a Christmas present it should be with a cheerful heart. If you can't give in this spirit do not give at all. We give presents to our friends at Christmas because they are our friends and because we derive pleasure from such giving. In the giving of Christmas presents there should be none of that spirit which suggests commercialism. There should never be any expectation of reciprocity. The giving of a Christmas present should be from the heart. The present itself counts for little. The spirit and motive which prompt the giving are all important.

CONSTANT CHRISTMAS.

Oh, never failing splendor,
Oh, never silent song.
Still keep the green earth tender,
Still keep the gray earth strong';

Still keep the brave earth dreaming
Of deeds that shall be done
While children's lives come streaming
Like sunbeams from the sun!

Oh, angels, sweet and splendid,
Throng in our hearts and sing
The wonders which attended
The coming of the King!

—Phillips Brooks

CHRISTMAS TIME.

PEACE and good will toward men!
Blest Christmas time
That brings to famished thousands a good meal,
While even those, immured in cells, that steal
From others—make their livelihood in crime—
Now sit at tables with the best of fare.
Children, unused to luxuries and joys,
Now have abundance, are e'en blessed with toys,
For did not Christ take such unto his care?
The laborer sick, his family hungry, cold,
Is now remembered; wood and coal and rent
And flour and meal and fowl to him are sent
By them that know the genuine use of gold,
Whose eyes have seen the shepherds watch by night,
Who've read the Sermon on the Mount aright

—Edward S. Creamer in Brooklyn Eagle.

A CHRISTMAS DREAM.

I DREAMED a dream one Christmas eve,
The strangest one, you may believe.
'Twas of a world divinely fair
Beyond the blue, far off, somewhere.
There grief and tears were all unknown,
And love supreme reigned on the throne.
Ah, such a joyful, gladsome world,
Where sorrow's bolts were never hurled!
Here faces gaunt with poverty
Deride the rich in mockery.
All equal there were each to each,
The best within a pauper's reach.
No surging, crushed, downtrodden masses;
No proud, elite or clan made classes;
No seasoned joys for just a few
In this fair realm beyond the blue;
No stalking want with piteous voice,
No poor to feed. All had their choice
Of that which seemeth just and good.
All things were rightly understood.
No broken hearts or racking pain;
No avaricious, blood bought gain;
No grasping, grinding, selfish greed
That other's welfare doth not heed
All things were perfect as the love
That ruled this spotless world above.

Were this sad world like to my dream
And love ruled all, its right supreme,
Ah, where the chance for kindly deeds?
Were there no poor to voice their needs,
Were such a state sublimely true,
Oh, where the good that we might do?
Were there no faces dewed with tears,
Where, then, the solace of the years?
If this world knew no grief, no care,
Could we our brother's burden share?
Ah, love would lose much of its worth
Were there no charity on earth!
Perhaps 'tis better as it is
Than live in realms of perfect bliss,
For out of evil cometh good
When God is rightly understood.
And since we live mid toil and care
And not in halcyon dreams somewhere
Uplift and help thy fellow man
And do the greatest good you can
To make this world like that above,
Controlled and swayed by Christly love.

DAD AND MOTHER AND ME

NOBODY'S like old Santa Claus
With his red and jolly face.
There's not another around the globe
Can travel so swift a pace.
His twinkling eyes and his merry laugh,
His chuckle of bubbling glee—
Nobody else is so dear by half
To dad and mother and me.

HE doesn't forget the baby sweet
As she rocks in her cradle white
He has time to wait for the lagging feet
Of the old by candlelight.
He has gifts and gifts for the young and gay,
Who encircle the Christmas tree,
And he has the love to his latest day
Of dad and mother and me.

THE frost is chill in the nipping blast,
Smooth is the icy mere.
The short, fleet days go hurrying past
To the last of the waning year
And never was rose of the summer's prime
So royally fair to see
As the rose that blooms in the winter's rime
For dad and mother and me
—Collier's Weekly

What of Your Christmas Spirit?

The spirit of Christmas, as the idealists have it, is not recognizable by the real thing, according to modern methods.

Theoretically everything is bright, gay, full of peace for oneself and good wishes for the rest of the world.

Actually Christmas may mean anything like this:

Grudging giving and discontented receiving.

Splurging on one's rich friends and stinting where it is not likely to count.

Overgenerosity to the point of extravagance.

Rushing until you detest Christmas and everything connected with it.

Overworked nerves and overwrought tempers from a false conception of Christmas giving

A generous spirit for your own immediate circle and utter indifference to whether any one else has a happy day.

Gorging oneself in the interest of Christmas cheer with no thought of a tortured digestion and rockiness of the day after.

A Christmas with not one thought to the real meaning of the day and what the world would have been had there been no "birthday of a king" to celebrate.

THE CHRISTMAS LOVER.

'TIS love that makes the stars revolve;
'Tis love that makes the world go round.
This Christmas purpose I resolve
On earth to make love more abound.
On me, dear maid, thy love bestow
And match my full heart's overflow.

NOR gems nor gear to thee I bring,
Nor gauds nor merchandises rare.
Love's offerings I may not sing,
But love itself I have to spare
In boundless store, and all for thee,
If but thy heart responds to me.
—Life.

The Perennial Complaint.

"Now, my dear," said Mr. Younghusband to the partner of his joys, who was about to start forth on Christmas shopping bent, "get presents for all the family-in-law and buy a nice lot of things for the boys, but don't spend more than $100. We must live within our income."

"Why, George," replied the lady in an aggrieved tone, "you told me we had $200 this month you know you did."

And Mr. Younghusband only sighed

Not Nervous.

Hubbard—Simpkins has got over his nervous prostration. Pease—How can you tell? Hubbard—Why, I met him last night and he wanted to borrow £20.—London Telegraph.

A Question.

Tommy—Father, isn't the world older than it used to be? Father—Certainly it is, my son! Tommy—Then what do people mean by talking about "old times"?

Subbubs—I believe the only solution to the servant girl question is to engage men of all work.

Henpeckke—I guess that's right. Men are used to being bossed.—Philadelphia Record.

C. O. D.

"I feel that I have an important message for the world," declared the young man.

"Send it collect," advised the practical friend.—Buffalo Express.

"He says he's boss likes to show his wife that he's clothed in authority."

"All I can say is that he's a pretty poor dresser."—Town Topics.

Around the Circle.

"In my time," declared grandma, "girls were more modest."

"I know," said the flippant girl. "It was a fad once. We may get back to it."—Kansas City Journal.

THE OLDEN MISTLETOE RITE.

Origin of Present Use of the Classic Plant.

The druids at Yuletide used to cut the mistletoe to place upon their altars with elaborate ceremonies. Their name for it was all heal or all healing. There was a large procession, headed by the druidical priests, with bards singing canticles and hymns; then a herald preceded three druids, furnished with implements for severing the sacred plant, then the prince or chief of the druids, accompanied by all his followers.

The chief mounted the oak and with a golden knife detached the mistletoe and presented it to the priest, who received and bore away the branches with great reverence. Two white bulls were sacrificed during the rite.

On the first day of the new year the branches after resting on the altars in the interval were distributed among the people as a sacred and holy plant, the druid priest crying, "The mistletoe for the New Year." Just when the mistletoe became known as the "kissing bush" is not known.

A Mistletoe Romance

LAST night I went to call on Eulalie,
On Eulalie, the fairest maid I know
(That is, excepting Imogene and Clare),
And as her coming down I did await
I spied, low hanging from the chandelier,
A sprig of brightsome holly, all aglow,
Which half concealed a bright, contrasting spray
Thick jeweled with the pearls of mistletoe.
Then suddenly resolve leaped to my mind,
A wild resolve and one extremely bold—
To wit, that though I'd known her but six years,
If she should chance beneath that chandelier
To pause, I should at once assert the right,
The ancient right of joyous Christmas tide,
And strive to kiss her.
Lo, the maiden came,
With welcome smile and outstretched gladding hand,
To where I stood expectant. She advanced
Until, unconscious and serene, she stood
Directly 'neath the shining mistletoe,
And, though with trepidation in my heart,
I kept my pledge unto myself and did
The daring deed.
Sweet moments followed; then
While startled she sought refuge in my arms.
But brief the joy, for then from underneath
A davenport her little brother crawled
And cried: "Say, sis, I told you so, you know
I bet he'd bite. Pay up"— But quick she led Him by the ear unto the door and out.
What did the rascal mean? I do not know.
Nor do I care for such things—I'm engaged.

An Unfortunate Oversight.

"Bless me!" said the thoughtless man,
"Isn't this unpleasant!
I haven't bought my mother-in-law
A single Christmas present."

HE BEAUTIFUL SANTA MYTH

on't Undeceive the Little Ones Abou St. Nick.

If your daughter is just six or seve ears old and you are beginning to fe our conscience pinch you at deceivin er any longer with the beautiful myt f Santa Claus, just silence that con cience and wait until she finds out th ruth for herself.

If your daughter has any illusion eft in this day of disillusion, let he eep them. She will feel more resent ment toward you for sha[illegible] han she will for deceiving her. Y o not think it necessary to tell you rownup girl all the things you hav iscovered about love and matrimon nd thereby terminate her dreams tha those myths are all they seem to be to you?

After all, the sweetest part of a girl life from babyhood up is the drean part. Some day she will find out tha there is no Santa Claus, and then sh will find out that there are no fairies and then she will find out that romance doesn't last, and then that matrimony has its thorns, and then that women grow old, but why open her eyes to these things?

Let a child believe in Santa Claus just as long as he or she will and pluck the delicious fruit from the mythical Christmas tree to her heart's content. It is bad enough to discover the sawdust in the doll of life when it begins to fall out without being told about it when you thought it was really flesh and blood.

If any mother's conscience is troubling her about the Christmas fib telling just now, let her sit down and try to remember that awful day when she first discovered that there was no Santa Clans, and that conscience will shut up tight and never open its mouth again.

Christmas by any other name,
Would pinch ypur aslary just the same.

Church Bells Call You

HOW many of us attend church on Christmas day? And why not? Of all the days in all the year Christmas is the most appropriate for one to go to church and unite with his neighbors and friends in giving thanks and praise unto him who died that you and I should live. Christmas is his birthday, and above all things one should hear a short sermon and offer a prayer of thanks for the fortunes that the past has showered on him and ask forgiveness of all sins. One should go to church feeling that it is a pleasure and a privilege and not consider it a duty. It will furnish inspiration that will make one capable of better enjoying the day and at nightfall be a great deal happier.

Devonshire's Yule Log.

In Devonshire the Yule log was represented by the "Ashton fagot," which was brought in and burned with great glee. The fagot was composed entirely of ash timber, hooped round with nine bands, and while it burnt merrily on the spacious hearth sports and fun were the order of the night. For every crack which the bursting of the hoops made the master of the house was expected to furnish a fresh bowl of liquor.

Tiny Tim said: "God bless us, one and all."

Appropriate Christmas Presents.

"Have you decided on your presents for the boys yet, my dear?" asked Mr Hendricks after the lads had left the breakfast table for school.

"Not quite all. But I have decided, William, that they shall all be given something useful. There is no use in wasting money on useless toys for them to break. And, by the way, we need a new rug for the parlor and a dozen tumblers, William."

"Ah, well, why not get the rug for George and give the tumblers to John?"

FOR MILADY'S PURSE.

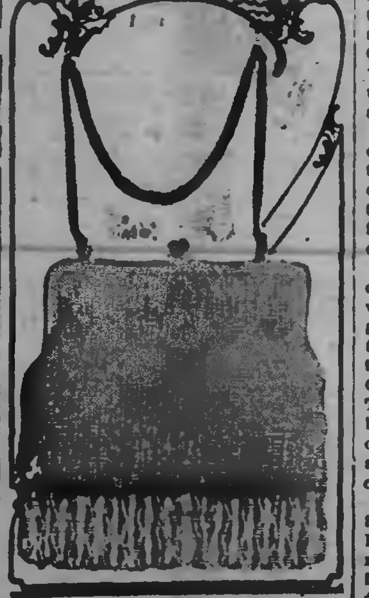
Beaded Bags Make Attractive and Handsome Holiday Remembrances.

The beaded bag shown here is in gray and silver mounted on a silver frame. Beaded effects are very popular, and bags of this sort make acceptable tokens for women of all ages.

Beaded bags, with white background squared off with gold and silver beads and with a rose of green and red at the intersections of the gold and silver lines, have gilt clasps.

Small silver mesh purses, with chased clasps, provided with a finger ring and a smaller ring so that they can be worn on a chain, are shown with silver tassels at the three points of the triangular shaped lower edge.

In needlework beads used in place of French knots give a very up to date touch to a design. They may be used as centers or as filling for petals. In the latter case a cord outlining is often seen. For the table padded doilies covered with glass beads are preferred to all other kinds by women who like to combine beauty with utility.



BEADED BAG.

The forefinger ring is supposed to be excessively oriental, and the more huge the ring the more one's hand resembles—it is presumed—the hand of a maharajah or an Indian princess. These forefinger rings are usually set with one large cabochon stone or a single pearl surrounded by smaller stones.

Of course a genuine pearl large enough to form the center of such a ring would be worth a maharajah's ransom, but no stigma attaches itself to the imitation pearl these days, and some of these near pearls are really marvelous in their color and luster. Such a pearl, set in a ring of small diamonds or rubies, makes a beautiful ring.

Not What He Felt.

Jules, twelve years old and from "seacoast, nookful Normandy," came on a visit to friends in this country. He struggled manfully with the difficulties of a language which did not always mean what it said. One day he sat looking very sad. He missed his boats and the fishermen and his adored sea.

"Are you homesick, Jules?" he was asked.

"No. It is not that I am homesick," he replied. "I am—what you call—seasick."—New York Post.

CHRISTMAS IN GERMANY.

A Day of Cheeriness and Happiness Thoroughout the Fatherland.

The German Christmas has local differences in various provinces. The Christmas tree is universal, for this is its home. At many places the whole family go to early service, at 5 or 6 o'clock, as the custom may be, and in some parts of the country every one carries a lighted candle. These candles, placed on the backs of the pews, sometimes make the only light in the church. At some places when the clock strikes 12 on Christmas eve the bells ring and every house and church is quickly lighted up.

Christmas is a day of cheeriness and happiness throughout Germany. The presents are usually simple. Men and angels and many kinds of creatures are fashioned in gingerbread. It is twisted into many grotesque shapes, and sometimes it is guilded. Hans Christian Andersen's story of the "Honeybread Soldier" will be better understood by any one who has spent a Christmas in Germany.

In Hanover, just when the candles on the Christmas tree are dying out, there will be a mysterious rap on the door and a bundle will be thrown into the room. It contains a little present for every member of the family and comic verses for some of them.

In Oberammergau there is a more distinctly religious tone given to the whole holiday. The Christ Child is the guardian angel of the time. It is he, they say, who brings the Christmas tree. He comes down from heaven on Christmas eve, holding it in his hands. Two angels bearing presents fly before him and two behind. He puts the tree on the table, rings a bell and flies away. He brings a blessing to the children that have been obedient.

To the children of Oberammergau St. Nicholas is an angel in disguise. He goes about from house to house in ragged clothes and with a bag on his back. He gives a loud knock at the door and asks, "Are the children good?" If the answer is "Yes" he leaves fruits and candies. If the answer is "No" he leaves a stick.

The Christmas Spirit.

Christmas is a good institution, be it examined from any angle. The Christmas spirit is one to foster and encourage. It means unselfishness, charity, peace, liberality, good cheer, all desirable traits in themselves and all tending to make the world a better place.

While the Christmas holiday is a Christian institution in name, no one religion holds a monopoly of the Christmas spirit. It is common to all religions. It means a striving to make others happier, an effort to better conditions for mankind. It means sharing your good fortune, no matter how small the portions may be. It is the essence of the Golden Rule.

While one can do much good to others by the radiation of the Christmas spirit, the greatest good is done to oneself. No man can bestow a gift, either material or spiritual, on another without benefiting himself. He must elevate himself by the exercise of the emotions that Christmas calls forth, and this elevation must be more or less permanent. No man can be much different one day in the year from what he is the other 364 days.

So blessed be the spirit of Christmas! Exercise it during the closing days of December and you can't help but be the better for it, and you can't help but continue its benevolent influence during the months that follow.

MERRY CHRISTMAS

Christmas All Year.

A spirit of generosity pervades the Yuletide atmosphere. It is known and practiced at no other season of the year as at Christmas. It is felt in every city, in every town, in every village, in the entire country.

People are prone to be more thoughtful. Men manifest desires to spread good cheer; women weave little acts of love, kindness and devotion into Christmas good will; children cherish their companions and fortunes. Persons unconsciously instill into each other a desire to distribute happiness everywhere. It all comes on the wings of that indefinable thing understood by few, but referred to by many as the Christmas spirit. It is invisible, but can be seen; it is not material, but can be felt. It comes every Christmas, but too often leaves to return perhaps next year, when the real holiday spirit again is felt.

Why does this fellowship of love and good will depart from the souls of so many persons on the wings of time? Why does not the same spirit remain in the atmosphere after men again assume their routine of work and women become normal after their Christmas cares and worries?

Would it not be a good thing if this same Christmas spirit could continue throughout the twelve months of the year? Would it not be a good thing for mankind if all stopped to think of others as they do during the Yuletide season, if all endeavored to fill the lives of their friends, acquaintances and the less fortunate with good cheer and happiness throughout winter and summer, spring and autumn?

Try this for next year. Make it one of your resolutions, and if one resolves to do all in his power to make others happy throughout the entire twelve months no other resolutions will be necessary to assure one of happiness. After all is said and done the only real happiness is derived from making others happy.

"Just Watch Me!"

THOUGH the children call me Santa
And I'm growing rather old,
I am not too old for kisses,
And my heart is never cold.
I've long known about the meaning
Of the sprig of mistletoe
When a maiden's found beneath it
With her lips all puckered—so.
I have found the dainty maiden
Just as sweet as maid can be,
And as I collect the tribute
You may watch and envy me.

A GIFT.

WHAT shall I send you for Christmas, dear?
What can a penniless rimester send
But the wish that when skies are filled with gloom
For you blithe April buds may bloom
And that every throb of the heart of you
May whisper of days when the skies were blue?

What shall I send you for Christmas, sweet?
What can a friendless minstrel send
But the prayer that, when days drag drear and long
Your heart will sing snatches of sweetest song
And that every flake of the Yuletide's snow
May speak of the dreams of the long ago?

What shall I send you for Christmas, my own?
What can a lonely darling send
But the wish that when life grows dark and chill
The roses of summer may bloom for you still
And in moods when the fond old dreams still cling to you
That the birds may return, my sweet, and sing to you?

—Irving Dillon in Life.

The fish story is losing none of its pristine vitality. A catfish was caught in Kentucky wearing a pair of spectacles which an estimable citizen some time before had lost overboard.

The Illinois board of health has declared that no more talcum powder shall be used in chop suey. We had never supposed that those who ate chop suey cared what was in it.

CHRISTMAS COMMENTS

The baldheaded man is flattered when his little son presents him with a hairbrush.

Soldiers are never so poor at Christmas time that they cannot present arms.

The first Christmas present any man should buy is a set of receipted bills for himself from all his creditors.

The proper kind of holiday presents for men in responsible positions where nerves and patience are tried to the uttermost is presence of mind.

Beginning with the glad New Year the dime museums hope to have on exhibition the man who never gave a Christmas present from a sense of duty.

The crabbed bachelor member of the family who with a spurt of generosity purchased for the children the long, resonant Christmas horns will have soon completed the task of kicking himself into the glad New Year.

A few weeks ago a woman wrote a letter to a newspaper, in which she said, "If I could get money how I would make people's hearts bound with joy!" A rich uncle presented her with $100 on Christmas day, and the seal skin sack she bought with the money made a number of people's hearts bound with envy.

Go Home for Christmas

STOP at this busy Christmas season and think for a moment of the folks back home. Consider how much happier they will be if you are with them on this Christmas day. Perhaps your parents are getting very old now—perhaps they have only a few more Christmases to spend here. Certainly your presence at the old home place would add greatly to their joy. Think of the days when you were a child—of the Christmases, now gone forever, when your father and mother did so much to make you happy. A man's mother is the best friend he ever had or ever can have. One owes it to her to spend Christmas at her side and to devote the day to making her happy. But if we have no mother what would be prettier, what sentiment or act could be more beautiful, than to visit her grave and make it green with wreaths and flowers on Christmas day?

CHRISTMAS MOTTOES.

Every one knows that a fitting sentiment to go with a gift greatly enhances its value. Here is a very old one, which is appropriate for nearly every individual, and is consequently a safe one to use; it is in the quaint old spelling, which is attractive in fancy lettering:

All jois and jollitie wait on thy holidays
Crue love and friendlinesse
Hallow thy happinesse.

One a little more sentimental goes well with flowers on a plant:

Fond thoughts and constant prayers I send thee free,
Like flowers, along the pathway thou must tread,
Grateful and glad if haply they may shed
Some fragrance to refresh and comfort thee.

The last one, which is by Tennyson, is beautiful inscribed in a book or to go with a calendar:

The time draws near the birth of Christ;
The moon is hid; the night is still;
The Christmas bells from hill to hill
Answer each other in the mist.

The Day After Christmas.

A graceful finish is one of the most essential touches of any successful venture. The pianist does not drop his hands abruptly from the keys as soon as he has played the last note, but holds them there a moment longer until the music dies away. Diners out would be indignant if the table were whisked clean the moment the last mouthful was swallowed. They find the lingering on a little while over the coffee and nuts most delightful.

Christmas is too beautiful and too solemn a festival to drop in this hasty fashion the moment the clock strikes midnight, for any occasion which needs especial preparation also needs an adequate closing, and particularly is this true of those things whose value lies in sentiment.

There are many things to be done after Christmas. There are letters to be written, houses to be put in order, gifts to be arranged, and every one of the countless details may be done either with grace or without it. In the theater the final curtain falls with fitting dignity or appropriate gayety. It has all been a play; but, even so, the actors do not walk off after the last word is said and allow the stage hands to rush on. That would offend the mood of the audience. How much truer this is of something which is not a play, but a very real part of life!

The days after Christmas should be as mystical in their way as were the days before Christmas. The ornaments that decked the tree should be put away with the same care and pleasure with which they were brought out, the greens taken down with the same merriment that accompanied their going up. The afterglow is sometimes the most beautiful part of the sunset, and sometimes it is even more beautiful than the sunset itself.

The worst thing you can do for some men is praise them.

"Santa didn't bring me nofin!"

UTILITY GIFTS.

They May Be as Charming and as Dainty as One Can Make Them.

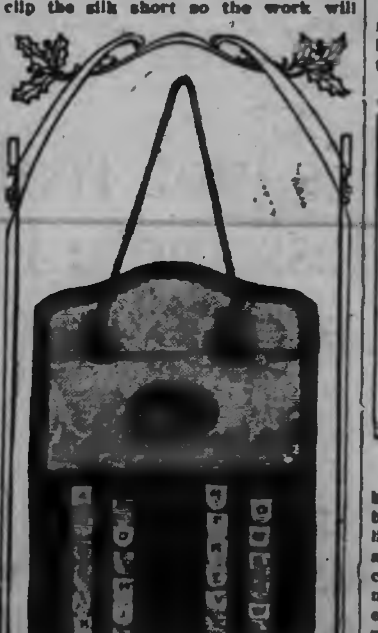
A useful and attractive gift for the housekeeper is a handy telephone directory like the one shown here. This one was made of fancy silk and moire, with a fancy braid around the edges.

A tiny picture cut out of tapestry and framed in braid adorned the front of the pad. Underneath each of the little flaps alphabetically marked was a white space for recording the names and numbers of those most frequently called up over the phone.

Very small details, which seem of little importance, often mar or make more beautiful a piece of handiwork, so it is always wise to heed the little things.

Never knot the thread. Fasten it by running it in the cloth or by sewing over and over in some portion of the design that is to be covered by the work.

Finish in the same way and always clip the silk short so the work will present a neat appearance. If knots are used the finished work will have a rough look.



TELEPHONE DIRECTORY.

When working with silk it is imperative to have a sharp needle and smooth thimble, for a rough thimble will rough the silk, and it is impossible to do good work with a bent or dull needle.

A pair of small sharp scissors should always be used to cut the thread or a ragged appearance will be the result when the work is finished.

The busy Christmas giver who has not time to make gifts or take an extensive shopping tour might step into a bookstore and select some neatly bound volumes whose contents would be appreciated by the recipient. This shopping can be done quickly.

Smiths In England.

In England the Smiths are the most numerous of all families. But in Ireland they are content to rank fifth, after Murphy, Kelly, Sullivan and Walsh.

Economic Defense.

"Why don't women dress sensibly?"

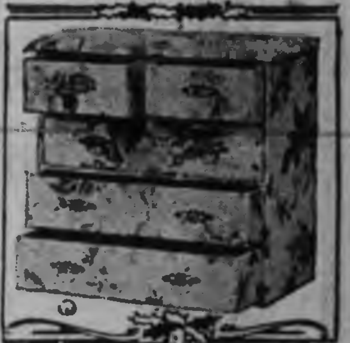
"If they did half the industries of the world would go to smash."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

LINENS AND CRETONNES.

They Make Durable and Attractive Favors For the Yuletide Season.

Cretonne or linen may be made up into many attractive gifts. Boxes covered with it are not only handsome but useful Christmas tokens. Ordinary pasteboard boxes may be covered with the material and lined with a plain fabric to match the color in the pattern of the cretonne, or the boxes may be cut up and put together again to form any odd or pretty shapes which the maker may devise. The miniature cabinet illustrated here was made in that way. The separate pieces in this case were covered with the material and then stitched together to form drawers, while a large flat box was taken apart, covered and then joined to make the cabinet. The edges were finished with a narrow braid. Crystal buttons instead of the tiny brass handles may be used on the drawers if more convenient. This may be used as a trinket box.

An ordinary cardboard collar box may be turned into a thing of real beauty if it is covered with linen. It then becomes a delightfully artistic box for a man's collars. The cardboard "flaps" must be taken off the lid, and these will not be required again. Now the box itself must be carefully taken to pieces. Each piece must be covered with linen previously embroidered in ribbon work and the inner sides lined with sateen. When you have covered and lined each piece of cardboard they must each one be neatly stitched together to form the box. The box can be finished off round its edges with a narrow silk cord.



TRINKET CABINET.

Many men appreciate the gift of a little pocket pincushion, and delightful ones may be made of heart shaped pieces of cardboard, size about 2¼ by 2 inches. The pincushion should be covered with satin, upon which little pansies and a motto are worked.

A REAL SANTA CLAUS.

SANTA CLAUS, I hang for you
By the mantel stockings two—
One for me and one to go
To another boy I know.

There's a chimney in the town
You have never traveled down.
Should you chance to enter there
You would find a room all bare;
Not a stocking could you spy,
Matter not how you would try;
And the shoes you'd find are such
As no boy would care for much.

In a broken bed you'd see
Some one just about like me
Dreaming of the pretty toys
Which you bring to other boys,
And to him a Christmas seems
Merry only in his dreams.

All he dreams, then, Santa Claus,
Stuff the stockings with, because
When it's filled up to the brim
I'll be Santa Claus to him!

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

"Dine with me tonight," urged Hewitt.

"I'll tell you what. See that Italian over there with the statues? I am going to buy him out, and if I don't make a sale in half an hour I'll sign the dinner checks."

"Done!"

"I'll take half of that bet," said Cathewe, rising. "It will be cheap."

Ten minutes later the two older men saw Fitzgerald hang the tray from his shoulders and take his position on the corner.

"I love that chap, Hewitt; he is what I always wanted to be, but couldn't be." Cathewe pulled the drooping ends of his mustache. "Heaven on earth, will you look! A policeman is arguing with him."

"But I bought him out," protested Fitzgerald. "There's no law to prevent my selling these."

"Oh, I'm wise. We want no horseplay on this corner; no joyful college stunts," roughly.

Fitzgerald saw that frankness must be his card, so he played it. "Look here. Do you see those two gentlemen in the window there?"

"The club?"

"Yes. I made a wager that I could sell one of these statues in half an hour. If you force me off I'll lose a dinner."

"Well, I'll make a bargain with you. You can stand here for half an hour, but if you open your mouth to a woman I'll run you in. No fooling; I'm talking straight. I'm going to see what your game is."

"I agree."

So the policeman turned to his crossing and reassumed his authority over traffic, all the while never losing sight of the impromptu vender.

Many pedestrians paused. To see a well dressed young man hawking plaster Venuses was no ordinary sight. They knew that some play was going on, but with that inveterate suspicion of the city pedestrian none of them stopped to speak or buy. Some news boys gathered round and offered a few suggestions. Fitzgerald gave them back in kind.

Once he turned to see if his friends were still watching him. They were, two among many, for the exploit had gone round, and there were other wagers being laid on the result. While his head was turned and his grin was directed at the club window a handsome young woman in blue came along. She paused, touched her lips with her gloved hand meditatingly and then went right about face swiftly. Some one in the window motioned frantically to the vender, but he did not understand. Ten minutes left in which to win his bet. He hadn't made a very good bargain. Hm! The young woman in blue was stopping. Her exquisite face was perfectly serious as her eyes ran over the collection on the tray. They were all done execrably, something Fitzgerald hadn't noticed before.

"How much are these apiece?"

"Er—25 cents, ma'am," he stammered. As a matter of fact he hadn't any idea what the current price list was.

"You seem very well dressed," doubtfully, "and you do not look hungry."

"I am doing this for charity's sake," finding his wits. The policeman hovered near, scowling. He was powerless, since the young woman had spoken first.

"I will take this Canova, I believe," she finally decided, opening her purse and producing the necessary silver. "Of course, it is quite impossible to send this?"

"Yes, ma'am. Sending it would eat up all the profits." But with ill concealed eagerness, "If you will leave your address I can send as many as you like."

"I will do that."

Incredible as it seemed, neither face lost its repose: he dared not smile, and the young woman did not care to. There was something familiar to his memory in the oval face, but this was no time for a diligent search.

"Hey, miss," yelled one of the newsboys, "you're t'rowin' your money away. He's a fake; he ain't no statoo seller. He's doing it for a joke!"

Fitzgerald lost a little color, that was all. But his customer ignored the imputation. She took out a card and laid it on the tray, and without further ado went serenely on her way. The policeman stepped toward her as if to speak, but she turned her delicate head aside. The crowd engulfed her presently, and Fitzgerald picked up the card. There was neither name nor definite address on it. It was a message, hastily written, and it sent a thrill of delight and speculation to his impressionable heart. Still carrying the tray before him, he hastened over to the club, where there was something of an ovation. Instead of a dinner for three it became one for a dozen, and Fitzgerald passed the statuettes round as souvenirs of the most unique bet of the year. There were lively times. Toward midnight, as Fitzgerald was going out of the coat room, Cathewe spoke to him.

"What was her name, Jack?"

"Hanged if I know."

"She dropped a card on your tray."

Fitzgerald scrubbed his chin. "There wasn't any name on it. There was an address and something more. Now, wait a moment, Arthur; this is no ordinary affair. I would not show it to any one else. Here, read it yourself."

Come to the house at the top of the hill in Dalton tomorrow night at 8 o'clock. But do not come if you lack courage.

That was all. Cathewe ran a finger, comb fashion, through his mustache. He almost smiled.

"Where the deuce is Dalton?" Fitzgerald inquired.

"It is a little village on the New Jersey coast; not more than forty houses, postoffice, hotel and general store; perhaps an hour out of town."

"What would you do in my place? It may be a joke, and then again it may not. She knew that I was a rank impostor."

"But she knew that a man must have a certain kind of daredevil courage to play the game you played. Well, you ask me what I should do in your place. I'd go."

"I shall. It will double discount fishing. And the more I think of it, the more certain I become that she and I have met somewhere. By-by!"

Cathewe lingered in the reading room, pondering. Here was a twist to the wager he was rather unprepared for, and if the truth must be told, he was far more perplexed than Fitzgerald. He knew the girl, but he did not know and could not imagine what purpose she had in aiding Fitzgerald to win his wager or luring him out to an obscure village in this detective story manner.

SHE TOOK OUT A CARD AND LAID IT ON THE TRAY.

"Well, I shall hear all about it from her father," he concluded.

And all in good time he did.

CHAPTER IV.

PIRATES AND PRIVATE SECRETARIES.

IT was a little station made gloomy by a single light. Once in so often a fast train stopped, if properly flagged. Fitzgerald, feeling wholly unromantic, now that he had arrived, dropped his handbag on the damp platform and took his bearings. It was after sundown. The sea, but a few yards away, was a murmuring, heaving blackness, save where here and there a wave broke. The wind was chill, and there was the hint of a storm coming down from the northeast.

"Any hotel in this place?" he asked of the ticket agent, the telegraph operator and the baggageman, who was pushing a crate of vegetables off a truck.

"Swan's hotel; only one."

"Do people sleep and eat there?"

"If they have good digestions."

"Much obliged. Is there a house hereabouts called the top o' the hill?"

"Come over here," said the agent. "See that hill back there, quarter of a mile above the village; those three lights? Well, that's it. They usually have a carriage down here when they're expecting any one."

"Who owns it?"

"Old Admiral Killigrew. Didn't you know it?"

"Oh, Admiral Killigrew; yes, of course. I'm not a guest. Just going up there on business. Worth about ten millions, isn't he?"

"That and more. There's his yacht in the harbor. Oh, he could burn up the village, pay the insurance, and not even knock down the quality of his cigars. He's the best old chap out. None of your red faced, yo-hoing, growling seadogs; just a kindly, generous old sailor, with only one bee in his bonnet."

"What sort of bee?"

"Pirates!" in a ghostly whisper.

"Pirates? Oh, say, now!" with a protest.

"Straight as a die. He's got the finest library on piracy in the world, everything from the 'Pirates of Penzance' to 'The Life of Morgan.'"

"But there's no pirate afloat these days."

"Not on the high seas, no. It's just the old man's pastime. Every so often he coals up the yacht, which is a seventeen knotter, and goes off to the south seas, hunting for treasures."

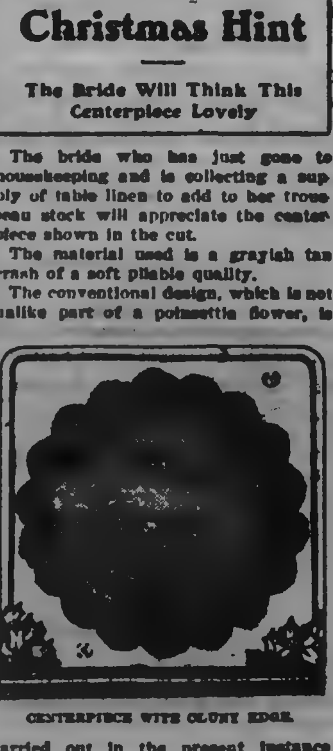
Christmas Hint

The Bride Will Think This Centerpiece Lovely

The bride who has just gone to housekeeping and is collecting a supply of table linen to add to her trousseau stock will appreciate the centerpiece shown in the cut.

The material used is a grayish tan crash of a soft pliable quality.

The conventional design, which is not unlike part of a poinsettia flower, is carried out in the present instance with shaded embroidery silks in delft blues, but to get the holiday spirit into the gift Christmas shades of red might be used with fine effect.



CENTERPIECE WITH CLUNY EDGE.

The lace edging of the centerpiece is of cluny colored to match the linen.

THE NEW BRIDGE ROSS AT DALHOUSIE STREET

Shows a Better Location and One More Convenient For all Traffic.

Several east ward ratepayers who are employed in the factories in the south district of the city called in to commend the position taken by The Review that the new bridge was not needed at Dalhousie St., nearly so much as further down the river and at what was known for so many years as Hospital Point, taking its name from the fact that the temporary buildings put up to shelter the people affected at the time of the ship fever and smallpox epidemic in 1866, were built at where McDonald's mill now stands. In fact on the earlier surveys of the town plot a bridge is indicated at this point as the narrowest part of the river and at a place well adapted to serve the needs of people coming in from the townships east of the river.

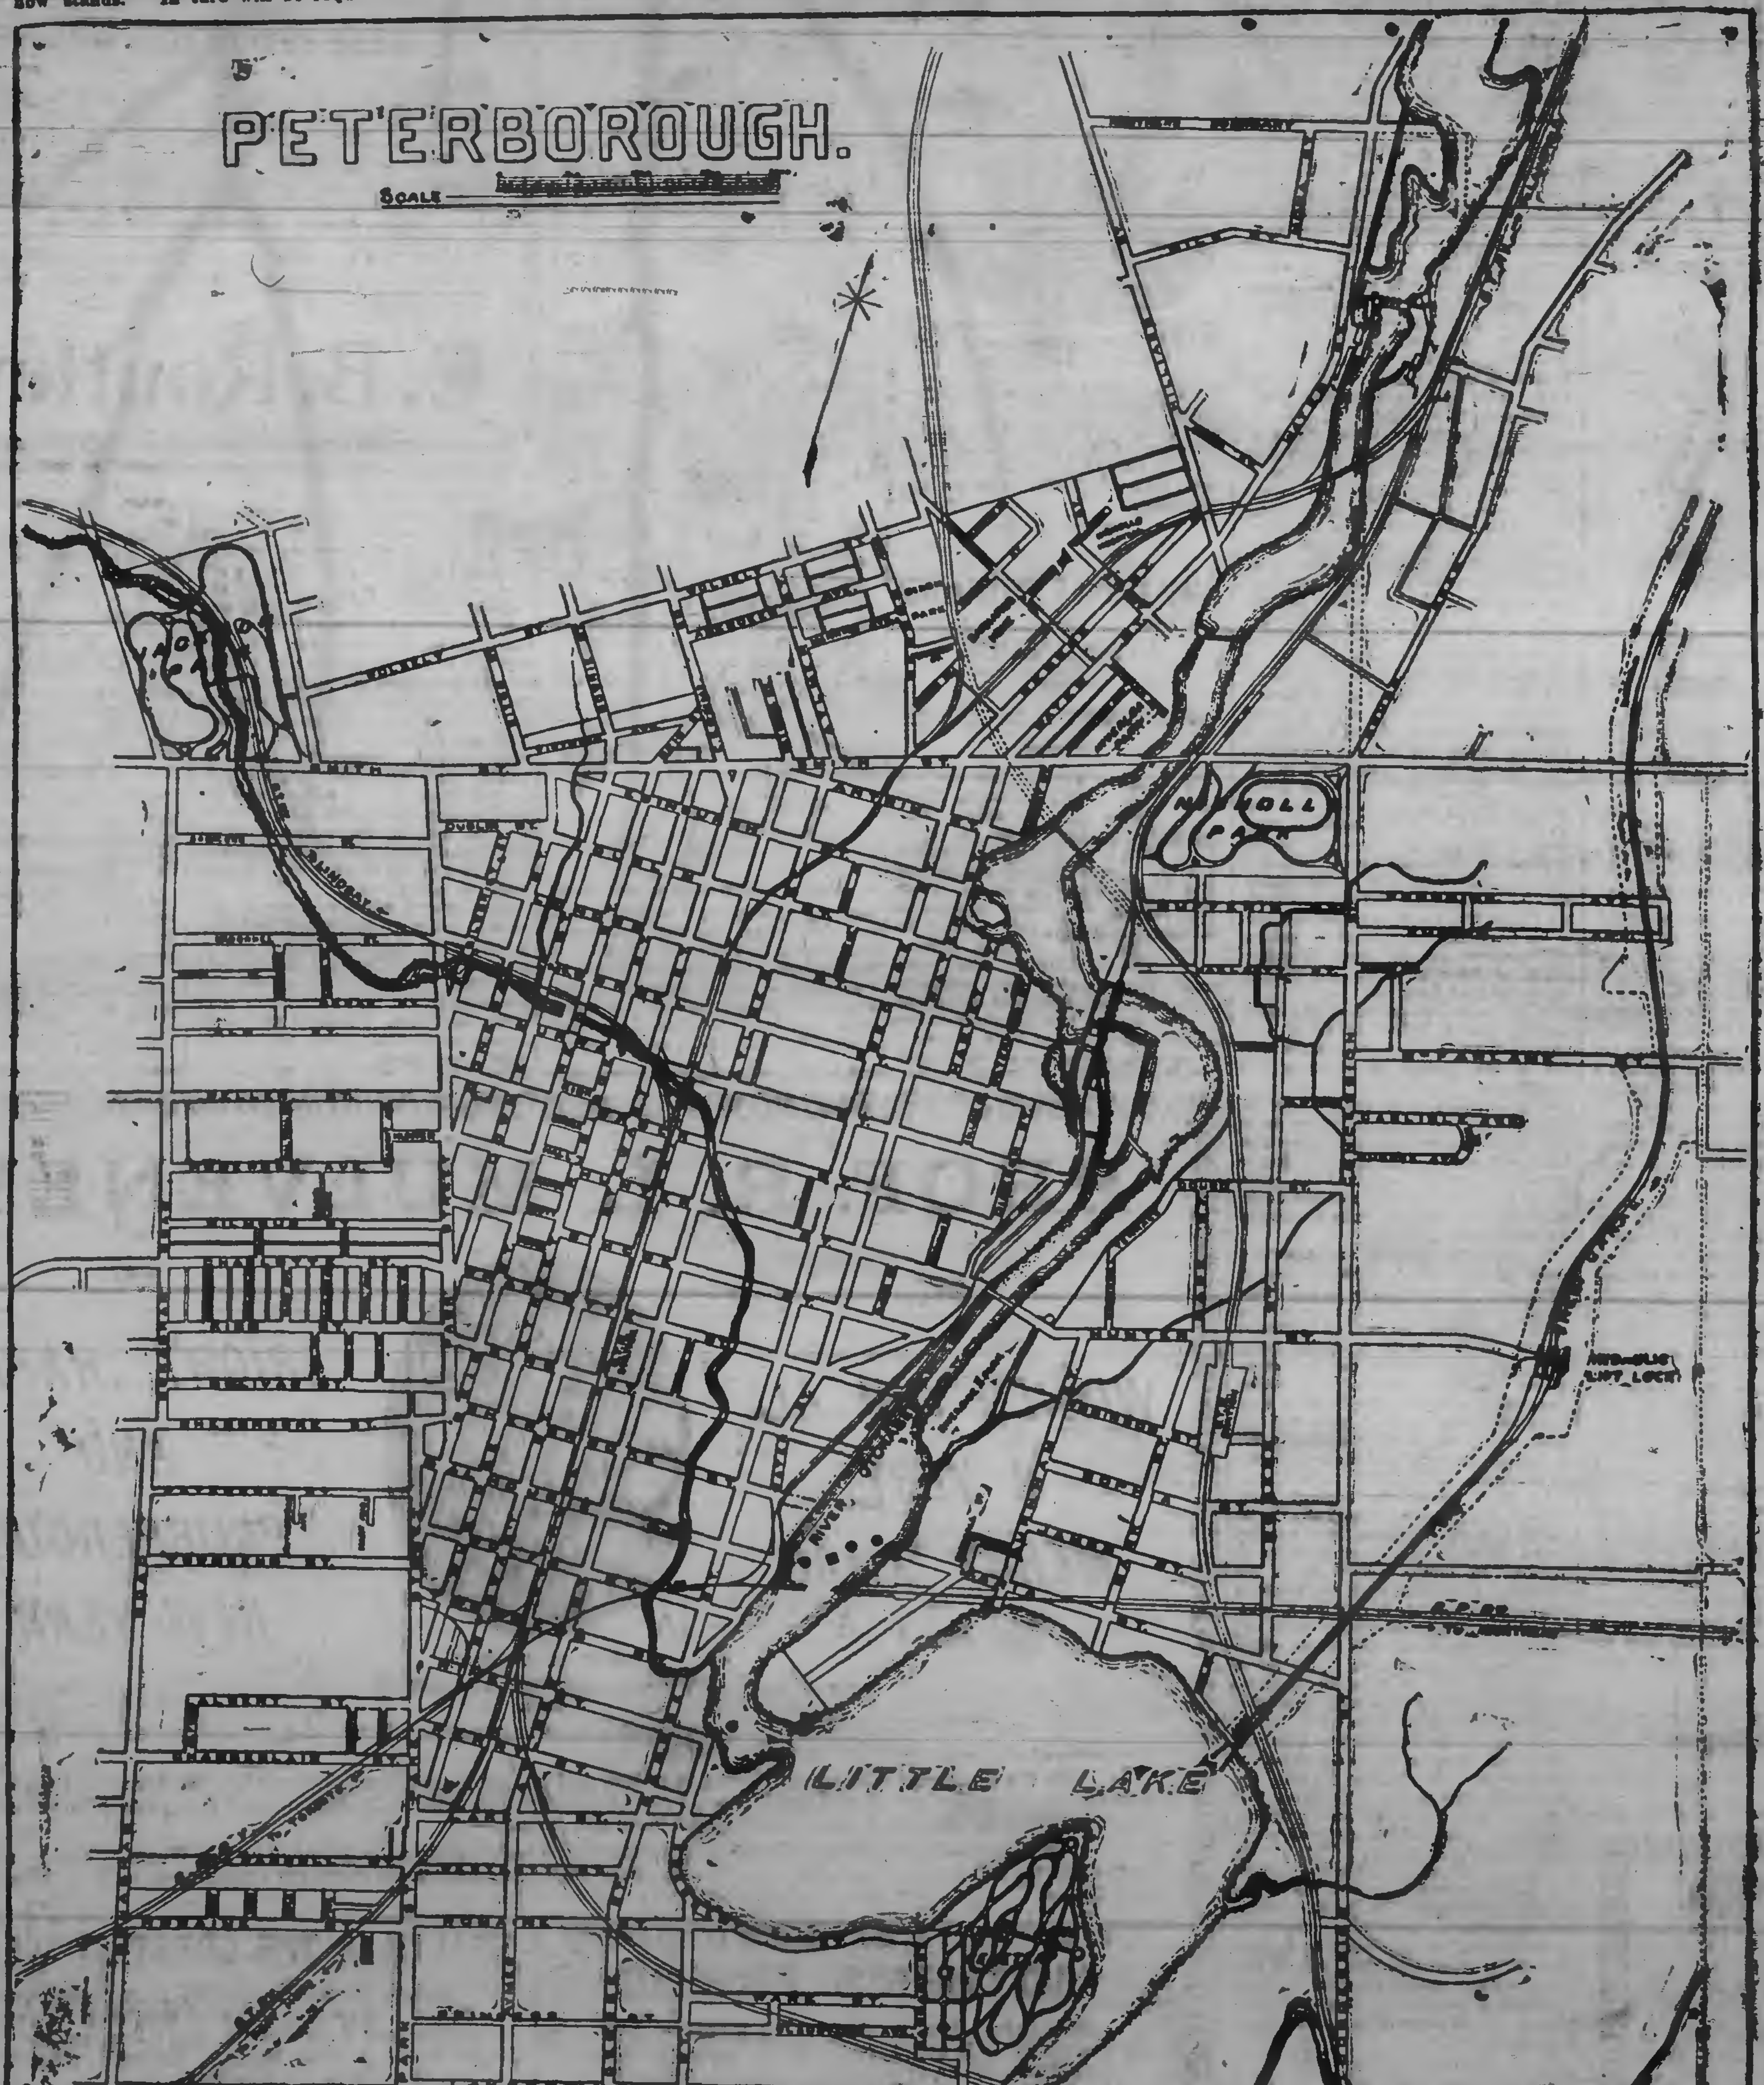
That the ratepayers may see for themselves we print a map of the city. Comparatively few ratepayers have maps or plans and the print may be cut out for future reference.

It will be seen that at the Dalhousie Street crossing the river is much wider than at the point, hence a very much more expensive structure will be required.

Along Burnham's Point a street reservation is already provided, and Rink Street on the west side is open to the point where a bridge would rest on the shore pier. Beyond doubt the bridge could be erected as a high level bridge, doing away with the necessity for a swing and consequent piers on which to stand and swing. The cost would be easily cut in half.

It may be repeated that a very serious objection to the Dalhousie Street proposition is the fact that all the shunting and making up of freight trains to and from the new C. P. R. sheds will be done across the section of street leading to the approach to the bridge. The locality will necessarily be a dangerous one for pedestrians and doubly so for vehicular traffic. This danger is a thing that the Municipality should try to avoid, not to make. By carrying the bridge to the location at the point all this will be avoided, while the section of East City to the south will be equally or better served.

Before entertaining the bridge question seriously the Council might instruct the City Engineer to prepare a rough estimate of the cost of putting up such a bridge, both for highway traffic and eventually for street railway purposes. With these facts before the committee, some idea can be had of the comparative cost, and in submitting a by-law the ratepayers could be asked to express opinion as to the location best adapted to serve purposes.



Novel Sight.

A young woman from the east was conversing with a Kentuckian about tobacco and tobacco raising. She was very pretty and a good conversationalist, and the young man from Kentucky was vastly interested in her until she gave him a sudden shock by announcing, "I should love to see a tobacco field, especially when it is just plugging out."—Argonaut.

She Knew.

There is an old lady living in a small town in southern Pennsylvania who makes great efforts to keep abreast of the times. Her opportunities, however, are circumscribed, and she is sometimes compelled to resort to her imagination. She went to a church sociable lately, and as she entered the room one of the attendants said:

"Good evening, auntie. I am glad you came. We are going to have tableaux this evening."

"Yes, I know," replied the old lady; "I smelt 'em when I first came in."—New York Globe.

Grateful to Major Leonard.

KINGSTON, Ont., Dec. 11.—The announcement yesterday that Major R. W. Leonard, chairman of the National Transcontinental Railway Commission, has made a handsome donation to Queen's University of property for the erection of students' residences was received with great satisfaction there. The entire scheme is in connection with the Canadian officers' training corps, and will include a drillshed and armouries with gymnasium equipments.

THE INRUSH OF FARM LABORERS

The inrush of farm laborers and domestics into Ontario is greater than ever, but the demand is ever growing heavier. There are fifteen hundred agents throughout the British Isles stimulating migration to the province. In England there are 1,000 of these agents. In Scotland there are 200, and the balance in Ireland. Despite the large number of agents it has been found that the results obtained in this way, while satisfactory to an extent, are not enough, and it is being supplemented by an even more ambitious plan.

Monument to Heroine.

A monument which will forever perpetuate the gallant deed of Madeleine de Vercheres, who in 1692 defended her home for a week against the Iroquois, has just been unveiled at Vercheres, Que. It was designed by Philippe Hebert, the Canadian sculptor, and shows the heroic girl awaiting an onslaught of the Indians, gun in hand. The base is reminiscent of the fort she so successfully defended.

A REAL PRESENT FOR CHRISTMAS

CHRISTMAS DAY had dawned as clear and sparkling as all such days should. To be sure, in the sunny southland there was no snow, and the children had to content themselves with a visit from Santa Claus in a very up to date aeroplane, but this did not matter. Even the humble cabin home of Thomas Jefferson had not been passed by, and the delighted faces of the little colored children testified that the dear saint's gifts had exceeded their wildest expectations.

Now came the most important question of the day. Everybody knows that Christmas dinner is very different from any other meal and must be planned for accordingly. But it happened that these small brothers and sisters of Thomas Jefferson, who was not very big himself, must be left to his care today, while his mammy went to the big house and helped get ready for the company. Thomas Jefferson was allowed to go along with his mammy, for he was to bring back a basket filled with dinner for himself and the others. So he walked with her very happily.

At the house pretty Miss Clarissa saw that the basket was filled.

Thomas Jefferson fairly staggered under the weight of his basket when he at last turned off to the woods. As he went he heard Miss Clarissa's sweet voice ring out in a Christmas carol and, looking back, caught sight of her seated at the piano beneath a great bunch of holly and mistletoe. These were the words he heard her sing: "And pray a gladsome Christmas for all good Christian men!" It was an old carol, and Thomas Jefferson had never given much thought to the meaning of it before, but now as he walked along with so many good things the little fellow felt so grateful that he longed to share his blessings with some one less fortunate. The woods seemed deserted, however, and Thomas Jefferson reached his cabin without meeting any one.

CHILDREN CROWDED ABOUT.

The children crowded about him eagerly, and all could hardly wait until he had opened the basket, spread the cloth and dished the dinner. Thomas Jefferson was most particular as to how he did this. Each plate must contain an exact share of the good things. Just so much turkey, just so much sauce, just so many vegetables. All were beginning with great enjoyment when a knock came at the door.

"I'll see who 'tis," said Thomas Jefferson. "You chillen just go right along wid ye' dinner."

It was a very ragged boy that stood in the doorway of the kitchen. Miserably poor and hungry he looked, and Thomas Jefferson's heart went out to him.

"If you would please give me a bit to eat," he said, "I will be very grateful. I have come a long way and have still a good way to go."

Thomas Jefferson hesitated. His mammy did not approve of giving to tramps. He had no right to give her food away. Then he thought of the dinner on his plate. That was his own without any doubt. He returned to the table, the words of the carol still ringing in his head. The children were too busy to notice that he took the plate from the table and returned with it empty. Then he set about helping the pudding. When one is very hungry and has one's mouth set for turkey and substantial good things, even delicious plum pudding does not quite satisfy. But Thomas Jefferson, remembering the carol, tried to imagine that he felt quite full. He did feel very glad to have helped some one on this glad day and so played with the new games all afternoon with a right good will.

MISS CLARISSA SAW THAT THE BASKET WAS FILLED.

But the amount of corn bread and bacon he devoured at supper time made his mammy exclaim, "Well, it do beat all, Thomas Jefferson, how much boys can eat after all that Christmas dinner!"

A WONDERFUL TREE.

THERE'S a wonderful tree, a wonderful tree.
The happy children rejoice to see.
Spreading its branches year by year
It comes from the forest to flourish here
Oh, this wonderful tree, with its branches wide,
Is always, is always blooming at Christmastide!

But not for us children did this tree grow.
With its strange, sweet fruit on each laden bough.
For those we love we have made with care
Each pretty thing you see hanging there.
May this wonderful tree, with its branches wide,
Bring joy to our friends at Christmastide!

For a voice is telling its boughs among
Of the shepherds' watch and the angels' song,
Of a holy babe in the manger low—
The beautiful story of long ago,
When a radiant star threw its beams so wide
To herald the blessed first Christmastide

Then spread thy branches, wonderful tree,
And bring the pleasant thought to me
Of him who came from his home above,
The richest gift of his Father's love.
He came to show us how to spread far and wide
The joys of the holy, sweet Christmastide.

CHRISTMAS GIFTS FOR THE PRACTICAL

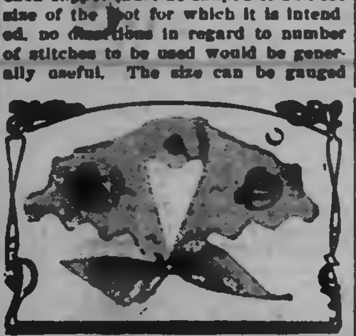
Things Ornamental and Useful That May Be Made at Home.

FOR the sternly practical member of the family something to wear never comes amiss as a Christmas gift. There are so many things in this line that one may give that one need never be in doubt what to present to those who prefer the useful to the merely ornamental souvenir. There are collars and trinkets of all sorts, handkerchiefs, gloves, etc., all suitable for this purpose.

Illustrated here is a sailor collar for a young girl. It is of tan linen, embroidered in blue and red. The pattern is a simple one, but any other that pleases the taste might be substituted for it.

As to slippers, they are always in demand, from the daintiest of boudoir creations fashioned of ribbon to the cozy knitted or crocheted ones which are the delight of the invalid.

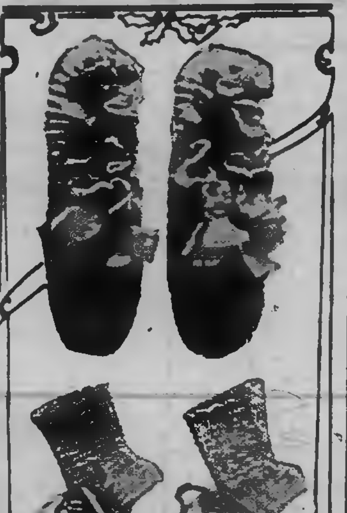
Very easy to make are the crocheted slippers shown here. They are in double crochet, the work being done to give the familiar ribbed pattern. As each slipper must be shaped to suit the size of the foot for which it is intended, no directions in regard to number of stitches to be used would be generally useful. The size can be gauged by measuring. Select a color of yarn that you know the receiver of the gift to be fond of and do not economize on the ribbon for bows.



GIRL'S SAILOR COLLAR.

A nice gift for a little one is crocheted bootees. Winter bed socks may be made for the older children. The crocheting or knitting of a pair of slippers may be accomplished in the course of a few evenings. For a pair of really dainty slippers use mercerized worsted, which looks like silk floss of a very heavy quality and which works up so coarsely that the slipper grows with extraordinary rapidity. Having worked with hook or needles the strip that is long enough to cover the lower portion of the foot, overstitch one side of it to a silk lined insole, crochet a fancy finish to the upper side, run through its meshes a ribbon and have this drawstring terminate in a huge rosette at the instep, while the toe is decorated with a large round buckle of the mercerized worsted. Then make the slipper.

Even more quickly made is the "mule" type of bedroom slipper. This consists of merely a satin lined insole to which is attached a V shaped piece of woven mercerized worsted forming a toe section. When a pair of ribbon ankle ties have been attached to the sides of the insole's heel a quilling of ribbon trims it daintily.



CROCHETED SLIPPERS AND BOOTEES.

A pretty bedroom slipper is made of satin ribbon, shirred up thickly to give the slipper "body" across the toe. Two thicknesses of the ribbon are used for the sides, elastic being run through a casing at the top. The sole of the slipper is lined with quilted satin.

If the gift giver really lacks the time to work for her friend she can at least buy a pair of inexpensive ready made worsted slippers, trim them attractively with big bows of satin ribbon matching quillings forming fluffy edgings and give a touch of daintiness to the inner side of the soles by covering them with a shaped sachet of fine batting and delicately colored china silk. Or she may take a pair of inexpensive "mules" of wadded silk, edge them with swansdown, marabou or fur and decorate their toes with big rosettes of ribbon or malines—in fact, rather do anything to make them different from the cheap looking, impersonal sort of footgear which the fastidious recipient will not wear.

Through all these years it has been customary to speak of Philadelphia as "slow," and now it develops that the old city is built on a bed of quicksand.

Now that Mr. Edison has been confined to his room for the first time in his life, we may reasonably look for an invention that will do away with sickness.

Well, after all our solicitude, here is our old friend Dr. Wiley again. He arises to announce that Eve was created before Adam. Let the procession move on.

Ancestry of Santa

WHAT is Santa Claus' age?

The jolly, roistering, potbellied, ever young old fellow that we know has made his appearance on earth in so many guises that the secret of his first coming threatens to remain forever veiled in the midst of antiquity. No one can say with any certainty just when he first made his appearance among prehistoric men, for merry old Santa in one form or another delighted children's hearts in many a pagan household centuries before the commencement of the Christian era and prior to any recorded history.

The name of Santa Claus, by which he is known in America, is the Dutch pet name for St. Nicholas. The name Kriss Kringle, by which he is known in England, is a corruption of Christ Kindlein or the Christ Child. But the festivities that distinguish Christmas existed long before Christianity, and a jolly god of good cheer appears as the personification of the period from the earlier pagan times. Now the Santa Claus of today is simply that old jolly god sobered up, washed and purified.

The Dionysia of the Greeks, the Saturnalia of the Romans, the Twelve Nights of the old Norsemen and of the Teutons all celebrated the coming of the winter solstice. People then gave themselves up to all sorts of revelry and excess. In the Dionysia the representative figure was not the young Dionysus or Bacchus, but the aged, cheery and disreputable Silenus, the chief of the Satyrs and the god of drunkards. In the Saturnalia it was Saturn; in the Germanic feasts it was Thor, both long bearded and white haired gods like Silenus.

Now, although the central figure of the Christian festival is the child God, the Christ Kindlein, the influence of long pagan custom was too strong within the breasts of the early Christians to be easily superseded. The tradition of hoary age as the true representative of the dying year and its attendant jollifications still remained smoldering under the ashes of the past. It burst into new flame when the past was too far back to be looked upon with the fear and antagonism of the church and there seemed no longer any danger of a relapse into paganism.

At first, however, the more dignified representative was chosen as more in keeping with the occasion. Saturn was unconsciously rebaptized as St Nicholas, the name of the saint whose festival occurs in December and who as the patron of young people is especially fitted for the patronage of the festival which has come to be looked upon as especially that of the young. At first St. Nicholas did not supersede the Christ Child, but accompanied him in his Christmas travels, as, indeed, he still does in certain rural neighborhoods of Europe where the modern spirit has been least felt.

St. Nicholas, according to the hagiologist, was a bishop of Myra, who flourished early in the fourth century. He is the patron of children and schoolboys.

It is strange that everywhere St. Nicholas is most honored and his feast day most observed the most pious and instructed among the common people know little of the legend of the saint. He is treated with that mixture of seriousness and frivolity which becomes a dying myth.

In southern Germany and Austria a youth garbed as St. Nicholas and accompanied by two angels and a whole troop of devils in hideous masquerade, with blackened faces and clanking chains, on Dec. 5 (St. Nicholas' festal day) makes a round of certain houses where the little ones of the village have been collected. To the good children he brings gifts of nuts and apples, while the naughty ones are left to the devices of the satanic followers in his train.

In many places the bugbear overshadows in importance both the Christ Child and St. Nicholas. He appears under different names and in different guises. In Lower Austria he is the frightful Krampus, with his clanking chains and horrible devil's mask, who, notwithstanding his gilded nuts and apples, gingerbread and toys, which he carries in his basket, is the terror of the nursery. In Hanover, Holstein and Mecklenburg he is known as Clas. In Silesia his name is Joseph.

Sometimes the bugbear was a female. In Lower Austria she was called the Budelfrau. In Suabia it was the Berchtel who chastised children, that did not spin diligently, with rods, but rewarded the industrious with dried pears, apples and nuts.

The female bogy survives especially in Russia and in Italy. In the former place she is known as the Rabouabka, in the latter as the Befana. Befana is a corruption of Epiphania or Epiphany, for it is on Epiphany, Jan. 6, that the Italians make presents to their children in commemoration of the gifts given by the three wise men to Christ on that date.

Here's a Useful Gift For Dainty Girls

The little pincushions that are made out of tiny baskets are most attractive. Buy a little basket in any shop—it costs about 25 cents—stuff it with bran, over the top with any color silk, then paint the basket with white enamel paint or gild it with liquid gilding which comes for this purpose. Be sure to let this paint dry thoroughly.

Next take a yard of tiny rosebud trimming and drape it around the handle of the basket like a garland. Sew another garland of the rosebud trimming around the inside of the basket, and when a few gilt hairpins have been stuck in the pincushion you have the cutest little gift to send to the girl with golden hair.

My First Christmas Eve Dance

WRITTEN BY A JACK TAR

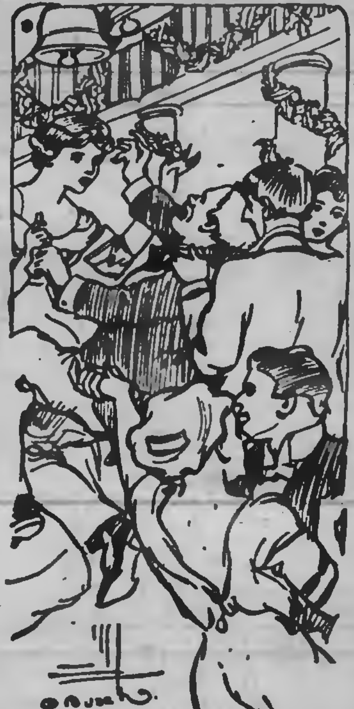
WHEN me and my shipmate, Bill Bolthead, was takin' a little cruise ashore last year we each got a pretty, sweet scented note with R. S. V. P. at the bottom, requestin' "the pleasure of your company" at a dance on Christmas eve. Bill, who is well up in these things, told me them letters meant "Reply Sharp; Very Pressin'." So we wrote our replies sharp, hacceptin' "the very pressin' hinvitation."

Well, Christmas eve came round, and Bill and me rigged ourselves out in our best shore goin' togs and set sail for the dance. On reportin' ourselves we was mustered in a big cabin like a battleship's gun room, all titivated up with holly and mistletoe, and with the deck polished instead of holy stoned, and so slippery that I nearly pitched on to my bowsprit as I went through the hatchway.

"Vast heavin', Bill," I ses, comin' to an anchor; "this is worse than crossin' the bay in a gale o' wind," but Bill he kept forgin' ahead, as cool as a middy in command of a dispatch boat, so I slipped my cable and went on full speed in his wake, sweatin' like a marine recruit goin' into haction for the first time. We was nearly the last aboard, for the cabin was pretty full, the men lookin' like restaurong waiters and the ladies all as smart as a cruiser squadron in rainbow rig.

Presently a fussy little chap, who I took to be the commodore, but who Bill said was the M. See man, though he didn't look as if he knowed much about the sea, came up and gave us both a pretty card with sailin' orders on, which Bill called a program. Then he passed the word to clear for haction, and a band on the quarterdeck aft struck up and the dancin' begun.

As I was leanin' against the bulwarks the M. See man came up and said somethin' what I couldn't catch, so I said, "Aye, aye, sir!" and before I knowed it he had hintrojuiced me to the smartest A1 clipper built little craft I ever turned my searchlights on, and somehow the next minute her sweet little figurehead was close to mine, and I made fast around her amidships and steamed into haction.



"I NEARLY PITCHED ON TO MY BOWSPRIT."

"This is a polker, not an 'ornpipe," she said presently in a voice as sweet as the bo's'n's whistle pipin' at grog time, so I axed her parding and navigated accordin'. Well, we boxed the compass about twice, when some one ran foul o' my starboard bow and threw me on my beam ends. My consort was so consarned and bore a hand so prettily to haul me up that I quite forgot to say what I was agoin' to to the lubber. Next time I was goin' to dance with her again, but she told me she was engaged. "Hindeed!" ses I as 'aughty as a hadmiral. Then a redheaded swab took her in tow, and the band strikin' up the "Keel Row" there was the two of 'em a-caperin' away just like old Mac, our second engineer, when he has had what he calls "a wee drap" on pay nights.

Soon after I see her sittin' fannin' herself, while the redheaded chap was a-carryin' on shameful with a girl in pink, so I tacked towards her and told her what I thought of the swab she was engaged to and hoffered to bash in his headlights. I thought she would never stop laughin' as she told me she didn't even know him and was only engaged to him for the dance. And then I felt better.

Well, to cut the yarn short, at eight bells I conveyed her down to the ward room to mess, and after that we hove to in a conservative full of palms and flowers and smellin' like a tropical hisland, and then—well, after a very hot engagement, in which I had to bring both broadsides into haction, my pretty prize hauled down her flag, and a few months later we signaled for a sky pilot, and I towed her safe into port.—London Tit-Bits.

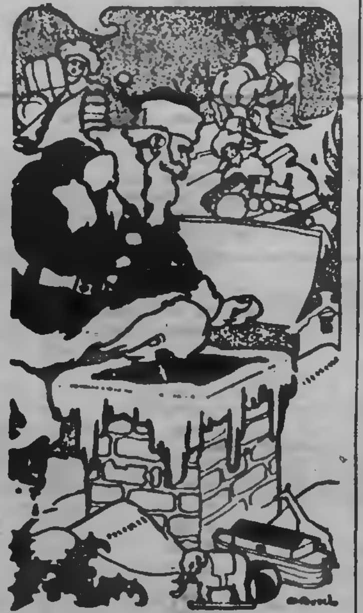
A Song of Christmas

TWINE the bittersweet and holly
Arched above the hearthstone's glow.
Joy, not melancholy,
Come, indrifting with the snow.
In each face the frost's a-tingle,
And afar on flying wing
Comes the sleighbell's rhythmic jingle
Through December journeying.

Set the board and ask the blessing
For the bounty amply spread.
In the simplest words expressing
What a loving Father said
"Peace on earth"—for this is nearest
When the snows with us abide
And the winter air is clearest
In the hush of Christmastide.



HIS REINDEER STEEDS ARE PRANCING.

Bring the old musician's fiddle,
Relic of the bygone days.
Send the fairest down the middle
While the lilting music sways.
Light of foot and quick of laughter,
Swing the dancers, toe and heel,
As they pass or follow after
In the quaint Virginia reel.

Make a welcome for the stranger
Should his footstep cross the door.
By the memory of the manger
And the Christ that was of yore
Gather children's faces round you,
As he gathered them long syne,
If it be the years have crowned you
With their radiance divine.

Deck the tree and light the candles,
Let the stockings all be hung.
For a saint with furry sandals
O'er the housetops high has swung.
And his reindeer steeds are prancing
Through the star bespangled rime,
And the moonbeams pale are glancing
In the merry Christmas time.
—Ernest McGaffey.

The Lord of Misrule.

The "Lord of Misrule," who sometimes rejoiced in the whimsical title of the "Abbot of Unreason," was a very important functionary of the Christmas ceremonies in the olden time. His office was that of master of the revels, and in castle and hall, from Christmas eve down to Twelfth day, he was absolute master of all. On taking up the duties of his office he generally made some quaint speech, explaining to the company that he absolved them of all their reason and that they were to be just wise enough to make fools of themselves. Under his rule all were to be equal. No one was to sit apart in pride of self sufficiency to laugh at others. Moreover, being possessed of the magic power to turn his auditory into children, it was his intention while his sovereignty lasted that they should conduct themselves as such.

A SURPRISE SANTA CLAUS

"HAROLD! Harold Barton!" called Sally's voice from the kitchen door. "Father says be sure to close and lock"—

"Oh, I know all about it," called Harold from the barn door. "Don't bother your head about me." He turned his back and stalked into the barn, carrying a big basket filled with holly, fir boughs and mistletoe. Harold was to dress the Christmas tree and decorate the barn, for the tree was too large for the house, and the barn, which was well built, had been fitted up with stoves.

Harold and Bert Fenn put the last touches to the decorations and the tree just as the supper bell rang the day before Christmas. Dinner was early, as some cousins were to come in the evening and they had to be met at the station four miles away.

The Bentons lived on the edge of a town at the foot of a thickly wooded mountain that sheltered many a wild animal and often human beings almost as wild.

The cousins came and soon were safely tucked away in the beds and on the sofas that were not used by the uncles and aunts, and all was quiet.

Two persons were not asleep, though. Sally was thinking: "I wonder if Harold did lock the barn up well—with all our beautiful presents there. Suppose some of the woods tramps should break in. Oh, dear, I wish morning were here!"

Harold also, rolled up on a mattress on the garret floor, remembered that, although he had locked the large doors he had not thought about the little door, and he could not remember whether it was fastened.

Morning dawned bright and crisp. Harold helped the gardener build the fires in the stoves in the barn and then waited impatiently for Uncle John who had promised to act as Santa Claus and who could not get there until the last moment. The train arrived without Uncle John, and the smaller children were beginning to fret at the delay. So it was finally decided that they would have to do without a Santa Claus, for Uncle John had always taken that part, and no one could be persuaded to take his place.

The candles were lighted, and the family and guests trooped over to the barn. Such cries of surprise and delight there were when the big tree stood before them in a blaze of glory! When the "ohs" and "ahs" had died away a little, Harold started to make an apology for the absence of Santa.

"Santa Claus was detain"— he began, when a whistling sound and then a tinkling noise like sleighbells came from the tree. He stopped in astonishment. Every one else heard the noise, too, and thirty-two pairs of eyes were turned toward the tree. Certainly something was moving in the tree. The branches toward the center shook, though no one touched the tree, and as every one watched breathlessly the branches parted, and the queerest little figure you ever saw pushed its way out and stood on a limb, bowing politely right and left. It was about two feet high, with long flowing white beard and hair and dressed just as you always expect to see Santa Claus.

QUEER FIGURE PUSHED OUT.

The children looked up in open mouthed astonishment, Harold among them, and the grownups, with puzzled expressions, were trying to solve the mystery when another sharp little whistle was heard, and the tiny Santa Claus, using his hands and feet with much skill, climbed down a branch or two. In so doing he turned his back and showed a long brown tail beneath his coat.

Then there was a shout of laughter, with clapping of hands, and the children fairly danced with joy as the small Santa Claus, sitting demurely on a branch, took hold of a very pretty pink and white dolly and, after examining her wax face closely, kissed her lovingly. At this there was a louder roar of laughter, in the midst of which a gruff voice called out:

"Here, you beggar! Let it alone!"

This voice came from the hayloft, and when the thirty-two pairs of eyes turned immediately to see who spoke they saw two pairs of legs hanging over the edge of the loft and two bearded faces peering down.

The two bearded men came down, one swinging from the beam and the other climbing down the ladder. Harold, with an exclamation of delight, flung both arms about the most hayseedy looking one.

They every one exclaimed, "Why, Uncle John!" And Uncle John laughingly explained that he and a friend, whom he introduced as Mr. Whitman, had arrived on the midnight train and, as they did not wish to disturb the family, had tried the barn doors. Then they had decided upon this surprise.

"And the Santa Claus monkey is himself a present for you, Harold, to remind you to lock doors," said Uncle John, with a twinkle in his eye.

It's as easy to buy experience as it is difficult to sell it.

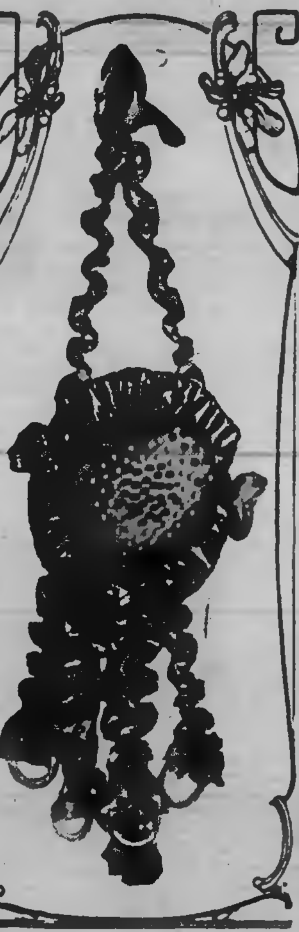
USEFUL GIFTS FOR EVERYBODY

Pretty and Well Equipped Pincushions Never Come Amiss.

WHEN in doubt give pincushions, said a very astute young woman. Well, when one considers the matter it is really a wise piece of advice, for who does not need pins of all kinds, both early and often? If the said pincushion is generously supplied with a good variety and quality of pins, no matter how many other pincushions may be received, yours will be of use, for pins, like time, seem to have wings. They are here today, and tomorrow who knows where?

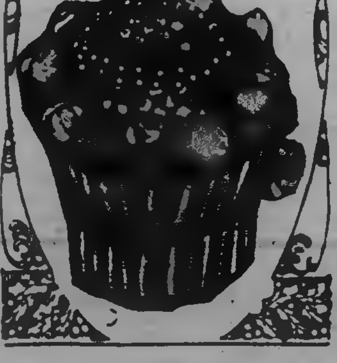
Each season, too, brings out new and attractive designs in which to fashion the useful pincushion. The pincushion of yesteryear can be easily recognized by the expert in fancy work.

The hanging pincushion illustrated is a dainty and useful trifle that will be appreciated by the traveler. It can be hung on the dresser, where it is always conveniently at hand and adds to the attractiveness of the barest hotel room. This pincushion is made of satin ribbon. It has a puffed border of inch wide ribbon made double by having two pieces of the ribbon sewed together and having cases on each edge through which cords may be run for drawing it up. The odd looking pendants with the ivory rings attached for the safety pins are gathered by running a few stitches first on one edge of the ribbon, then to the other, and drawing up the thread. In the center of the flower rows of small fancy pins are neatly inserted.



HANGING PINCUSHION.

Baskets are used in many ways in fashioning fancy articles. A charming use of a miniature wicker basket is illustrated here. This pincushion form was bought or made to fit the basket. This one was covered with satin and then with a layer of gold net. Two satin ribbons were woven in and out of meshes of the basket, and satin ribbon roses were used as decorations. The pins were arranged in the basket in carefully shaded rows.



BASKET PINCUSHION.

The flower pincushion is very popular this year. When making one of these try to select for it the favorite blossom of the person for whom it is being made.

One of the new kinds of pincushions is made to represent a wild rose. The center is a circle of cardboard thickly padded and covered with yellow velvet. Five large pink satin petals surround it, while, instead of a stalk, a loop of green velvet is attached with which to hang it on the wall.

Pincushions of embroidered linen are always nice and are easy to make, as almost every one can do a little simple embroidery.

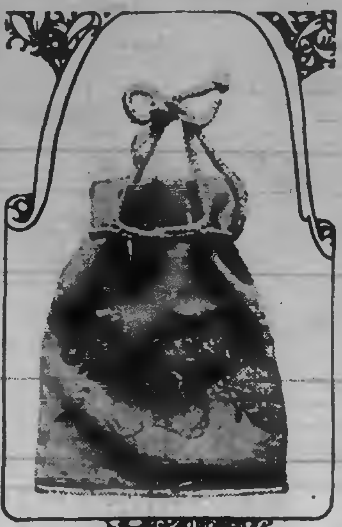
Fabric Bags Still In Fashionable Favor

The bag seen in the cut is of heavy tan colored linen in a soft weave. It is a capacious affair, being nearly half a yard long. The bowknot design is worked in heavy outline stitch filled in with French knots.



PARTY BAG OF HEAVY LINEN.

Pink silk cord run through celluloid rings draws up this pretty bag, which is lined inside with pink china silk.

Mistletoe.

It is high time that something was done about our mistletoe literature that crops up so regularly during the holiday season.

It systematizes about as follows:

The joke about the girl who wears a sprig of mistletoe on her head.

The joke about the mistletoe that didn't come in time, and the girl asks (always coyly) whether they cannot get along without it.

The church trimming mistletoe joke.

The sprig of mistletoe that the long lost lover on his dramatic return on Christmas eve always draws out of his pocket at the end of the story.

The fact is that the mistletoe has now degenerated into a chestnut. It no longer serves any useful literary purpose. It should be worn only by mothers-in-law.—Harper's Weekly.

An Ancient Christmas Custom.

One of the oldest and for centuries one of the most popular of all Christmas usages is the singing of Christmas carols by parties of children or of young men and women, who go about from house to house for that purpose, being everywhere heartily welcomed and rewarded with money and Christmas good cheer. This custom is still largely observed in England, particularly in the country districts.

The Christmas Quest.

Whoso shall come any way this night,
By moor or hill or shore,
For him the blessed candles' light,
For him the open door.
(Oh, Mary, this for thy Son's sake,
Though mine comes in no more!)

My hearth is swept, my Yule logs burn,
My board is decked and spread,
For any who may seem in turn
Are warmth and wine and bread
(Oh, Mary, grant my son this night
Be housed and comforted!)

Sid, banned or beggared come for guest
My heart shall share his woes,
And on his head my hand shall rest
To bless him ere he goes.
(Oh, Mary, grant my son this night
That blessing and repose!)

This night, for thy one Son's dear sake,
Wait light and warmth and wine.
Oh, Mary, we be mothers both!
Take these my tears for sign,
And this I do for thy sweet Son.
Wilt thou not do for mine?

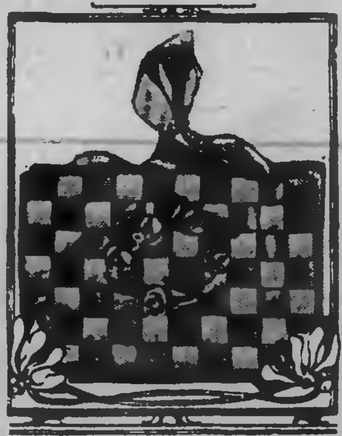
HANDKERCHIEF CASES.

These Will Be Gifts Prized by the Dainty Woman.

Handkerchiefs are standard gifts for Christmas. Quite the nicest way to present them is in a fancy box or case. A folding case of woven ribbon in white and pale green is illustrated here. It is lined with plain satin, and between the covers is a thick layer of wadding sprinkled with sachet powder. A wreath of roses made from satin ribbon ornaments the front of the case while ribbon ties attached to the front hold it securely together when the handkerchiefs are placed inside. Ribbon straps may be attached to the inner face of the handkerchief case or satin pockets as handkerchief holders.

A handkerchief case that will lie flat, that will not take up much room, yet perhaps contain not only handkerchiefs, but many odds and ends of lace, ties, etc., as well, that otherwise might tumble about and secrete themselves at the bottom of a trunk, as they invariably do, just at the particular moment when they are most wanted, will be liked by the prospective traveler.



HANDKERCHIEF CASE.

The cost of the handkerchief case is small, and when finished it will be durable and always look clean, as it can be washed as often as it becomes soiled—a desirable point in traveling accessories.

A very beautiful handkerchief box was covered with linen. The top of the box was adorned with a bird and a branch of a tree. The foliage was embroidered in satin stitch, but the bird was worked very evenly in long and short stitch. This stitch is particularly effective where used for the plumage of a bird.

The embroidery was further enhanced by a darned background. It really gives a most exquisite effect. The entire surface of the linen is darned with small stitches in the softest shade of blue.

A spray of cherries makes a pleasing decoration for the top of one of these boxes. The background should be darned with ivory floselle.

Of Course He Did.

Charlie, aged six, asked at the soda water counter for a cone of ice cream. The clerk, not catching his order, asked, "Do you want two cones?"

"I want two," said Charlie, "but I've only got one nickel."—Judge.

To Give and Receive.

"'Tis more pleasant to give than to get," was once
By a worthy philosopher said,
Who never experienced the joy of the man
Who at Christmas comes out ahead.

What's In a Name.

Christmas by any other name
Would pinch your salary just the same.

Hard Luck.

"So your baby won a prize in the baby show?"

"Yes," replied the proud but worried father. "And I guess we'll move out of the community. All the envious neighbors will resent it as long as he lives."—Washington Star.

THE REVOLT OF THE TOYS

By WELLS HAWKS.

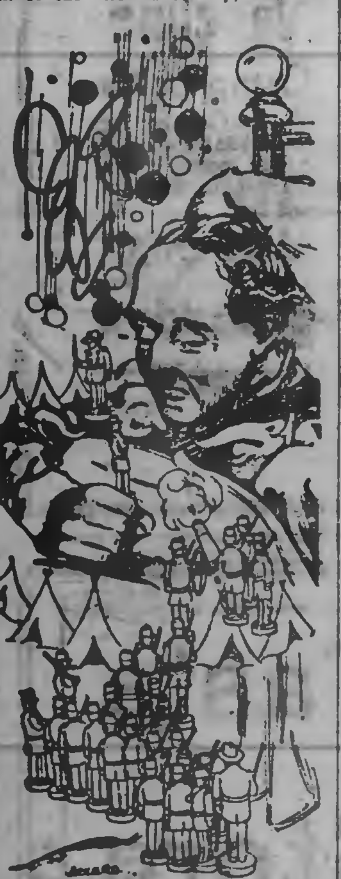
THE irritated hotel guest was fussing and fuming and quarreling with the clerk because he could not sleep. It was 10 o'clock on Christmas eve, and the throngs of merrymakers on the streets made so much noise that slumber on a ground floor was impossible. In a most obliging manner the clerk gave the guest an inside room on the sixteenth floor in place of his suit with windows opening on the street.

Outside a throng of merry people noisily, happily awaited the coming of the gladdest day in all the year; women and children, old and young, jostled and pushed, blew horns and threw confetti, and the policeman stood on the corner and smiled, and the real people who could not sleep looked out from their windows and laughed and said. "It is so good to see them happy."

But on the sixteenth floor of the big hotel and in the solitude of an inside room a big, selfish man stood and rubbed his hands and smiled because it was so quiet. Once the distant blowing of a horn was heard, and he stood on a chair and stuffed a bath towel into a ventilator.

"Fine, fine!" said he. "Those fools! I'll get some sleep now."

And he undressed and walked about and smiled. Long ago, when the hair just above his ears began to show a little gray, a great wall arose in his life and cut off the past—the past when he was a boy. And dead vines hung about this barrier, and its walls grew thicker and higher until it forced back all of the streams of happiness and smiles that came from childhood's happy memory, and his heart grew hard and cold.



A DOWNPOUR OF BALLS OF EVERY DESCRIPTION.

"Christmas!" he sneered as he reached for the electric light. "All over the country, I suppose, they are deluding children with the Santa Claus tomfoolery."

Then it was darkness, and he tucked himself deep down under the covers. A great happiness came over him, for he could not hear a sound, so he closed his eyes and sleep came to him.

Outside the noise grew fast and louder. Only a little time and the bells would ring the midnight hour and it would be Christmas morning. A million housetops were silent, for beneath them, in their tiny beds, were the little expectant hearts

And he in the inside room was snoring. Suddenly he threw his arm up and grabbed the side of the bed. He tossed his legs wildly about and rocked like a man in great agony. Then he was still for a moment, and then suddenly he sat erect and, shaking his fist in the air, exclaimed:

"Back, I say! Back before I fire!"

Let us crawl over the wall around his heart and look. The room is filled with a thousand soldiers more than that.

There is regiment after regiment. Some are of lead, others of tin, while those making the assault on the bed are wooden. From back of the bureau comes a troop of cavalry, the tin horses fairly galloping as the captain brandishes his sword. From under the washstand comes a battery of artillery. They are placing their guns. The little general, painted so gaudily, is on the man's shoulder. Will he capitulate? There is quiet among the troops. The general comes down and consults for a moment with the commander of the wooden soldiers. The man looks at them with terror. He has asked for more time. Suddenly the troops move back again, and around the bed appear hundreds of tiny tents. The man in the bed groans. They are going to starve him out.

The man sticks his head out from the cover for air. His head is hardly out when it is struck by a great rubber ball, and then, like a July storm, when a great cloud breaks, there comes from above a downpour of rubber balls, footballs, baseballs, jackballs, tennis balls and balls of every description.

They beat on the bed and pummel the man like hail on a bed of roses. He lies still and groans. The shower ceases, and then, with the noise of a hurricane, there comes rushing through the air what seems an African typhoon.

"It is the hoops, the hoops!" cry the wooden soldiers.

And so it is. The air is filled with every kind of hoop, and they roll backward and across the bed like a storm lashed sea. The man screams in pain. Some of the hoops have bells on them, and they ring in his ears as the sharp edges of the bent hickory cut his face. He is weak and pale, but does not give in.

Then there is a clang of bells and a blowing of whistles, and with a rush the entire toy fire department makes for the bed. Following them come the tin locomotives, wildly ringing their bells, and back of them the toy trolleys. The bed looks like a side street during a four alarm fire.

Now the hose connections are made, and scores of streams of water beat on his face. From the foot of the bed comes a cloud of steam from the engines, while hot and blazing above are sparks from the trolleys as they grind along the brass of the bed. He fights hard, but finally succumbs and falls weak and exhausted. The firemen ring their bells and start back for the fire houses, while the soldiers keep back the crowds of brownies, Indians, rubber men, tenpins, jumping jacks and walking monkeys that were clinging around the ropes.

The man watched all this carefully. Then he covered his eyes with his arm. Somehow it all faded away. He seemed to be climbing over a wall. He reached the top and, looking down a pathway, saw a summer house. About it the lilacs fell in great clusters. Looking through the doors, he saw beneath a vista of the cedars and waving maples rows of flower beds, and she was there among them, clipping, training and guiding over trellises the tender blossoms she loved so dearly. In the summer house and on the floor he saw a boy.

He was lying on the floor, while his chubby hands placed about the fort of sand the little soldiers he took from a box. The man sighed. He opened his eyes and looked about him. It was the inside room on the sixteenth floor. It was very quiet. He looked in the glass and saw a tear in his eye. It ran down his cheek, and another came in its place and followed it. Then he threw open the window. Like a tempest in rushed the noise—the blowing of the horns, the clatter of the rattles and the laughter of merry people. He dressed hurriedly. From his satchel he took a portfolio and, taking out a check book, wrote a check and, grabbing his hat, rushed out of the room.

"Cash this for me and in a hurry," said the man to the night clerk.

The clerk went to the safe and brought out a roll of bills. He counted it, but there was not enough, and he opened the petty cash drawer and gave the man all that was there.

"Fine!" said the man, stuffing it into his pocket. "I'll be back in the morning."

The man rushed into the street. Just a half block up a lot of little boys were looking at a cart full of rubber balls. The man handed the peddler a big bill and said. "Give all of these to the boys." The peddler looked surprised, and the boys yelled with glee. Across the street were a lot of little girls, tired and worn from the day and night's work of running at the cry of "Cash!" but just happy at looking in the windows. Almost like a madman the man pushed them into the store, and soon each had a great doll and a shawl and candy and so many things that are good before they knew it. Across the street was a man selling boxes of tin soldiers.

"Ah!" said the man, with a reminiscent sigh. He jumped on a box and yelled for all the boys around to come near him, and as they did he handed each a box of soldiers and then paid the man twice the cost.

"What is it?" said the man.

"It is Santa Claus gone wild," said a policeman who had children at home.

The man rushed on and into a market. It was very late, and the poor were buying the leftovers for a Christmas dinner. The dealers were packing up the best to save for the New Year's sale.

"Open up!" cried the man as he flourished a roll of bills. And as the multitude of pale and worn went by those in the faded alpacas he reached out and gave them money and said:

"This is to buy for the children," while the dealers poured into the yawning baskets the best on the stalls.

It was morning when he threw himself in bed, tired, but such a good tired. He stretched himself out and fell asleep. And in Sleepland he looked out, and there before him, as far as his eyes could reach, were the soldiers all drawn up for review. The tiny bands began to play. The officers marched proudly at the head of the column. The parade began to move—up the room, then up to the bed and across. He arose and saluted, for as they passed the guns were all at present arms, and the colors dipped as they went before him.

The toys were the victors, but they honored the conquered.—New York Mail.

Playthings For the Baby Always Acceptable

If there is a baby in the house to be provided with a Christmas gift its mother will appreciate a pretty creeping blanket like the one pictured.

It is of gray canton flannel, interlined with sheet wadding and another piece of the flannel to make the blanket a protection from the drafty floor. Animals and all kinds of toys are cut out of cretonne or calico and appliqued on the flannel with red cotton in catstitch. The blanket is hemmed and catstitched about the edges.

The Christmas Stocking

HANG up the Christmas stockings,
Leave not a dear one out,
And wake on Christmas morning
With ringing song and shout,
For in the silent midnight
Shall Santa Claus appear
And crown with gifts of gladness
The love time of the year.

Hang up the baby's stocking.
The cunning little elf
Is still too very thin
To do it for herself.
And hang the mother's stocking,
Oh, very plain in sight!
Some one must think for mother,
Or she'll forget it quite.

Hang father's sturdy stocking
Right here between the boys',
And give him books and papers,
As he gives the children toys.
Let Santa Claus be careful
About the politics,
For father has a conscience
That to the right side sticks.

Hang up the old folks' stockings;
Hang up the little girl's.
Dear grandma with her silver hair,
Sweet Flossy with her curls,
Will both be very happy
When dawns, in roseate cheer,
The merry Christmas morning,
The love time of the year.

Attractive Bed Sets.

Bed sets, consisting of spread, pillow covers and valance, are always a welcome addition to the napery closet, and what color to select need not worry the donor, as the smart thing in these outfits is white scrim trimmed with eyelet embroidery or fillet insertion, edging and motif. Blankets may seem a homely gift to send at Christmas time, but any housekeeper will be glad to have one in thick, soft Australian wool, in pale blue, rose or mauve, and bound with satin ribbon.

One of the nicest things to send to a housekeeping friend is a set of towels. It is a happy idea to furnish a dozen of extra large sized and heavy Turkish bath towels, hemmed in the color of her room and marked with her individual initials.

THE STORY THAT NEVER GROWS OLD.

Like the songs that are sung in the twilight,
Like all tales that are tenderly told,
Like the memories of loved ones that hallow our hearts,
There's a story that never grows old.

Lo! The angels first sing it in chorus,
And the watchers with wonder behold.
They feel the first thrill of the beautiful truth
In the story that never grows old.

Round the Christ Child of Bethlehem's cradle
Are clusters of apples of gold,
And pictures of silver adorn every page
Of the story that never grows old

It gladdens the hearts of all children,
And millions of manlier mold
Are happier, holier, better by far
For the story that never grows old.

—Franklin Trudel

Santy and the Stork.

"But, daddy, is there really, truly Santy?"

"Well, I just guess yes—a regular corker he is too."

"Is he nice?"

"Is he? Well, I should say so! Isn't he, Mary?"

"Humph! Very nice, as Santas go, but not very modest."

"Is he handsome, daddy?"

"Oh, as handsome as a picture—sparkling eyes, fine forehead, beautiful complexion—very handsome, isn't he, Mary?"

"Henry, it's perfectly dreadful the way you deceive that child. You ought to be ashamed of yourself. You're setting him a terrible example."

"But, daddy, where does he live—away off somewhere?"

"Oh, yes; very, very far."

"Away off where the stork lives?"

"The stork! Who's been telling you about the stork?"

"Mammy."—Chicago Tribune.

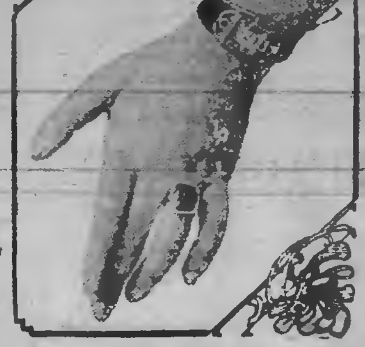
JEWELED TRIFLES.

There Are Inexpensive Ones That Make the Younger Set Happy.

A charming gift for a pretty girl is one of the small watches worn on bracelets. Some of these are very attractive, and the one illustrated here has the additional merit of being odd and convenient, for it is set into a square mount that fits neatly on the bracelet.

There are many inexpensive trifles in the way of jewelry that may be given to one's friends as well as relatives at this season. Trinkets of this sort are always valued by the younger set. Novelties are what appeal most to the taste.

Buying a last minute jewel gift? Perhaps you know just what she wants and the choosing is easy. And perhaps you don't. If so and the gift is for December's child, why not select a turquoise? The turquoise is the stone for December, and it stands for prosperity.



BRACELET WATCH.

All told, though, the diamond and the pearl are the most desired stones. The pearl should have an article all to itself, though, summed up briefly, its characteristics are whiteness, softness of texture and purity of luster. As for the diamond, it must have what has been called liquid lusciousness—must be of the first water. In fact, the term "water" as applied to diamonds—"first water," etc.—is not a captious term, but is directly applicable to the characteristics of the stone.

This liquid appearance is the first dominating quality which denotes the real thing. The artificial one lacks it. Note here that the chief difficulty in judging is between good gems and imitations, not between poor ones and imitations.

The Glastonbury Thorn.

A famous old English tree was the Glastonbury thorn. According to the old monkish legend, St. Joseph, while resting, fixed his staff in the earth, where it immediately took root and ever after blossomed forth on Christmas day. Curiously enough, when the change of style took place no blossom was seen on the tree until old Christmas day came round. The probable truth is the tree was one brought from Palestine by some of the pilgrims, there being a species of thorn, a native of that country, which blooms at Christmas.

Share Your Fortu

AMID all the happiness and joys of the merry Christmas season think of those less fortunate—of those on whom the sun of plenty has failed to shine during the past twelve months. Think of the heartaches that will be theirs on Christmas morning; think of the tear stained eyes of the little children weeping because Santa Claus could not call at their homes. Half of your pleasure at Christmas will be derived from making others happy, from sharing your good fortune and sowing seeds of kindness wherever you happen to be on Christmas day. Give something, be it ever so trifling, to the little child to whom Christmas otherwise would mean nothing. You can keep tears of sorrow from those eyes and brighten the day a hundredfold for yourself. Try it.

Smooth Out the Ruts

How soon will your community replace the mud holes and ruts with a permanent good road?

How soon will you stop filling the ruts and mud holes with your road taxes and build roads that will permit you to put your road taxes into more good roads?

How soon will you discover that permanent good roads increase land values and lessen the cost of living by lessening the cost of marketing and enabling increased production?

How soon will your roads, that now take the heart and soul out of every man and horse that uses them, be made into a continuous stretch of road that you and everyone in your county will be proud of?

The permanent good road is of vital importance to every community because it has a direct influence for betterment on the everyday life of every person.

Concrete Roads are Permanent and are the "best good roads." They cost no more to build than any other good road and their upkeep expense is practically nothing, which makes them the cheapest kind of roads.

Concrete Roads benefit the farmer, the consumer, the merchant, the newspaper, the board of trade, the railroad, and make for greater prosperity generally by increasing land values and production; bringing more trade; more industries; more employment; greater traffic. They decrease the cost of marketing; decrease taxation in proportion to increased production, and all of these factors combine to decrease the cost of living.

Every citizen owes it to himself to investigate the advantages of concrete roads and learn how they will benefit him directly. This information is free for the asking. Write for it to-day to

The First Christmas

IT often has been stated that the birth of Christ must have occurred four years before the date fixed on for the current chronology and that it is probable the event befell at some other time in the year than a few days after the winter solstice. The reason for the confident assertion is the ascertaining of the fact that Herod died about four years B. C.

The basis of this supposition is the report that at the time of the birth of Christ "there were shepherds abiding in the field, watching their flocks by night," a circumstance not natural in the latitude of Bethlehem near the shortest day. That is the height of the rainy season in Judea, and the date does not appear to have been observed generally before the fifth century.

Many students of Biblical history have argued that the story about the star of Bethlehem points to a date for the Nativity not later than May 8, B. C. 6. On that date the planets Venus and Jupiter were so closely in conjunction as seen from the earth that the apparent distance between them was equal only to the breadth of the full moon. These planets were then visible in the east a couple of hours before sunrise and must have produced a strikingly beautiful appearance and have been spoken of as one object. That was about fifty days less than two years before the death of Herod, a fact which harmonizes well with other conditions of the narrative, for it is probable that the mandate for the slaughter of all the children two years old and under was issued some months before his decease, and the limit of two years would leave an ample margin for any uncertainty as to the time of the appearance of the star, as related by the magi; also there were no paschal full moons on a Friday between the years B. C. 6 and A. D. 33 and no other following that till A. D. 60.

THE STAR OF BETHLEHEM.

From this it would seem to follow that Christ was thirty-eight years old at the time of the crucifixion, and this would vindicate the sagacity of the Jewish doctors who affirmed that he was not yet fifty (forty?) years old. It is remarked, too, that in the spring of the same year there was a triple conjunction of planets—Saturn, Jupiter and Mars—and that the first two named were in conjunction as seen from the earth no less than three times in the year preceding—that is, B. C. 7.

Another theory about the star of Bethlehem which has been advanced is that the star seen by the magi is Spica, the leading brilliant in the constellation of Virgo, the Virgin. For many years before and after the Christian era the star was changing its place until it was then literally a "star in the east," and its movement in that direction may have been the very fact noticed by the wise men of some centuries preceding who expected that the prophecy about the Virgin would be fulfilled when its principal star reached the position noted. If this were so the visit of the magi from Bactria, in the far east, is easily explained, and the chief difficulty attending the explanation lies in the fact that such an important search as they undertook is noticed by only one out of the four evangelists.

The uncertainty of the centuries in regard to the date of the Nativity in year and month may never be cleared up. Its existence has been unfairly cited as reason for disbelieving the whole narration. The people of 2,000 years ago attached little importance to dates, except current ones, and it may be remembered that the destruction of Jerusalem occurred between the time of the Nativity and the writing of the gospels, at least in the shape in which it has come down to us.

A Mistletoe Doubt

By W. B. HOLLAND

SWEET Bessie was there 'neath the mistletoe,
An alluring picture in pink and white.
Her eyes were inviting, her cheeks aglow,
Her lips were puckered and arranged just right.

She knew, of course, when I found her there
That she was caught in the kissing trap.
I got the kiss—she played the game fair—
But I think she expected the other chap.

Hardships of a Career.

Said old Bill Jones to Ezra Bings:
"My friend, you just watch me!
I'm going to do a lot of things
You'll be surprised to see.
I'm going to lead a movement great
And lift my voice on high
And rank with those who legislate
In congress by and by!"
And old Bill Jones he went ahead
And did exactly as he said.

He sits in congress day by day
And stays awake at night
To study out what he must say
To set the nation right.
All summer long he's up in arms
For every kind of strife,
While Ezra Bings enjoys the charms
Of simple, placid life.
And all that keeps old Bill afloat
Is Ezra's influential vote.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

THE dawn is gray and chilly with the frost.
The old year's pulse now flutters, now is still,
And all our twelvemonth's deeds, for good or ill,
Pass into shadow, silent, one by one,
While from the night wherein we wander, lost,
The new year rises with the rising sun.

A new year? Nay; 'tis but the same old year,
The same remorseless round of sun and rain,
Of seasons in their order, joy and pain—
The old emotions playing upon strings
That wax a little older, drawing near
The final end of all remembered things.

Earth ages, and the very mountains nod
With years, and we who crawl upon their breast
Pass at the sliding sands' benign behest.
Hate fades, greed fails, lust crumbles into clay,
And there are left but love and faith and God,
To whom a thousand years are as a day.
—Reginald Wright Kauffman.

A New Year Proposal.

"What resolutions have I vowed to keep the coming year?
Come, sit beside me, maiden fair, and straightway you shall hear.
I've pledged myself to choose one girl from out the throng so gay
And love her with an honest love forever and for aye.

"I'll work for her with brain and brawn, with all my might and main,
Until I've won her everything that honesty can gain.
I'll fill her life with all that's good till life itself is done.
And while we train our minds and hearts we'll not neglect the fun.

"Now, tell me, won't you, maiden fair, what you have vowed to do?
For I've laid bare my inmost soul to no one but to you."
"I've made no pledges," she replied in so demure a tone,
"But if you don't object I'll try to help you keep your own."
—Wallace Dunbar Vincent.

The Best Known Christmas Poem.

"'Twas the Night Before Christmas"—those delightful verses that will charm both the old and young as long as there are stockings to be hung—was written ninety-one years ago, just before the holiday season, by Clement Clark Moore, then professor of oriental languages in the New York Theological seminary. It has become an American classic, and no Christmas day is complete without a reading of his charming little lyric that has lived and gladdened the Christmastide for nearly 100 years.

The Seven Sets of Presents.

ALL the world's a Christmas tree,
And all the men and women merely children.
They have their presents and remembrances,
And one man in his time gets many gifts,
His lot being seven series. At first the infant,
With his feeding spoons and rattles;
Then the trumpet and tin soldiers, skates and sleigh
And fireman's helmet, and then the lover,
Sighing like a furnace with a gaudy necktie
Knit by his lady's fingers. Then a hubby,
Showered by his friends with socks and gloves
And pipes that will not draw, ink wells of brass
And fountain pens that leak, or else some painted
China that his wife can use as well. And then
The middle aged of fair round belly—a little cap
To hide his shining pate. The sixth set sinks
Into the carpet slipper game or bad cigars—
A silver cutter, since his teeth are bad.
Last gift of all that ends this strange
Eventful history is failing sight.
Then they bring a magnifying glass
For grandpa.

ORIGIN OF CHRISTMAS CARDS.

First One Was Designed Nearly Seventy Years Ago.

The Christmas card as we know it has an origin easily traceable, and it is now not quite seventy years ago since the first was designed.

The artist who claimed to be its originator and who was at any rate the first to see its possibilities was W. C. T. Dobson, R. A., an Englishman who when quite a young man in 1844 was prompted at Christmas to make a little sketch symbolic of the season's joys and festivities and to send it to a friend. It seemed to give great pleasure, and the next year Mr. Dobson determined to follow up the idea on a larger scale and by having his card lithographed was enabled to send copies to twenty-five or thirty friends.

The delight with which they were received was so great that Mr. Dobson was quick to perceive that he had found out a new pleasure for Christmas.

ABOUT this time papa remarks
Irrelevantly (eyes cast down),
"I haven't seen a tie I like
In any shop in this whole town."

About this time the minister
Drops in to call on mother dear
And hints that he is well supplied
With slippers, gifts of yesteryear.

About this time big Brother Jack
Declares: "Cigars no more I smoke!
A pipe whiff now and then perhaps!
No, mother, this is not a joke!"

About this time poor mother dear
Perplexed is and inclined to sigh,
"How strange that each should show distaste
For just the gifts I meant to buy!"

CHRISTMAS IN MANILA.

CHRISTMAS for the majority of the 225,000 inhabitants of Manila—that is, the Filipinos—begins on Christmas eve. There are no stockings hung, however, for stockings are not popular, even with the most aristocratic senoritas, who usually go bare ankled. Midnight mass is the occasion which brings thousands to the churches. These fine edifices are thrown open and blaze with myriads of candles and electric lights.

Manila at midnight on Christmas eve is probably gayer than at any other time of the year. The streets are thronged with carriages and people in their best attire. Many Americans turn out on Christmas eve also to see the displays and the people and make church to church inspection tours in parties. Fine trained choirs and stringed orchestras render excellent music.

The weather during the holiday season is just cool enough to dispel the chronic laziness which pervades Manila during most of the year and put a little spice into the blood. At noon the thermometer will probably not go over 84 or 85 degrees. At night, however, a blanket on the bed is not too much.

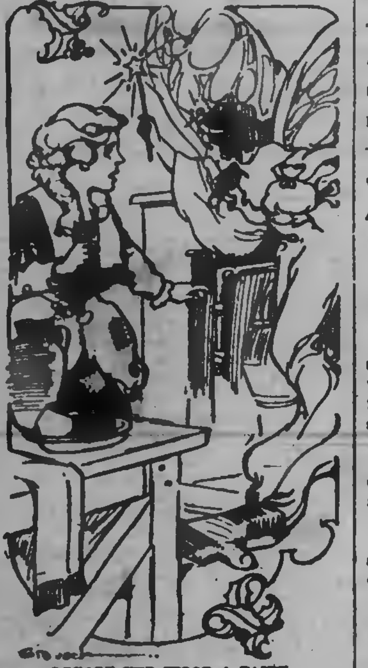
A KIND FAMILY'S CHRISTMAS GIFT

ONCE, long ago, in the mountains of southern France, there lived a poor but honest family of a father, mother and two children. The father was named Adam and the mother Hannah. The son, Peter, was twelve years of age, and the daughter, Esther, was only nine.

Father Adam was an honest, hard working man. On the steep sides of the mountains he kept his sheep and a cow, and in a little valley that lay between the mountains Mother Hannah made a garden, tilling the soil by her own hands, with the aid of a few simple gardening tools. And her son Peter gave her what assistance a boy of his years could give. Esther kept the little thatched cottage tidy and clean, preparing the meals for the three workers who were out of doors most of the day and who came in at night from their toil very, very tired.

But they never grumbled at their lot, for they had hopes that Fortune would smile on them some time. And she did—in the form of a fairy.

One morning the day before Christmas Father Adam and family sat around their plain wooden table eating mush and milk. Adam spoke.



BEFORE HER STOOD A FAIRY.

"'Tis the holy time of Christmas, mother," he said, "and we should do an act of charity toward some one poorer than ourselves, even though it should be giving ever and ever so small a gift. The Lord gave his life for sufferers in his name on the day of his Nativity. What say you, mother?"

"You are right," agreed Mother Hannah. "There is the Widow David, who stands in great need. She has two children, and the wolves got among her sheep and killed three of the finest. She is trying hard to keep her children and herself. What say you to our sending her a bag of wheat and a small cheese?"

"Very good, mother," agreed Father Adam. "And as I shall have to watch the sheep and cow either Peter or Esther shall take the wheat and cheese to Widow David's cot."

"I'll go," offered Esther, "for Peter and mother are digging up the ground for the planting of vines in the spring."

So it was agreed that Esther should take the dogcart and make the journey over the mountain to the cottage of the Widow David. As soon as breakfast was over Esther tidied up the house and placed the noon meal—a loaf of bread, a jug of homemade wine and a small cheese—on the table. "Mother and Peter will be hungry after the forenoon spent in the garden," she said. "Poor father always carries his bread and cheese in his pocket and eats as he herds the sheep.

"Now, before going I shall fix the fire to hold till noonday; otherwise the house will be cold on mother's and Peter's return."

So saying, Esther picked up a huge log that lay beside the fireplace. "Ah, this is the log father said should burn our Christmas eve fire. It will soon be Christmas eve, and I'll throw the log on the flame and have the house cheery on the return of the dear ones." But just as Esther was lifting one end of the heavy log—the Yule log—a flash of light leaped from the farther end and caused Esther to close her eyes. When she opened them again there before her stood a fairy. "Ah! I have come to bring you some Christmas cheer," said the fairy. "Your parents are good and deserving folk. They were robbing their larder to help the needy widow. So here is a bit of good fortune for you and yours, little helpful maid. Take of it for yourselves and for those about you who are in need." Then, before Esther could reply, the fairy had disappeared, leaving on the hearth a bag of gold.

The little girl ran out and called in her parents and brother. When the father looked into the big bag of gold he said that there was enough there to keep them all in comfort for the rest of their lives and with which to help their less fortunate neighbors as well.

And you may be sure there was a merry Christmas for the family, with many good wishes for the kind fairy.

A QUESTION.

If there isn't any Santa Claus, who is it turns your feet
Toward the shop where gifts are smiling as you walk along the street?
Who is it sets you thinking, though you're busy as can be
About the songs and laughter round the children's Christmas tree?
Though you vow "this Christmas business is a nuisance anyhow."
There's an influence at work that clears the frowning from your brow.
The small tin trumpet sounds a blast that wakes your soul serene
To homage for the doll who is a lady and a queen.
And the once prosaic world where it has been your lot to dwell
Is a realm of fascinations 'neath some mystic fairy spell.
If there isn't any Santa Claus, who is it, day by day,
That turns our thoughts to Christmas, strive to shun it as we may?
Who comes at this bleak season armed with telepathic arts
And by generous suggestion dominates our minds and hearts?

DAINTY NAPERY.

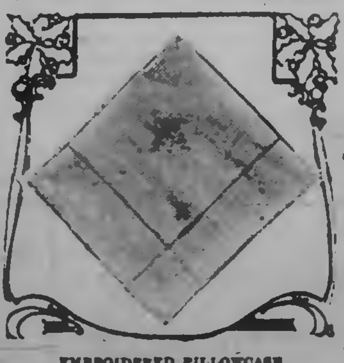
This Is a Gift Within the Means of All and Useful to All.

The housewife's linen closet is never so full that she fails to appreciate a well selected gift of napery. Anything from tablecloths to doilies, from fancy sheets to pillowcases, will be welcomed.

Illustrated here is a hemstitched pillowcase, one of a set. They are all embroidered with the recipient's initials and are handmade of fine linen.

Centerpieces of heavy linen lace and muslin embroidery are easily made and are not expensive considering their ornamental effect. Exceedingly pretty centers can be evolved from cluny lace and heavy Irish linen, handworked with eyeletting.

In addition to the napery which goes upon the table, every housekeeper needs a number of scarfs or squares for the tops of her sideboard and serving stand. These are best made of heavy linen finished with hemstitching or drawn work or edged with buttonholed scallops and hand embroidered in a fine design.



EMBROIDERED PILLOWCASE.

Bed sets, consisting of spread, pillow covers and valance, are always a welcome addition to the napery closet, and what color to select need not worry the donor, as the smart thing in these outfits is white scrim trimmed with eyelet embroidery or fillet insertion edging and motif. A dozen of huckaback towels of extra length, bordered with an applied design in color, are useful. If you would carry joy to the housewife's heart send her some guest room towels in heavy linen with ends done in fourteenth century stitching. These scroll and floral designs are most of all quaint when developed on a background of yellow darning, and as the centers of the flowers used with the scrolls are also in yellow stitching the work is extremely effective.

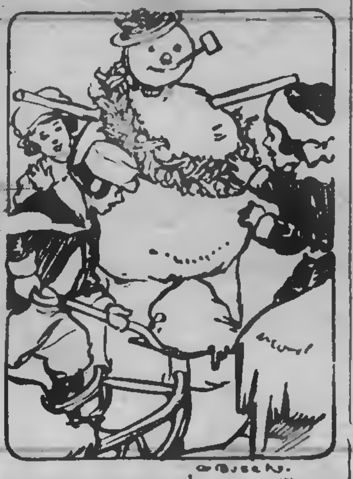
NO ACCOUNTING FOR SANTA CLAUS

THE twins were deep in the mysteries of mincemeat making under the direction of the faithful Dinah. Maud stood on a chair chopping beef and apples in a huge wooden bowl; Marian sorted raisins and citron at a side table; Dinah stirred some savory mess that cooked. So busy were they that the stealthy entrance of Wilbur was not noticed until his excited face peered over Maud's shoulder. With a startled scream she dropped her chopper: "Go away, you horrid boy! We're too busy to bother with your pranks."

"Indeed, I'm not up to any pranks at all," he began in an aggrieved tone. "I've just seen something that makes me so excited!"

"Don't keep us in suspense!" came in curt accents from the side table.

"I've discovered all sorts of odd shaped bundles in the storeroom closet!" he exclaimed impressively. The twins gasped, and Dinah spoke crossly. "And what was you doin' in dat closet? Chillen ain't got no call to meddle in what doan' concern 'em, nohow!"



THE TRIO REVELED IN THE SHINING MASSES.

But neither of the three was to be put off thus. "How many were there?" asked Marian. "Did you peek in 'em?" queried Maud. Then Marian's sense of honor came to the rescue. "It really doesn't matter," she said. "They are evidently meant to be secrets. Perhaps Santa Claus is concerned in them."

"But," began the boy hesitatingly, "it makes me doubt if Santa Claus really exists to see all these things beforehand. Do you think there is such a person?"

"Well, Wilbur Pennington, of all silly questions! Doesn't he always fill our stockings and bring us a tree? Doesn't he always get the notes we put in the fireplace for him and give us everything we write for? Haven't we been told loads of times about his reindeer and sled and workshop at the north pole and his jolly face and all the rest of it?" These questions were fired at him in a volley by both twins.

"Well, I don't care," he answered doggedly. "The fellows in school laughed at me when I spoke of him the other day, and it does seem queer how he can do all the things he does."

"Go 'way, chile!" ejaculated Dinah. "Dere's lot ob t'ings dat's past our understandin'. Does we know how de blessed sun kin shine ober de whole country at once? Does we know how de wind blows an' de waves come rollin' widout ceasin'? We needn't care how Santa Claus gets roun' de way he do. I disremember de time when he forgot me. Ever since I was a li'l' pickaninny befo' de war he's brung me gifts. Old missus used to 'low him to set up de tree in de big mansion an' leave de darkies' gifs 'long wid de white folks'. Go 'way, chile! Doan' you try to make me believe dere ain't no Santa Claus. 'cause dere jest nacherally has to be one." And Dinah stirred violently to ease her injured feelings.

WILBUR TELLS HIS SECRET.

"Of course there is a Santa Claus," said Marian, coming to her rescue. "You see, Wilbur, it's just this way. There is no doubt of the love and care that give such joy to boys and girls at this happy time—the love that gratifies their dearest wishes and takes into account all their efforts to do what is right, even though the results often look like failure.

"It really doesn't matter by what name we call this love. If we're told it is Santa Claus, why, then, we ought to agree to accept the old fellow, with all his delightful traditions and novel ways of doing kindnesses. It's really the spirit of Santa Claus that makes Christmas the happiest day in the whole year. So I, for one, am not going to deny the dear fellow's existence. Come out and explore the snowdrifts till the sun goes down. Maybe we'll discover the north pole."

And the trio reveled in the shining masses until the shadows of darkness swallowed the sunlight, much as their doubts of Santa Claus had been swallowed in the depths of trusting love.

A rich young widow and her weeds are soon parted.

CHRISTMASTIDE IN MEXICO.

A Feast That Is Celebrated For Two Weeks.

In fiesta loving Mexico Christmas is celebrated for two weeks, beginning with the 17th of December and not ending until New Year's day. The principal features of the celebration are the "posadas" and "pinatas," both very quaint and picturesque customs and entirely peculiar to Mexico.

"Posada" in Spanish means "abiding place" or "inn" and in Mexico is applied to the nightly semireligious and entirely jolly performances which in the houses of all Mexicans last from the 17th to the 25th of December. These celebrations are called "posadas" because they are in commemoration of that night when the holy family unavailingly searched for an "abiding place" or "inn" and, unable to find such a place, sought refuge in the stable where our Lord was born.

At an early hour, on account of the clamoring children, the signal is given for the pinata breaking, and all the guests flock gayly about the bobbing clown, with the servants and small babies congregated in the background. When the assembly is complete all join hands and circle about the big glittering toy as it swings from its hook in the ceiling. One of the children is blindfolded and placed in the center of the ring, just under the pinata; a long, light pole is handed to her and she is told to strike carefully and "con mucha fuerza" (with much force) in the direction of the pinata.

Good nature demands that all of the children first have an opportunity to break the pinata. As they naturally are never able to do so, the clown being a tough fibered individual, the turn of the grownups comes next. One by one they are blindfolded, turned about three times and then admonished to "strike out."

Amid applause from the elders and wild yells from the children the pinata is finally located and struck at viciously, when—hey, presto!—the poor clown's gay bloomers and red and gold waistcoat are rent from top to bottom, his big sombrero is sent flying across the room, and down upon your devoted head comes a deafening rain of oranges, nuts, small candles, all sorts of small, unbreakable presents and all conceivable kinds of dulces and good things to eat.

GOLD MINE FOR CONSUMPTIVES

If your age is fifty you may remember "Sanitary Fair Stamp"—if not don't try. They were first used in Boston to raise money for the wounded soldiers of the Civil War. A million dollars was raised between '62 and '65. The movement was then discontinued on this continent for a generation. It reappeared in the meantime in different forms in many European countries. A Norwegian stamp on a letter to Jacob Riis, the eminent Social worker, New York, revived interest on this side. He published an article suggesting possible new uses for the stamps. Like many another bright idea, Mr. Riis' suggestion fell into good ground, sprang up and multiplied a thousand fold. The good ground was the resourceful mind of an energetic Red Cross Society Lady Secretary, who realized three thousand dollars right away from a stamp campaign. The American Red Cross Society then took the stamps up on a national basis. That was in 1908.

In Canada the largest Christmas stamp campaigns have been carried on by the National Sanitarium Association—"Canada's greatest charity." During the past five years this Association has sold six million stamps, providing about $50,000 for the needy consumptives. Other smaller societies, mostly those interested in tuberculosis, from coast to coast have also issued the stamps for several years past. The campaign has now become an important and firmly established part of each year's Christmas activity in many centres throughout the Dominion. A cold douche was thrown on the Canadian campaigns last year by the postal authorities when temporary prohibition was issued forbidding the use of the stamps on mail matter, owing to the confusion caused by them, particularly in the distribution of mail with foreign countries.

Strong representations having been made by the disappointed charity workers, the prohibition was recalled and permission was given to use the stamps again, but as seals on the back only of mail matter.

The Postmaster-General has recently confirmed this permission for the approaching Christmas season. Active preparations are now being made by many societies for a more vigorous campaign than ever. We may, therefore, expect the busy little miner, in many new and attractive guises, to greet us again when snow flies—reminding us of our special privilege and opportunity to follow an example of old, by lightening the load and brightening the lives of our afflicted brother men and sister women—not forgetting the little suffering children.

A CHRISTMAS LETTER.

DEAREST PHYLLIS, pray remember when you're making up the list
Of your presents for December (unless I am to be missed)
That I've slippers, picture brackets, smoking sets of various types,
Half a dozen smoking jackets, thirty-seven meerschaum pipes,
Twenty patent "kid glove menders," collar boxes by the score,
Of embroidered silk suspenders, forty-'leven pairs or more;
That each year since I was twenty I've received a paperweight,
Have pen wipers, inkstands plenty, paper cutters—twenty-eight;
That I've Browning and Longfellow by the hundred—every kind—
Shakespeare—black and blue and yellow;
Milton till I'm nearly blind.

So there's just one present only that I'm wanting in this year
Of my bachelorship so lonely—that's yourself, my Phyllis, dear.
—James Courtney Challiss.

FATHER SICK SO LITTLE GIRL OF FIVE DOES WASHING WHILE MOTHER EARNS BREAD

One of Many Cases That Have Come to the Notice of Sanitary Inspector.

Sanitary Inspector Spence relates, that while engaged in his weekly trip a few days ago, he came across a home, or rather a shack, where a small girl of only five years of age was doing the washing. The house which consisted of two bedrooms and another room. One bed rooms contained about 450 cubic feet, according to the nearest estimate of Mr. Spence. Four of the children slept in this room. Owing to the necessity of the mother being engaged out around the city doing work, to keep the entire family alive, because of the husband being incapacitated through illness, the little girl was forced to do work and look after the other children.

Mr. Spence says this is only one of many instances he had come across while engaged in his work and that if any philanthropic persons in the city wish to assist these kind of people such as the inspector is coming in contact with every day, they would do well to communicate with him. He will produce some rather astonishing facts of the poor in the city.

"How will it be later on during the winter," enquired the reporter.

"It will be awful," was the answer.

NEUTRAL ZONE IS CREATED

International Fleet Provides Ships for Foreigners in Tampico

WASHINGTON Dec. 12. — Rear Admiral Fletcher, commanding the United States squadrons stationed in Mexican waters, sent the Navy Department yesterday a long despatch describing conditions at Tampico where a desperate battle was in progress Wednesday and yesterday between the Federal garrison and the Constitutionalists for possession of the city. Acting in co-operation with the British admiral, Sir Christopher Craddock, and the commander of the German cruiser in the harbor, Admiral Fletcher designated boundaries of a neutral zone and notified the commanding officers of both contending forces of the fact, and warned them not to direct their fire toward the zone or molest foreigners taking refuge there. Many British and German refugees went on board the steamers Logician and Cecile.

REAR ADMIRAL FLETCHER.

The Federals were driven into the city limits early in the fight, but no casualties had occurred among the foreign population at the time of Admiral Fletcher's despatch.

HON. SAM. HUGHES WOULD TRAIN OFFICERS FOR THE MILITIA IN THE UNIVERSITIES

Residence, Armories and Parade Grounds Will be Provided for Students Taking Militia Course—Handsome Donations Have Been Made and Others Are Expected From Rich Canadians.

OTTAWA, Dec. 12.—To turn out annually three or four hundred university students throughout Canada as trained officers of the Canadian militia is the object of a scheme developed by Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, to which there has been a generous contribution by Lord Strathcona of about $100,000, and by Major R. W. Leonard, chairman of the National Transcontinental Commission, of about half a million dollars. These two donations are to start the project at McGill and Queen's Universities, and Col. Hughes is in communication with other wealthy Canadians with the prospect of getting donations for the University of Toronto, University of New Brunswick, University of British Columbia and Laval University. Student residences, armories and parade grounds are to be created in connection with the military training course.

Lord Strathcona's gift will not be available until the plans at McGill are completed. For Major Leonard's gift for Queen's of a site and buildings, several acres to the southwest of the campus are being secured. Dormitories, drill hall and armories with gymnastic equipment will be erected there. The whole is to be completely furnished. There will also be a large parade ground. The Militia Department will provide the drill hall and armories.

The Militia Department will also supply under certain conditions free rations for students-in-residence in the residence to be erected by Major Leonard, to provide instructoral officers from the permanent corps, and to arrange for an obligatory course of lectures and examinations in military subjects in connection with the university. All students taking advantage of the residence must take the course qualifying them to be militia officers, and they must agree to become efficient members of the Canadian Officers' Training Corps after one year.

The students will be required to pay a sufficient sum each week to cover expenses of servants, heating, fuel, etc., but they will otherwise have free residence, and their board bills during university terms will thus be very considerably reduced. Privileges of residence are to be distributed as nearly equal as practicable among the different yearly classes.

Students taking the course will be required to perform at least six hours' drill or training per week, including the taking of a prescribed course of lectures on military subjects.

It is stated that the whole scheme is being put in charge of Lieut. M. Peterson, son of Principal Peterson of McGill University, under the direction of Col. the Hon. Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and the Headquarters Staff. Lieut. Peterson will act as secretary and director of the training system. He is a graduate of Cambridge University.

COLLEGIATE PUPILS STRIKE; THEY REFUSE TO BE VACCINATED

HAMILTON, Dec. 12.—Owing to an anti-vaccination strike which 120 pupils of the Collegiate Institute have undertaken the Christmas examinations at that institution have been called off this year and the board of health has been given a task that will likely be sufficient to provide work for the unemployed of Hamilton in keeping the strikers within the bounds of their ownhomes for two weeks, as provided by law.

The whole trouble originated with one case of smallpox. A boy in room seven, developed a rash, but attended school for several days before it was determined that his ailment was smallpox. When the order went forth that all pupilswho had not been vaccinated within seven years should make arrangements to have the operation performed at their own expense at once, there was a general strike. There are 320 pupils in the collegiate who had not been vaccinated within the time limit set by the health act.

After it had been found that the health officers were in earnest in the matter 200 students were vaccinated and are back at their desks.

But 120 of the pupils, either through parental or personal objections, refused to undergo the scratching that would make them, according to high authorities, immune from serious effects so far as smallpox is concerned.

Lindsay, Dec. 12.—The body of Mrs. R. Hungerford, was found in the River Scugog near the Ops swing bridge, about 1.30 o'clock yesterday afternon by Messrs. Herb. Begg and Francis McPhee

192 CALLS FOR THE FIREMEN SO FAR

So far this year the firemen have answered 192 calls, and with nineteen more days ahead of them they expect to make it 200 and likewise a record. Last year the number of calls was in the one hundred and thirties, but correspondingly as the city grows, the number of fires increase, thus the large number of runs this year in comparison with 1912 is counted for.

No one need try to assist the firemen in making the 200 mark however, by ringing in a false alarm.

Happy William

Wm. Moder, colored, appeared in court on the charge of being drunk. He was fined the usual $2. Moder came here a few weeks ago with the negro minstrels who played at the Princess, but on starting out to celebrate he was left behind when the company left the city. Since then William has been hitting the high spots, and as a result he was pinched last night.

On being asked if be had sufficient to pay his fine. William turned over to the spectators saying, Sah, boss, am you goine to pay my fine?" There was no answer.

With a cheerful smile he left the court, to await until some one comes to his rescue.

BARTENDER DENIES HAVING SUPPLIED MINOR WITH LIQUOR

Magistrate Reserved His Judgment Till To-morrow morning — Lad is only 18 Years Old.

Judgment was reserved until tomorrow morning in the liquor case of Jas. Lebarr, charged with supplying liquor to a minor, one Norman Hurl, on last Saturday. Lebar pleaded not guilty to the charge.

Hurl in the box for the prosecution, said that on Saturday afternoon about 2:30 he went into the American Hotel and asking for a beer, was served.

He then asked for more and was served with whiskey. The bartender who served him was Jas Lebar, who was present in the court room and identified by the witness. Witness said that he was only eighteen years of age.

The mother gave evidence to the effect that her son was only eighteen years of age.

W. G. Metheral was the first witness called by Lebar for the defence, and stated that on the day in question, he was on his way home from work and that he saw the young boy Hurl and two others, Laverne Killenbeck and a man named Downey in front of the Oriental. All were rather drunk, especially Hurl. This was about six o'clock.

"Did anyone talk to you about this case?" asked Chief Thompson.

"No sir."

"How did you come to know what to talk about?" enquired the Magistrate when the witness had finished his story.

"Witness replied that he knew the boy was drunk because he had seen him."

Witness admitted being a boarder at the American Hotel.

Hugh Gibbons, a clerk at the hotel, said that he had seen the boy come into the hotel on Saturday evening about 6:30 and that he had put him out. Killenbeck was with him.

Laverne Killenbeck stated that he met Hurl on Saturday evening and tried to get him started for home. It was about 7:40 in the American Hotel.

"Did Gibbons put you out?" asked the Chief.

"Why, I am not sure," answered the witness.

Percy Dalton said he saw Gibbons putting Hurl out. Hurl was drunk at the time. He was also a boarder at the hotel.

Percy Holland swore that he saw Hurl drunk in the hotel about 5 o'clock. When he went into the bar Hurl was at the opposite end of the bar from where Lebar was serving.

"What are you doing now?" questioned the Chief.

"Nothing," was the reply. Witness denied that he talked the matter over with any one regarding the case. He admitted to the Chief that he had seen Hurl about half past one on the afternoon, and that he was sober then.

Earl Downey, giving his evidence, said that he saw Hurl at the Palace Hotel about six o'clock. Hurl was drunk then. He saw the boy later. About half past six he and Killenbeck treid to take Hurl home. Witness denied talking the case over with anyone, but admitted being drunk the night of the 6th.

Jas. Lebar, the bartender, said that he never sold liquor to Hurl as he only knew him to see him. He was aware that the boy was under age. Had the boy asked for liquor he would have been refused.

"BUN FEEDS" NOT NEEDED TO GET FUNDS FOR CHURCH

Rev. T. J. Mansell Preached to Bowmanville Congregation—Offerings Totalled $1000

The Bowmanville Statesman has the following to say about the services in the Methodist Church on Sunday last, when Rev. T. J. Mansell was the special speaker:

Sunday, Dec. 7 Bowmanville Methodist Church celebrated another most successful anniversary, the 34th annual celebration in its history. The preacher for the day was Rev. T. J. Mansell, pastor of Charlotte Street Methodist Church, Peterboro, and at the close of the day a more delighted preacher and people would be hard to find. The weather man favored, and splendid congregations greeted the speaker at both services, especially in the evening, when at least a thousand persons filled the auditorium and galleries. The Rev. Mr. Mansell preached two very fine discourses. In the morning he based his sermon on the only parable in the book of Isaiah 5, 12, outlining the history of the Jewish nation, compared it with the greater heritage of the British nation, of which Canada as a Dominion, the church in general and the Methodist church in particular, are recipients, which calls for grateful acknowledgement.

The evening sermon on "Did not our hearts burn . . . . while He opened to us the scripture" was, like the morning, a scholarly presentation of a wonderful theme by a man of wide reading, deep research, and accurate knowledge of human nature. Everyone thoroughly enjoyed his vision of the Christ. Rev. T. W. Jolliffe as the first pastor of this united congregation, by request, assisted in the evening service. The offerings for the day amounted to over $1000 with some more promised. When Mr. P. C. Trebilcock, Secretary, conveyed to the congregation the news of the day's offerings they arose and sang "Praise God from Whom all Blesings Flow." The Board desire to thank all who in any way assisted. Considerable repairs costing $800 have been made to the roof of the sacred edifice during the past year and it is intended to redecorate the entire interior of the church, schoolroom and class rooms, put a new covering on the floor, ultimately a new parsonage, and improve the property in a way that will do credit to the congregation and its poular pastor, Rev. H. B. Kenny, who was absent during the day, preaching in Charlotte St. church, Peterboro.

Teas Out of Date

This church's method of raising money for use by the Trustee Board in the upkeep of the church property, electric lighting, heating, janitor's salary, salaries and expenses of the choir and all other expenses for running the church, not including the pastor's salary which is paid by regular Sunday offerings, instead of the old-fashioned anual tea meeting, was adopted 23 years ago when the Trustee Board introduced the Thank-Offering plan for anniversary Sunday when every man, woman and child from the oldest to the youngest is given an opportunity to give in an envelope an offering for the yearly expenditure of the church. Contributors are requested to write each individual name in full on the envelope and the amount enclosed, and all sums of 25c and upward are published in the annual report. Instead of the father and mother giving for the whole family, every member of the household is requested to give what he or she feels disposed. This system has worked splendidly, and the congregation as a whole has never failed, with a single exception, in placing a joint offering to the amount requested.

THEY GUESSED: THEN THEY HAD ANOTHER GUESS

Stern Sex Were Entertained by Young Ladies of the Y.M.C.A.

Last night was a "Red Letter" evening in the history of the Y W.'s many entertainments . There have been many interesting evenings, but certainly there never was a more enjoyable one than the entertaining of Mr. Thompson's class of young men from the Y.M.C.A. About fifty were present, the girls befitted and bewitching, wore their best gowns and sweetest smiles, "queens" every one of them.

Such a lovely crowd and such a splendid time. After promenading for some time, in order that everyone might become acquainted, a book-guessing contest, for which prizes were given, was begun and many were the laughs over the mistakes, especially as each representation was so easy.

Later the entertainers and entertained, were divided into groups of eight, each group singing some well known song. These songs were very much enjoyed and heartily entered into by all. Miss Ada Black who accompanied the singers on the piano, contributed very much to the success of the evening, as also did the "Mandolin Club," who were kind enough to favor the gathering with several selections.

After a dainty supper, a vote of thanks, proposed by Mr. J. J. Thompson, to the secretaries of the Y.W. C.A. and the young ladies for the very delightful evening spent, was heartily seconded by the young men, and the most enjoyable evening closed with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne," many hand-shakes and "come agains."

ST. ANDREW'S CHURCH

Rev. A. H. McConnachie, the new minister of Centreville, will preach Andrew's tonight at eight o'clock. Mr. McConnachie is a Scotchman and a splendid preacher, so a large attendance is expected.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1913.

THE DESPISED HINDU.

WHATEVER MAY BE SAID about the Hindus they are more literary than some of the darker races. A Hindu woman has taken the Nobel prize for literature this year. We have just received two publications edited and written by Hindus in London and they are very creditable publications. The Hindu may surprise the world yet. He is not great at mechanics, like the Japanese, and he will never build a navy. But there are other worlds to conquer than these and his thoughtful and mystic touch might do us some good in Canada. The Chinaman is mercenary all the time. He is clever, but he is not remarkable for the finer qualities that the Hindu possesses.

But the chief difficulty for the Hindu is one of climate, so far as his living in Canada is concerned. He is purely Oriental and has not the hardy physical qualities of the Chinaman. British Columbia would, of course, be more suitable for him than Saskatchewan. But the British Columbians are already sick of natives of the Orient and would be glad to ship a few back to the far East. The Columbians are proud of possessing an "English climate" and they would fain have an English population. They ought to have just what they want, and if the Hindu is not wanted he must go somewhere else or stay at home. Meanwhile agitation is going on in India against the supposed persecution of Hindus in Canada and we take the following from the Hindu journal entitled The Khalsa Advocate, "the only English weekly of the Sikhs," this is from the account of a speech at a mass meeting held at Armiston "to express sympathy with our brethren in Canada:"

"The object of to-day's meeting is first to offer our sympathy on the disabilities, and difficulties of our brethren domiciled in Canada, a self-governing colony, which owes its allegiance to the August Sovereign whose loyal subjects we have the proud privilege to be and to record our protest against the unbecoming and harsh limitations that have been placed upon the Indian immigration into that country. Their grievances are real and the restrictions that cause the separation of husband from wife and children from parents are not only humiliating but are galling in the extreme. We Indians are proud of being the loyal subjects of H. M. the King Emperor and our claims of equal rights of British citizenship rest on the broad basis of the Proclamation of Her Imperial Majesty Queen Empress Victoria, the good of blessed memory which is truly very kith and kin. Our relations with the Government of India are those of a child to its parents and as loving and dutiful children we must approach the parent confidingly and lay bare, with one voice, our mind to the loving care of the Government and I am confident that our just claims will receive their fullest consideration and support."

THE LUST FOR POWER.

HON. W. S. FIELDING, who has recently returned from a trip to England and who is to immediately take up the editorship of the Montreal Telegraph, addressed the Montreal Reform Club at a banquet given in his honor—a sort of initiation into the Journalistic Forum. Mr. Fielding is not new to editorial work. It was in journalism that he won his spurs as a politician and his coming back will be watched with interest by the Canadian Press.

In his speech, which was uttered in the presence of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mr. Fielding showed himself to be a calm and cautious-minded debater. He did not vituperate or lose his head, what he said was uttered as by a man who was carefully weighing his words, who while he was ready to get a thrust at his opponents, was not vicious or unfair. We do not agree with all Mr. Fielding's conclusions, but we give him credit for British outspokeness, tempered by the true spirit of a gentleman. May we have more of this in Canadian politics.

Mr. Fielding said a great many things and covered a large field and there are a few points upon which we would offer some comment. For some reason or other the Liberal party have got the notion that Canada can not be governed only by themselves. There is a feverish desire on the part of many Liberals that Sir Wilfrid Laurier must at all costs be got into power again. Sir Wilfrid himself seems to share in this desire and is perhaps largely responsible for it in his followers. At the very meeting in question Sir Wilfrid prefaced one remark by saying:—"I am not more virtuous than other men. Power and office and success are enticing." This may be a sentence torn from its context, but it is nevertheless illuminative.

The point we desire to emphasize is that the Liberal party have been so long in power and they have developed such an enormous opinion of themselves that they really believe Canada will go to the dogs without they are immediately returned to office. Here is a list of Liberal achievements recited by Mr. Fielding in all good faith, it is worth framing:

Every step in the direction of imperialism was taken by the Liberal party.

It was the Liberal party that had established the Military College at Kingston.

It was the Liberal party that had established the British preference.

It was the Liberal party that had sent the troops to South Africa.

It was the Liberal party that had relieved the Mother Government of the burden of maintaining troops at Halifax and Esquimalt.

That is a magnificent record, but there is more to follow:

..Sir Wilfrid had found a condition of depression of Canada in 1896, but had left the country in prosperity, with an overflowing treasury and a generous surplus. He had found a bare Northwest and had left it in a teeming population.

If Canada owes all of these things to the Liberal Party, then Sir Wilfrid has earned the title of "Wilfrid The Omnipotent," and there is none else.

There is one favorable thing to be said for Mr. Fielding's list of Liberal achievments and that is, it fixes Sir Wilfrid as a full-bloom Imperialist; that is comforting. Our chief objection to the list is centred in one item and that is where Mr. Fielding says:—"It was the Liberal Party that sent the troops to South Africa." To the unsophisticated, this would appear that the Liberal Party were entirely responsible for that famous expression of Imperial sentiment; that the credit for the bravery and service of the Canadian troops in the Boer war belongs to Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his followers. Mr. Fielding would, of course, not go so far as to say that every man-Jack of the Canadian contingent was a Liberal!

With all that Mr. Fielding said regarding political corruption in both parties, every clean-handed politician must agree. But this will not be brought about by the "stove calling the kettle black." Corruption on one side breeds corruption in the other; men are apt to retaliate and do as they are done by. This is inexcusable, but it is, nevertheless, inevitable. It is born mainly of a lust for power, and the present temper of the Liberal Party is just the right temperature for the breeding of corruption. Why all this haste to get rid of Mr. Borden? The people have elected him to the position of Premier for a term of years, why not let the Government do its work? The Governing of a country is not solely in the hands of one party, no matter how powerful it may be. Public opinion has to be taken into account, and there is also ample scope for an active and critical opposition. Let Sir Wilfrid be content, he has had his day on the throne, and it was a glorious day. But this is a democratic country and we have no King but George the Fifth.

THE TWO WINSTONS.

AN AUSTRALIAN PAPER confuses Winston Spencer Churchill, the First Lord of the Admiralty, with the American novelist, author of "Inside the cup." Both of these gentlemen are known as Winston Churchill. There seems to be a competition between them as to who has the best right to the name. The novelist can claim priority, as he is the elder, but the Sea Lord leaves him a long way behind in public attention. The Englishman is often credited with writing the American's novels, but the American Winston is never accused of the occasional outbursts of the youthful First Lord of the Admiralty. The bestowal of a peerage might settle the matter. There is no hope of this for the American novelist, but he might become a "colonel."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THE GLOBE'S chief test of a party cry is alliteration, one of its latest epigrams of truth is: "Fielding and finance." We would suggest a few others, "Laurier and Liquor," "Rowell and Rubbish," "Hawkes and Hindus," "Globe and Glucose."

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

In and Out of Office.

Mail and Empire.

But there was a much worse slackening of business in this country in 1907, 1908, and in the early part of 1909. The Opposition of that day, however, did not turn the depression to party capital account. The politicians and newspapers on the Conservative side had a sense of responsibility, and their influence was exerted for the restoring of confidence and the reviving of business.

A Question of Class.

Montreal Mail.

The ten commandments placed in the same catagory "thy neighbor's wife," and "his ox, his ass, anything that is thy neighbor's." A good many men accept this literally, and class the wife with the domestic animals in the respect that she, too, is personal property. Has not title passed in the marriage contract? Does not the pronoun "my" indicate possession? The "unwritten law" we hear so much about has its basis in this theory.

THE TRAINING OF DAUGHTERS

By Annie S. Swan

The great mass of our girls are faulty, lovable, amiable, and are we to leave them to get through as best they can, keeping silent, even when our hearts are torn with anxiety and apprehension?

"Train up a child in the way he should go," said the Wise Man, "and when he is old he will not depart from it."

The withholding or imparting of sex-knowledge is a stiff problem vexing the souls of many mothers. This is so much a matter of temperament that it is not possible to lay down hard and fast rules.

I was reared in the strictest reticence by a mother of rare discernment, but who spoke less than any woman I have ever met. She knew the value of eloquent silence. It was a habit of her life. The atmosphere about her was so austere and pure that I suppose it communicated itself to her children. Perhaps that is the reason why all this insistence on sex problems stinks in my nostrils to this day.

We have had, and are having, far too much of it; the sex problem has been exalted out of all proportion to its place in life.

I believe that better men and women are bred in reticence, provided the home atmosphere is clean and lovely.

And that, to come to the last word, would seem to be the crux of the whole matter.

I would say to the mothers who take a high and holy, though often too poignant view of their own responsibilities, that God is on their side. That not one atom of their holy ministry, of their lovely example of purity and truth and devotion to duty, will ever be lost, or even forgotten.—British Weekly.

HE BREAKS DOWN

Arrival of Aged Father Unmans Schmidt

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.— Hans Schmidt, the one-time priest, on trial for the murder of Anna Aumuller, fell on his knee yesterday afternoon in District Attorney Whitman's office and kissed the hand of his aged father, who has come all the way from Germany to try to save him from the electric chair, and in a flood of tears begged his forgiveness. Yesterday Schmidt refused to recognise his father.

Mrs. Elizath Schaddler, Schmidt's sister, who made the trip from Germany with her father, was present at the meeting. Schmidt embraced her affectionately. For half an hour she and her father tried to soothe the prisoner, but he refused to be comforted and was still weeping when led back to his cell.

Midwinter Paris Millinery Takes New Angle

"FAR EAST" styles from Paris have had a steadily increasing vogue for a number of seasons. But now come some new style lines. These are gently reminiscent of the fashions of the seventies. Among them are the sleeveless evening dresses, the flounced elbow sleeves, the sash bow placed low at the back of the dress and the masculine vest that shows between the open front of the corsage. Also, we see the wired neck ruches of lace of those days, the coats buttoned up to the neck, the pannier drapings and the bustle back puffs.

Not only confined to dress is this revival of old fashioned styles. The latest hair coiffure is like those of days agone and presents almost the same silhouette. The tresses are closely waved about the face, the hair brought up to form a puff at the top back of the head. To be sure, the curls that dropped at the back of some of these old time coiffures are yet missing in the smart hairdressing of to-day.

Premet showed this season among his tailored suits a short coat that had the old fashioned curved side seams and centre back seam; the coat edges basque was almost godet about the lower.

The old style tiptilted hats are perhaps much modernized, but that does not prevent them from being on the same lines as some that decorate the primly pretty fashion engravings of the old fashion books.

In those days, too, they wore dolman wraps and short little mantelettes that are surely grandmothers of those in style to-day. Of course, there was not that tightened in look about the ankles in dresses then, but trains were oblong and oval ended, as now. Velvet bracelets and neck ribbons were the fashion in the seventies. Flower trimmed ball dresses, cut dangerously low, with a ruffle serving as an excuse for a sleeve, were as daring as the simulated décolletés of to-day.

The launching of a new mode, however, does not mean that all other fashions are excluded. Russian and Oriental styles will be seen in plenty this winter, worn by those to whom they are specially becoming. Meanwhile, it is the duty of a fashion reporter to announce new fashion lines as they appear. A French actress, noted for her gowning, has had her latest costumes made on the lines of the seventies, launching this style. As she is of the same type as the heroines that were so often painted by the Belgian artist Alfred Stevens, who caught the loveliness of women of that generation, they seem especially suited to her. The black velvet evening gown is striking because of its sleevelessness and its unadorned [illegible]. There is another odd feature about it—the belt is placed as it was when the old fashioned corsets were worn, below the inward curve of the waist. This and the cut of the waist give it the old fashioned look of the dresses of the seventies and early eighties. The black velvet bracelet, the manner of dressing the hair and the tilt of the hat have not a little to do with the resemblance in silhouette with the fashions of those days. The black tulle is a scarf, separate from the dress, to take off the too severe look. The roses and maidenhair fern are curiously posed almost in the centre front of the waist.

Black Velvet Gown, Adorned with Tulle and Bouquet of Roses. Hat of Black Velvet and Paradise Plumes.

There is a band of skunk fur at the foot of the gown. The hat, which, like all the new ones, has a brim that is the most conspicuous part of it, has the unique curves that are the mark of ultra millinery.

The other gown, of chestnut brown velvet, has the material draped so that it is scant about the foot line and falls in full folds at the hips. Though the lines do not bear so close a resemblance to the styles of other days, still there are certain details amusing to note. The little vest front that falls below the waist line, the pannierlike fulness of the skirt and the elbow sleeves and primly crossed corsage fronts all seem to have been inspired more or less by the engravings of the latter part of the nineteenth century. The gown has no decoration beyond the inevitable touch of fur, placed at the crossed fronts. A net yoke fills the V, and a white satin collar shows only in the back. The brown velvet hat has paradise ornaments.

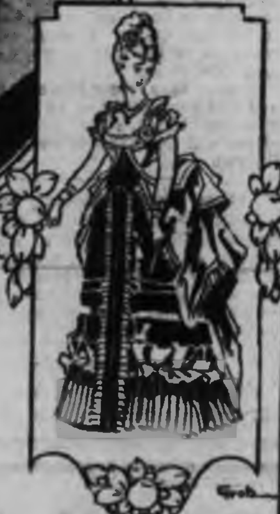
The four hats are typical of this new hat fashion of jauntily posed millinery that gives style to the rather severe coiffure. Four different ornamentations are used on these hats, three of which are velvet. One is decorated with cross aigrettes, one with paradise plumes, one with feathers and one with long ribbon loops. Shapes, too, differ. The Tam o' Shanter is artistically tiptilted to one side, the feather trimmed hat has a startlingly rolled brim edge, and the paradise plumes are as delicate as the slender brim curves they adorn.

Fur Trimmings Still in Favor.

IN spite of some attempts to introduce trimmings of ostrich feathers on the evening cloaks fur still holds first place in feminine favor as the most magnificent adornment for the handsome garments worn in the evening. Fox is especially popular, since its softness, light weight and fluffy texture make it a fitting adjunct for the stamped velvet and brocades of wrought gold or silver which are used nowadays.

These furs are now often dyed the same shade as the cloak—a very costly proceeding, as, of course, the fur can then be used for no other purpose, since the fashionable shades are so bright and are only possible by artificial light.

One cloak which has caused much comment is an exquisite sulphur-yellow, with a greenish tint, held in at the bottom by fox skins of the same shade, whose lifelike heads meet very high or nearly at the waist, making an original fastening for the harmoniously draped pleats, while another skin is carelessly thrown over the shoulder.



From Peterson's Magazine, May, 1870.

The gray fox, which was so popular last winter, will be used with great success on a cloak of that warm yet soft Pompeiian red which is worn so much just now.

Sable is by no means losing its place. With a wide square collar forming a point on the shoulders, it would have a splendid effect on a cloak of ivory stamped velvet. The warm whiteness of the ermine skins is also very attractive, but they are chiefly seen in entire mantles.

Among the originalities may be noted the use of a little baby panther skin thrown over a velvet mantle stamped in a bizarre fashion with the same fawn and brown tones. Parisians appear to like the contrast, which suggests the jungle, shooting and the race for life in the midst of their calm civilization.

For that matter a panther skin used to distinguish the vocation of the priest, and the Parisienne is nothing if not a priestess of fashion, so she has good right to the fur.

Blue fox skins always lend a note of distinction to any garment, particularly if that garment be made of plain velvet. The color, being both warm and dull at the same time, lends itself well to any combination of shades. Entire coats are made of this fur, giving an incomparable effect of luxury and richness.

As to the linings, they are usually of silk, with large flower designs.

All the smart dresses this winter are to be trimmed with fur. It will be mingled with tulle, velvet, satin or brochés, and on afternoon dresses as well as on evening dresses the warm caress of fur will be at once the most becoming and the most costly trimming. The present fashion of the tunic skirt facilitates the use of this trimming.

It may be noted that preference is now given to harmonious effects instead of using furs of striking contrasts. A trimming of skunk, for instance, would be chosen for an old gold costume, while moleskin would be used on a gray frock and sable might adorn any shade of fawn color. Ermine is the only fur used to produce a contrasting effect—such as the black and white—of which feminine taste seems unable to tire.

Each day seems to bring about a more characteristic tendency in the fashion. At the beginning of each season there is more or less flottement. It is only when the Parisian costumers have made their choice that one can judge of the particular style and genre which will probably predominate.

The Directoire, for example, may occupy this position, as its popularity is increasing, especially for the tailor costumes. The coat, long at the back and short in front, with the waistcoat and revers and the collar high at the back, is obtaining a tremendous success with the women who like to be the first to launch a fashion.

This style demands some [illegible] distinction of carriage; there is undoubtedly a certain manner in which these toilettes must be worn, so they will probably only be patronized by society women.

Fashion Details from the Horse Show.

THE vogue of light topped shoes was one of the most noticeable fashion features of the New York Horse Show. Not only were the high shoes light topped, but the smartest footwear had light colored heels also. To all intents and purposes only the vamp of the shoe was of black patent or dull leather.

Some of these uppers were made of light fawn, brown or gray cloth; some of suède of the same colors. One peculiarity of these shoes and one which threw them into prominence was the fact that the afternoon tailored suits were so short that most of the light uppers showed at moments almost revealing the stocking above.

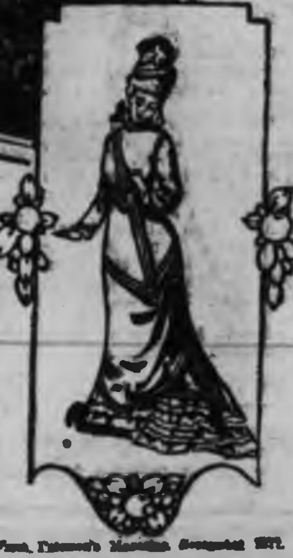
Another interesting detail of the afternoon Horse Show was the corsage bouquet of orchids. They were made spray fashion, sometimes fastened with narrow loops and ends of matching ribbon, and were combined with fine fernery and maidenhair.

The vogue of duvetyn and velvet afternoon suits was very marked. Most of them were cut with the tiered skirts and the loose cutaway coat that buttoned tightly up to the neck. A band of fur on the military collar and a band making cuffs on the long sleeves was the correct trimming, and fitch was the preferred fur for this.

This charming fitch fur of our grandmothers' day has sprung suddenly into style again this winter. Its light creamy tone tipped with bronze brown is decorative and harmonizes with almost any color of duvetyn or velvet. Chinchilla, tiger leopard, tigrette, seal, broadtail and caracul make these tailored suit collar and cuffs also. The small hat often has a band of the suit fur adorning it, and a muff of it is a necessary finishing touch.

The fashion of long unfitted velvet or duvetyn coats for little girls was very marked. The fur trimming was almost invariably of this old-new fitch fur. One little black velvet coat had a little collar and cuffs on it. A band of it encircled the black velvet mob cap, and one large ostrich tip that had exactly the same colors as the two tones of the fitch fur was posed at one side. Another coat, of peacock duvetyn, had a matching hat, fitch trimmed. A third little coat had chinchilla collar and cuffs. In each case there was a little flat, oblong muff of matching fur. Worn underneath were white batiste, net and linen dresses with the long sashed or belted lines.



From Peterson's Magazine, September 1871.

A very little child had a white duvetyn coat on, and the usual belt was dropped almost to the hem of the dress length coat, held on by narrow straps. A little white round Russian hat had a wide band of white fox fur. All of these coats buttoned single breasted right up to the neck. There was not a sign of a lapel.

Some of the prettiest of the evening coats seen at the Horse Show were of unspotted ermine. In the full length coats the tails were replaced by dark fur collars which gave a new look to this beautiful fur. Sable, seal or beaver made sailor, turned over or boa collars that contrasted sharply with the creamy white of the ermine. In the knee length ermine coats the tails were used for border trimming, placed along the edges in one or two rows at regular intervals, fringing the collar, if of ermine, or worked into the material in whirligig motifs.

Some of the débutantes came without hats in the evening, with festoons of rhinestones in the hair or the pretty, sparkling pins. The younger set kept to brilliantly colored wraps of liberty satin, fur trimmed; a few had capelike mantles of brocades of the latest patterns.

With all the furs in vogue of course some novelties crept in, notably the mouflon, which is having, it is said, a good deal of success in Paris. This resembles the Australian lynx at a little distance and seems to have been chosen as a "young" fur. It was noted on one débutante's afternoon suit and on another's evening cloak.

Tiptilted hats were another of the novelties. Like other Paris innovations, they have already reached this side and are a welcome change from the capping toques that hide most of the hair or else pull it down into the eyes, covering most of the face. These velvet hats, posed at an eccentric angle, gain a special slant from the way the long ornamental feathers, paradise or aigrettes, are posed.

New Petti-Skirts of Crepy Material

PETTICOATS are a trifle wider, but still two good breadths of silk of the average width will make a stylish one. Just leave the seam on one side open for ten or twelve inches above the hem, which should measure the same number of inches. Fancy fringe, lace or a tracery of embroidery finishes the lower edge of the petticoat and outlines the slashes.

Skirts for day wear are of crêpe de Chine, silk jersey and soft silky satin charmeuse and their ilk. Some of the crêpy materials are decidedly [illegible] that are in vogue for daytime wear, and the colors are the mustard, paprika greens and wine shades, [illegible], all the conventional tones of the [illegible] gowns.

BOARD OF HEALTH TO HEAR ANNUAL REPORTS OF M.H.O. AND SANITARY INSPECTOR

"Well, it is rather hard to say, but I am of the opinion that this year will be about the same as last, and Peterborough was the leading city last year," said the local medical health officer to a Review reporter today when asked how the present year's health report would compare with that of the former year.

According to information received the city during the past year has been free from any real serious outbreak of major disease or epidemics. The health report throughout the city has increased considerably during the past few years fortunately on the right side, owing to the tactful methods of the local board of health.

The tubercular cases are still rather large although there is a marked decrease, when compared with other years. The citizens are awakened to the fact of the danger of the disease and are taking preventitive steps.

Next year the by-law prohibiting spitting on the pavements and in public places will go into effect. This step, it is felt, is one in the right direction.

Appended is the number of deaths reported upon at the close of last year, with the number of cases reported.

Scarlet fever	32	0
Measles	0	0
Whoping cough	1	1
Typhoid fever	6	1
Tuberculosis	65	26

In speaking of the last item, it is an understood fact amongst the medical men of the city that the death-rate of consumptives in the city this year will not exceed last year.

The Sanitary Report

The sanitary report of last year was in part as follows:

Inspection of houses and premises	3,865
Notices of abatement of nuisances	342
Complaints investigated	92
Manure heaps enclosed	92
Dairy farms inspected	86
Police Court cases	22

Some Changes Made

In addition to this the laundries and various other public places have been inspected. Practically all the above mentioned places have undergone considerable changes during this year.

Both Sanitary Inspector Spence and the Medical Health Officer, Dr. McPherson will present their annual report at a special meeting of the Board of health which is to be held between Christmas and New Years.

The Sanitary Inspector is preparing a report on the tests made of the milk which is sold in the city.

"A man without friends is usually a man who has neglected to be one."

SUIT AGAINST 'PHONE TRUST

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—Testimony was taken here yesterday in a suit brought by the Federal Government under the Sherman anti-trust law against the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and others, to dissolve purchases of independent competing lines in the west by the Bell system.

The principal witness was Leopold Grahame, of New York, who conducted negotiations with the bondholders' committee of the Home Telephone Co., of Puget Sound, when the banking firm of H. B. Hollins & Co., of this city, agreed to finance the company after it had gone into the hands of a receiver.

More Thieving From Cars.

WINDSOR, Dec. 12.—Robbing of Grand Trunk freight cars is again common in the local yards, according to Special Officer Fraser, who has returned to the city to work on several new cases.

Fraser says considerable stealing has also been going on of late at Fort Erie and Bridgeburg. A determined effort will be made to round up the thieves.

"Fort Garry" Formally Open.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 12.—The Fort Garry Hotel, built at a cost of a million and a half, was formally opened to the public yesterday morning at 8 o'clock. An opening ball was given last night by the Victorian Order of Nurses.

THE POPLE'S CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR FOR 1914.

It has been estimated that British suffragettes have destroyed $2,700,000 worth of property. And yet they say a woman can't throw a brick straight.

There is much speculation over the question, but little hope that Colombia will, so to speak, put on a silk hat for the canal opening and discard its panama.

Substantial Balance Shown.

TORONTO, Dec. 12.—A substantial balance of earnings over expenses on the Timiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway was announced at a meeting of the commission held yesterday. The general condition of the system was reported better than ever, and the prospects are excellent for important extensions of the system next season.

ONLY PAID $484 BUT COMPANY CLAIMED OWNERSHIP OF LANDS

No Deeds Were Held for Lands in Canada Advertised in Prospectus of National Fruit Co. as Being Owned by Company and Value Was Much Overstated.

TORONTO, Dec. 12.—The investigation into the affairs of the defunct Union Life Assurance Co. was brought to a close yesterday. Mr. H. Pollman Evans, the president and general manager of the company, at the request of the Dominion Government, which instituted the inquiry at the instance of the English shareholders, was the last witness examined.

Mr. A. C. Masten, K.C., acting on behalf of the Government, asked Mr. Evans about his visit to London to sell shares in the National Land & Fruit Packing Co. This is the company in which over $500,000 has been sunk, and against which there is a mortgage of $20,000. A total of $729,000 of stock was offered, and only $150,000 sold. The Agency Land Co. had conveyed leasehold and freehold properties to the National Trust Co., but no deeds were signed said Mr. Evans.

The estimated cost of the land consisting of orchards, was some £76,000, but only $484 was actually paid, or about one-tenth of one per cent.

"All the cash, put into this land when the prospectus went to the English investor was only $484, spent in securing options?" asked Mr. Masten.

"And quite a large sum spent in pruning the trees," added Mr. Evans.

"What do you say to this statement, that the company owns 9,000 acres of orchards, when only $484 was paid on it?" asked Mr. Masten.

"The fact that there was a mortgage on it did not affect the ownership of the property."

Mr. Evans admitted that in the flotation of the National Fruit & Packing Co., in London, he had valued at £225,000 lands which in reality under the terms of purchase were only valued at £76,000. He also stated that practically all the concern had was leases of lands, with a small amount of capital.

With the consent of the official referee, Mr. Evans put in as an exhibit a statement regarding the history of the company whose failure he ascribed to exceptional circumstances and the crippling of the management at a critical period.

GOVERNMENT TO SPEND $150,000 ON GUELPH FAIR

WILL BUILD BIG ARENA

President Nelles Announces at Luncheon That Messrs. Hanna and Duff Have Promised to Use Their Influence to Secure Substantial Grant for Building Which Will be Ready for Use in 1915

GUELPH, Dec. 12.—The news that in the near future a new steel and iron arena would be erected at the Provincial Winter Fair buildings at Guelph was received by the cattle and dairy exhibitors at the noonday luncheon yesterday, when C. L. Nelles, president of the Guelph Fat Stock Club, announced that Hon. W. J. Hanna, Provincial Secretary, and Hon. J. S. Duff, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario, had promised to do all in their power to have a grant of $150,000 made for this purpose.

It is hardly likely that the arena will be ready for use by next year; in fact it is impossible because of the bigness of the proposed structure, but it is practically certain to be ready for the show in 1915.

Mr. Nelles urged the exhibitors to return again next year and put up with the inadequate accommodation, as he assured them that by 1915 the new arena would be erected.

Robert Miller of Stouffville, in speaking for the exhibitors, stated that the future of the winter fair largely depended upon increased accommodation. He hoped that this fair would become the greatest of the Dominion and even of America and of the world, but he declared that this would be impossible with the present conditions.

The greater part of the judging is now finished at the Winter Fair, and the prizes have been allotted to the winters in the various classes. The grand sweepstakes for cattle was won by Red Paul, a two-year-old grade heifer, exhibited by Adam Armstrong, Fergus. This heifer, although much smaller and lighter, beat out Roan Champion, the animal which carried off the championship at the Toronto Fat Stock Show. The swine department never was bigger or better than this year. All the classes were well filled with the best that could be bred in the province. The championship for best pair of bacon hogs at the show went to J. E. Bethour and nephew of Burford, the noted breeders of Yorkshires. Brethour and nephew annexed also the silver cup for the best pen of three bacon hogs, and won many first prizes in the general classes.

The meeting of the Cheese and Butter Makers of Western Ontario at the dairy building of the Ontario Agricultural College was one of the largest and best ever held. Several important topics were discussed, chief of which were the grading and testing of cream for creameries in order to improve the quality of western Ontario butter, which is not all that could be desired.

CROCKET FOR THE BENCH

Member for York, N. B., Becomes Justice of Supreme Court.

OTTAWA, Dec. 12.—Oswald S. Crocket of Fredericton, M.P. for York, N.B., was yesterday appointed a judge of the supreme court of New Brunswick. A new judicature act rearranging the provincial supreme court and creating two divisions became effective recently and involved the appointment of an extra judge. To this position Mr. Crocket has been appointed.

He has been a member of the House of Commons since 1904, and in the days of the Conservative opposition was one of the most active men on that side of the House.

Mr. Crocket was born in Chatham, N.B., in 1868, and was called to the Bar in 1892.

Mr. Crocket's appointment will necessitate a bye-election in York, for which the writs will be issued very shortly, so as to enable the new member to take his seat at the opening of Parliament. Hon. H. A. F. MacLeod, Provincial Secretary in the New Brunswick Cabinet, is spoken of as the probable Conservative candidate in this constituency for the succession of Mr. Crocket, whose majority in the last general election was 1669.

LEADERS CONFER

Home Rule Parley Have Already Begun, Says London Times.

LONDON, Dec. 12.—The Times announces this morning that it is able to state that meetings of the party leaders have actually begun with the object of endeavoring to arrange an agreement by consent upon the Ulster difficulty, but that no definite result has as yet been reached.

The Times explains in an editorial that nothing in the nature of a truce is involved in these negotiations, which represent the first tangible movement towards a possible settlement, but do not compel either the home rulers or the Unionists to refrain from continuing freely to debate the question in public speeches.

The Daily Telegraph repeats the report that when Parliament reassembles in February the Government will take up the Welsh Disestablishment Bill before home rule. This will probably depend on the progress of the party negotiations.

BIG BANK FAILS

Madrid Institution Collapses With Enormous Loss.

MADRID, Dec. 12.—The Hispano-Americano Bank filed its declaration of suspension of payments in the law courts yesterday after a lengthy conference between the bank officials and the governor of the Bank of Spain.

The Minister of Finance later declared that the Bank of Spain had lent $4,000,000 to the Hispano-Americano Bank, and had offered it an other $2,000,000, which sum had been declined on the ground that it was not enough to meet the demands of the depositors, which amounted to $20,000,000. All the depositors were demanding their money back, and the officials had decided it was better to suspend payments now than later, which was done.

Long lines of persons besieged the doors of the bank from an early hour yesterday morning.

A word to the wife is sufficient—to start something.

FROZEN AND DRIED EGGS

Woman Offical Has Scheme to Beat High Prices

WASHINGTON, Dec. 12.—Dr. Mary E. Pennington, in charge of food research work of the Department of Agriculture, told the House agriculture committee yesterday that frozen and dried eggs would solve the problem of high prices and cold storage manners.

"Frozen and dried eggs," said Dr. Pennington, "soon will be marketed in small packages so as to be available to every homestead instead of for bakers and other manufacturers, as at present. Hard frozen eggs will keep a year, and there is no question but what dried and frozen eggs will ultimately displace the cold storage variety."

Wedding Gifts Lost In Fire.

MACON, Ga., Dec. 12.—Fire that destroyed the Hotel Williams here early yesterday, drove more than fifty guests to the street in scanty attire. Two women on the second floor, cut off by the flames, were taken from the window by firemen.

The fire was discovered by the night clerk, who ran from room to room arousing guests.

Mr. and Mrs. M. Loring, who were married Sunday, lost wedding gifts valued at $3,500. A jewelry salesman claimed to have left a satchel containing gems worth $10,000 in his room. Few of the guests saved any of their effects.

Loops the Loop With Passengers.

PARIS, Dec. 12.—Adolphe Pegoud, the French aviator, demonstrated at the Buc aerodrome yesterday afternoon that looping the loop in an aeroplane, carrying a passenger as well as a pilot, was not more difficult than the accomplishment of the feat when the pilot was alone.

The airman mounted on three separate occasions with journalists and a photographer and looped a number of successive loops.

Waterloo Pioneer Dead.

BERLIN, Ont., Dec. 12.—George Maurer, aged 89, a native of Germany, and one of the pioneers of Waterloo County, passed away after an illness of one day. He had followed farming in Waterloo Township until twenty years ago, when he retired. He is survived by a family of seven children.

Millionaire Missing in New York.

NEW YORK, Dec. 12.—None of New York's ten thousand police had found any trace up to noon yesterday of James Marshall, the millionaire hat manufacturer of Fall River, Mass. He dropped out of sight Tuesday afternoon.

Got Light Sentences.

STRASSBURG, Dec 12.—Light sentences of six weeks and two weeks were given yesterday by the court-martial of three recruits of the 99th Infantry Regiment through whom the insulting remarks in reference to Alsatians and the French foreign legion, uttered by Lieut. Baron Von Forstner had been made public. Long penitentiary sentences had been expected.

The Pundit's Pun.

A very distinguished British man of science had the foible, says Professor Brander Matthews in the Century Magazine, of inventing thrilling episodes and pretending that they were of his own experience.

On one occasion, after he had spun a marvelous yarn, with himself in the center of the cell, a skeptical friend looked him in the eye and asked sternly, "Clifford, do you mean to say that this really occurred to you?" whereupon the imaginative man of science replied, with a twinkle:

"Yes—it just occurred to me!"

MY LONELY CHRISTMAS

IS there—can there be—a man more lonely than one returned from a colony who has been out of his native land for twenty years and comes back when his parents are dead, his old friends dispersed and the old nest has passed to other occupants? And can his loneliness be more emphasized than when his return synchronizes with Christmas?

That was my condition when I revisited my old home. I was back—not at home, for I had no home now. My heart began to fail me, my spirits to decline, when I reached the little country town near which I was born. I was indeed depressed. I would hasten to the rooms I had taken in a house in the town and spend my Christmas eve with a pipe and a glass—alone.

I had done well in the big world and had returned not a rich man, but with a competence. It had been my wish, my ambition, to settle in the village about which clung all my sweetest and holiest thoughts. But now—could it be?

As I walked back to my lodgings through the street and by the market place folks were hurrying in all directions, and the very atmosphere was filled with the spirit of Christmas.

As I pursued my way I saw a tall, slim girl walking before me with a basket on her arm. I noticed that the bottom had come out and that the contents were falling on the pavement. Of this she was unaware. I stopped, picked up a little woolly lamb, then something wrapped in paper—a silver matchbox.

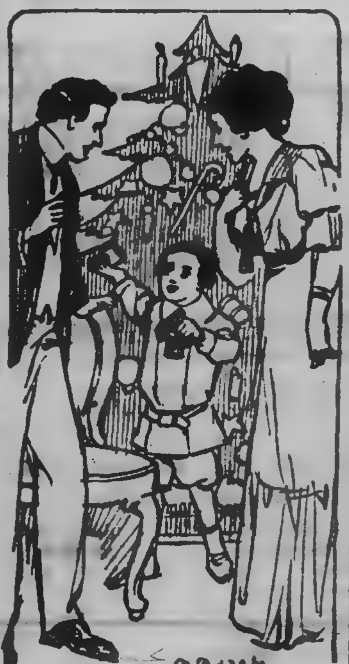
Gathering them together, I ran after the girl and stopped her.

"Excuse me," said I. "Are you a female hop o' my thumb, dropping tokens whereby your track may be known?"

I showed what I had collected. She colored and thanked me. Then I recognized her as my landlady's daughter.

"You must allow me to tie my handkerchief around the basket and to carry it for you. I believe we go the same way," I said.

"You are very good," she replied. "We are about to have a Christmas tree for the children this evening, and



"THIS," SAID THE BOY, "IS FOR MR. WHAT'S-HIS-NAME."

I have been making some trifling purchases for my brothers and sisters and for papa and mamma."

Then we proceeded on our way, and when we went in the house she received the basket from me and again thanked me.

"Shall you be dining out tomorrow?" asked the girl.

"I? Oh, no. I have no one to dine with. I know no one here."

"And this evening—shall you be going anywhere?"

"No. I have no wherewithal to go."

So we parted. I went to my room. I had done with my papers. I sat before the fire in a brown study, and my spirits sank lower and even lower.

The door opened, and I saw some little heads outside, with golden curls and flushed cheeks, and a child's voice said. "Please, Mr. What's-your-name, will you come to our tree downstairs?"

As I hesitated the child said, "Please—Annie told us to ask you."

So I descended and was witness of the delight of the little ones over their presents, when up sprang one of the children and plucked from the tree the silver matchbox.

"This," said the boy, "is for Mr. What's-his-name. Sister Annie said it was for him."

I was moved more than I can say. So some had been thinking of me, though I was only a lodger.

"Look here, sir!" said the father. "You're a stranger in England, and at such a time as this there must be no strangers. You must really sup with us and dine also with us tomorrow. I can promise you a good plum pudding, for it is of Annie's making."

All was changed. I was a stranger, and they took me in. I was lonely, and they made of me a friend.

Ah, if the old home were gone might I not build one that was new? I need no longer live in the past, but look to the future, and next Christmas, please God, I would not be alone—that is, if Annie (but I cannot say) will consent to put an end to my loneliness and help in building up a future.

The present generation might be termed the automobile race.

HE SPOKE IN FRENCH

RT. HON. HERBERT SAMUEL IS A REAL BILINGUALIST.

British Postmaster-General During His Recent Trip Through the Dominion Rather Startled the People of Rimouski by Using Their Own Tongue—He Is One of Three Jews In British Cabinet.

Rt. Hon. Herbert Samuel, Postmaster-General of Great Britain, has spent considerably longer time in Canada than his colleague, Viscount Haldane. Samuel arrived in this country at the end of August, and reached home the other day.

Perhaps the most interesting incident connected with Mr. Samuel's visit to Canada occurred at the very beginning of the trip. At Rimouski he was welcomed by French-Canadians, who, in the English language, offered him their best wishes and accorded him the freedom of the town. Much to their surprise, Samuel, in his reply, spoke in excellent French. This proof of his interest in the French language, and of his courtesy in using it, made a profound impression not only upon his immediate hearers, but on all the French-Canadians of Quebec when they heard of it. When the British Postmaster-General finally left Canada he carried with him not only the good wishes of the English and Jewish sections of the country, for Samuel is one of the three Jews in the British Cabinet, and is proud of the fact, but also, in a peculiar degree, the genuine friendship of the French-Canadians.

HON. HERBERT SAMUEL.

Ireland's "Petrel."

The decision of William O'Brien, M.P., to cut his connection with the West and return to his native Cork has unfortunately exposed him to the charge that he is by no means the disinterested politician he would like to make out. It also betrays a spirit of insularity which some of his best friends deplore.

Some years ago, when the people of Mayo returned him to Parliament, he set up a somewhat fashionable establishment in Westport, a delightful spot overlooking Lough Mask. He then vowed he was so fascinated with the simple peasantry of Mayo that he would spend the remainder of his days among them. His wife, too, who is a Russian lady, found the people and the surroundings generally quite congenial and became in time one of the most popular personalities in Connaught.

But political differences came along. The people of Mayo found that they could no longer support the O'Brienite view of things, so "the stormy petrel of Irish politics" had to seek a fresh political habitation. Those who followed his lead were similarly treated. The people of Mayo refused to reciprocate his attitude towards John Redmond and the majority of the Irish Parliamentary Party. In return, William O'Brien could no longer see anything to claim his admiration in the Connaught peasantry.

Finally he has made up his mind to sell out and return to the scenes of his early boyhood.

Prince Albert's Pay.

One-and-ninepence a day and a deduction of threepence for the naval instructor is what Prince Albert, the second son of King George, who has just become a "middy" on the Collingwood, will receive as pay. His Royal Highness will devote most of his time to receiving instruction in the practical part of the work of the navy, thus following the example set by his father. As a rule, seamanship, gunnery, torpedo, and engineering are taken in rotation, a week being given to each, under the various specialist officers of the ship, while instruction in theoretical subjects is given by the naval instructor.

Bombarded Passers-By.

Holding up passers-by for two hours, a man named Laloo, who had evidently primed himself with liquor, created some commotion at Calcutta on a recent Sunday night. The man stood in front of a moving picture theatre, and rained a continuous fusillade of stones and soda water bottles at passers-by. The audience of the theatre was held up for a couple of hours. A police inspector with a number of constables, arrived on the scene and arrested the man after some difficulty.

Rose For Rental.

In accordance with the custom dating from 1556 a red rose was recently "paid" to the warden of St. Olave's Grammar School, Tower Bridge, as rent for a field leased from the above date to trustees for the benefit of the poor. This year the rose was presented by Mr. J. W. Oake, an "old boy," who is now Mayor of Bermondsey.

TO THE CUSTOMERS OF THE OTONABEE POWER COMPANY, LIMITED:

THE MARKET

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

CHICAGO, Dec. 11.—Too much unanimity on the buying side today in wheat made the trade suspicious about the advisability of increased holdings or even as to restraining what had been acquired. Accordingly, the market, which had shown a gain all around, closed easy at a range varying from 3-8c to ½c decline to a shade advance as compared with the night before. Other grain showed a net loss—corn a shade to 3-8c, and oats 3-8c to ½c. In provisions the outcome was unchanged to 15c down.

Presbyterians Favor Educational Campaign on Church Union.

TORONTO, Dec. 12.—Church union will not be ratified by the Presbyterian General Assembly before the meeting in June, 1915. Three lengthy sessions were held by the Presbyterian Church Union Committee at St. James' Square Church yesterday. At 10 o'clock last night the proceedings were so animated that an extension of the hour of adjournment was made. The committee, however, rose half an hour later.

While the majority of the committee were fervid for union, the arguments of the opposition sufficed to secure an agreement not to report in favor of the ratification of union at next June's meeting of the General Assembly, but to allow another year for an educational campaign in the interests of a united Presbyterian-Methodist-Congregational body to be conducted.

It didn't take the boys long to get started. This morning some local hockeyists, among them being Fred Denison, were out on the canal. Last night a few southenders tried out Roller's Creek, but the ice was a little thin.

Utilizing Smelter Slag.

Smelter slag is utilized for brick making purposes in Germany. At the government iron smelter near Amberg the slag is crushed to a sand, mixed with water and pressed into dark gray bricks, which are allowd to dry in the open air. They are sold at the factory for $4.76 per thausand, but their quantity is limited and their use largely local. It is noteworthy, however, that only since the discovery of this process have these government smelters earned any profits for the state.

FOUR TEAMS ADMITTED TO JUNIOR HOCKEY LEAGUE

At an enthusiastic meeting held in the Brock Street Rink last night the Peterborough Junior City Hockey League was organized, and considerable progress was made towards completing plans for the season.

Mr. M. J. Maher was voted to the chair.

Four teams were admitted to membership—the Alerts, Y. M. C. A. Boston Exploits and Wanderers.

The following officers were elected:

Patons and Patronesses—Dr. and Mrs. Wrightman, Mr. and Mrs. G. N. Gordon, Mr. E. A. Peck, M.P.P., and Mrs. Peck, Mr. J. H. Burnham, M. P., Ald J J. and Mrs. Dufus, Ald. Geo. A. and Mrs. Gillespie, Ald. Wm. and Mrs. Buller.

Hon. President—C. G. Graham.
President—M. J. Maher.
Vice-Pres.—R. M. Glover.
Sec.-Treas.—H. T. Theobald.

Executive—The officers and a representative from each club.

Bright prospects face the League. The teams are enthusiastic and the organization should prove a good feeding ground for the O. H. A. teams. President Maher pointed out this fact to the representatives last night and urged upon them the principle that there was something more than the mere winning of the championship to be considered.

Rules were discussed at the meeting and will probably be passed at the next meeting.

FARMS THAT FAIL.

The Way Food Making Crops Rob the Soil of Its Fertility.

An acre of wheat deprives the soil of forty-five pounds of nitrogen, twenty-three pounds of phosphoric acid and thirty pounds of potash. On the market nitrogen is worth 17 cents a pound, phosphoric acid 7 cents and potash 4 cents. Therefore the actual money value of the nitrogen removed from the soil by an acre of wheat is $7.65; of phosphoric acid, $1.61, and of potash $1.20, making a total loss of $10.46 an acre a year. If the farmer raises twenty acres of wheat a year for twenty-five years the loss will be $5,230.

Each acre of oats consumes fifty pounds of nitrogen, twenty pounds of phosphoric acid and forty pounds of potash. In the same way an acre of corn will take from the soil $18.30 worth of fertility, provided both the grain and fodder are removed. If you have fifty acres in corn $025 worth of fertility is removed each year. In twenty years you will have taken out $18,300 worth of the elements necessary to produce a good crop.

Should you raise fifty acres of wheat, fifty acres of oats and fifty acres of corn for twenty years on your farm the money value of the elements removed from the soil would be more than $40,000. Is it any wonder, then, that the farms begin to wear out when you fail to return those elements to the soil which are necessary to produce a crop? -Farm and Fireside.

Through German Glasses.

hTe following extract from an article in a German semi-official paper in Berlin, to check emigration to Canad will interest Canadians. The writer resolved to obtain a general view of the country by traveling across the continent. The men who shared the "compartment" with him were all powerful, athletic figures with bronze complexions. Their chins had not seen the razor for days, the boots in which they put their "silk socks and hairy legs" had not been brushed for weeks and diamonds glittered on their sinewy, peasant fists. There was a notice on the wall, he states, warning passengers not to put their feet on the seats, on the window ledges or in the washing basins.

The Canadian, he writes further, dresses in a slovenly manner, though his clothes are made of the finest material.

WAS HE ABANDONED?

Rumors Concerning Stefansson's Mishap Rife at Ottawa.

OTTAWA, Dec. 12.—Local newspapers yesterday gave utterance to rumors which have been insistent for a few days, to the effect, that it is possible Stefansson's ship the Karluk, left him rather than that he left it. On Monday a despatch came from Stefansson stating that on Sept. 20, thinking the Karluk safely winter quartered, he went ashore with three white men and three Eskimos to hunt. On Sept. 22 a storm sprang up, ccompanied by fog. When the fog lifted, after two days, the Karluk was nowhere to be seen. Stefansson then made his way to winter quarters, where he is quite safe.

Just as soon as the despatch was made public this week, men accustomed to conditions in the Arctic, of whom there are very many in Ottawa began to voice suspicion that no great effort had been made by the ship's company of the Karluk to find Stefansson. Now the capital is disturbed and speculation as to what really has happened is rife. Hon. J. D. Hazen Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who sent the expedition north, said last night that he had nothing except Stefansson's own statement, and everything else was speculation.

It is evident that what has given rise to the rumors is the known fact that there has been much friction on board ship. Despatches from the north, and private letters have stated that there has been a dispute regarding authority. Stefansson has been regarded here as leader of the expedition, but it seems that others with the party have refused to recognize him as such. This was evidenced with regard to the supplies the expedition carried. These did not satisfy the majority of the men. Stefansson believes that when a man goes north he should live as the natives do and find most of his food with his gun. Some of the others did not relish the prospect of blubber food, and took in large supplies at various points in Alaska, particularly Nome. Stefansson objected to this, but he was overruled.

AN OPTICAL ILLUSION.

Apparent Size of the Moon at the Horizon and at the Zenith.

The moon's larger appearance when near the horizon as compared with its size at the zenith is really an optical illusion, and accurate angular measurements have shown that it is actually a trifle smaller when low down, as it should be on account of being a little more distant.

Adding a new attempt at explanation, Dr. M. Ponzo, an Italian phychologist, compares this with an illusion already represented by E. T. Sanford, another phychologist. Two straight lines are brought together at an acute angle at one end, two exactly equal circles being then drawn between the lines, when the circle nearer the apex appears decidedly the larger, but the illusion lessens as the angle is made less acute.

As the celestial bodies near the horizon, they appear in the angle formed by the earth and the declining arc of the sky. The conditions are just those of the artificial lines and circles, and its enlargement in the narrowing angle is a contrast the moon conspicuously brings out as compared with the spectacle it presents in the free sky.

The fact that the apparent enlargement is not always the same may be due to changes in the angle by clouds or vapors.—Denver Republican.

According to science, women don't mind choosing ugly men for husbands. Rejected suitors will be interested to find their theories confirmed by scientific authority.

If the 17,000,000 old bachelors and old maids in the country would all get married at once few people would object to making orange blossoms the national flower.

But if every American girl made her own clothes, as a club reformer recommends, what would women who sew for a living do? There are usually several sides to such questions.

When they had taken an unindorsed bank draft from their victim two robbers produced a fountain pen and made him indorse the draft. Add one more to the list of deadly weapons.

CITY MOVES TO EXERCISE EXPROPRIATION RIGHTS

The case of the City making application for the expropriation of the Peterborough Light and Power Plant was heard before Judge Huycke in the Judges Chambers yesterday afternoon, and was adjourned until next Wednesday afternoon at 2:15.

The city was represented by City Solicitor Hall and G. N. Gordon, while Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Johnston and City Clerk Armstrong were in attendance.

Mr. Hall contended that by powers given, the city had right to enter upon, take possession and expropriate the property of the Peterborough Light and Power plant.

The affidavit was made by City Clerk Armstrong and approved. The offer for the plant was $95,000. The Company refused to accept the offer, and up to the present time nothing has been done in regard to the matter.

In June, 1913, the city council passed a by-law of expropriation. On November 13, a by-law was passed appointing arbitrators and still no agreement has been reached. On requesting an inventory of the plant they refused. Therefore they applied to pay the money into court and expropriate the plant. The expert brought here from Hamilton to value the plant was also refused admittance to the Company's property. It is encumbent of the Peterborough Light and Power Company to prove their value. "Why should we have to put a value on their plant," concluded Mr. Hall.

Mr. Colville, solicitor for the Company, asked for information regarding the expropriation. The city should put in affidavits to show the value of the plant. The Company was forced to do this. "We do not want to sell," remarked Mr. Colville with emphasis. "We refuse to assist them in their expropriation. Our franchise runs out at the end of the year, but as I have said to the gentlemen today, we are willing to light the city for them at the present rate until they are ready to go on and also to keep everything going as at present. But, continued Mr. Colville, we certainly won't assist them by laying down our rights, and we submit that they have no right to make application for expropriation on the Private Act as they are doing. The application should be made under the Provincial Act and not under their own Municipal Act. Therefore, we consider that they have no application whatever. They are serving us with a notice to possess everything. A by-law for the expropriating of land should have the description of the land. "There is no description of lands, consequently their by-law is faulty.

"It is a different matter for both Your Honor and us to arrive at the value of the plant," continued Mr. Colville with a smile. "Let them put in a description and we shall reply intelligently, also you can deal with it then, intelligently." Mr. Colville them quoted the railways act of expropriation. "They certainly should be some material filed to show that the city really needs the plant, in fact it looks like the last gasp of the council before they ersign, and there are only two more weeks until they go out. The opposite side is always supplied the material."

Therefore, Mr. Colville requested a week's adjournment to get sufficient material.

Mr. Hall: "This is the first we have known that they own lands."

"Under the special act we are entitled to expropriate all the land we desire," continued Mr. Hall, and it's an utter impossibility for us to arrive at anything without a description of the property. We applied to make a valuation and were refused. We asked for an inventory and were refused. We want possession before the end of the month as the franchise expires. They are going to sell or we expropriate, and if we supply them with material they should assist us by doing the same.

"I certainly would like some material on the matter as I am totally in the dark about the affair at the present," said the Judge.

The adjournment was then ordered.

To a Review reported Mr. Colville expressed himself that his company had offered to assist the city by lighting the city and going on in the same manner as at present. As the city had refused the Company was going to give them a grand fight for it.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

SLEIGHING ON SIDEWALKS

To the Editor of The Review:
Dear Sir,—

Allow me to call the attention of the police and the public to the dangerous practice of children and youths sleighing down the steep sidewalks at the north end of the city.

This not only makes the pavement slippery, but it is a positive menace to the unwary pedestrian whose only warning is the cry of the youngsters:—"hi up!"

It is good to see them enjoying themselves, but they must not do so at the expense of the public safety.

I spoke myself, to one load of boys, and they said "Where are we going to sleigh ride then?" I told them to go into the road way and they impudently replied "Oh that's no good!"

This is, of course, a mixture of innocence and ignorance. The parents of those boys ought to know that they are sleighing and ought to enquire where they are sleighing. They can help the police and the public in this way.

Yours,
PEDESTRIAN.

LOVE THY NEIGHBOR

Editor of The Review:
Dear Sir,—

We see Mr. W. S. Robinson; 238 Wescott Street, is out as a candidate for an aldermanic seat from the South Ward. To this we have no objections, but we are greatly surprised to see him opposed to the Dalhousie Street bridge. Mr. Robinson has used the C.P.R. and G. T.R. bridges as often as any citizen, yet he does not see the need of a new bridge.

We think it is a selfish motive on Mr. Robinson's part in trying to dodge a few cents of extra taxes by which he has given evidence that he does not consider at all that great commandment, "Love thy neighbor as thyself."

Yours truly,
WE WHO KNOW.

PREPARING TO DISTRIBUTE XMAS CHEER

Not So Many Inmates in the Public Institutions This Season.

With the rapid approach of Christmas officials of the numerous charitable institutions are looking forward to the annual gifts to the inmates Among the institutions where Santa Claus is expected to visit with his team of reindeer is the County Jail, the hospitals, the Children's Shelter, St. Vincent's Orphanage, and others. The poor children of the city, in the majority of the cases will have to be served and already large orders are being forwarded to Santa Claus for the annual affair.

In practically every case the number of inmates in the various institutions is considerably smaller than other years.

As in precedent years the various Sunday Schools and the Y. M. C. A. will assist in the work of distributing the Christmas cheer among the poor and around the institutions of the city.

Edward Parks Must Behave or Take His Medicine.

"Understand, when you get out, you are to leave, and if you ever come back here you will have to take your medicine," was the sympathic advice tendered Edward Parks at this morning's session of Police Court by Magistrate Dumble, who showed displeasure in viewing Edward in distress for the third time in the past week. When he came to the city, last week, Edward had about fifty greenbacks with him, now his entire wealth is decreased to a solitary five spot.

For a week Edward will accept the hospitality of Castle Nesbitt.

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY

In the Field for Water Commissioner.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The retirement of Mr. W. H. Hill from the board of Water Commissioners has decided me to offer myself as a candidate for the vacancy made by his withdrawal.

Realizing that the Board of Water Commissioners to be an efficient and business-like organization and that the local Hydro-Electric will be an addition to the duties of the Commission for the coming year it will be my aim if honored with a seat at the board, to co-operate with the present members of that commission and to assist in continuing the success already achieved by the Waterworks department, and help, so far as in my power, with the organization of the local Hydro-Electric system, (which has had in our city since its advent, my loyal support), to make this public utility of the greatest possible service to the citizens of the municipality.

The qualification which I present to you in support of my candidature is service in your interest for five years on your board of Aldermen.

On this record I ask your support at the polls.

Respectfully,
ROBERT HICKS.

Plain Statement of Facts
About Salome
The Greatest French Opera Ever Written

The beautiful Massenet Opera of Salome is generally known as "Herodiade, the great French Masterpiece," but it was produced in England under the title of "Salome," and the producers have retained the same title for its American production. It must not be confused with the Salome of Strauss and Oscar Wilde, and the management absolutely GUARANTEES it to be free from anything suggestive. Mothers may take their daughters: men their sweethearts. The seven scenes are wonders of Oriental splendor. With its company of 60 principals, chorus and orchestra, it is without doubt the greatest performance of opera in English ever given in this country.

We make these statements advisedly, with a full realization of their meaning, and say for your own sake—

CONSERVATION OF WATERS IN TRENT VALLEY DISTRICT

Association is Formed and Government Will be Asked to Act in the Matter

OFFICERS ELECTED

The organization meeting of the Trent Valley Water Conservation Assn. was held last night in the Bank of Montreal Chambers. Among those present were Messrs. J. H. Burnham M.P., E. G. Patterson, W. H. Denham, Jas. Kendry, ex-M.P., E. A. Peck M.L.A., Mayor Bradburn, J. C. Shook, Ald. Langford, Ald. Duffus, Ald. Green, Reeve Fitzgerald, Lakefield, Warden Bottum of Bobcaygeon, Supt. McClellan of the Trent Canal, Supt. Engineer Grant of the Trent Canal, W. H. Munro, O. Eason, Lindsay, J. B. McWilliams, Jas. Knapman, J. Linton, D. Davidson, City Clerk Armstrong and others.

W. H. Denham presided and opened the meeting, stating that it had been called for the purpose of organizing an association, which would have as its object the conservation of the water supply of the Trent District.

At present there was about one hundred thousand horse power used and with proper conservation the power could be increased by fifty per cent. Greater benefit could be derived from this source. The advantages were numerous.

Vitally Important

In a very interesting an instructive address on the question of conservation Mr. J. H. Burnham M.P., pointed out how the resource were becoming more necessary, more vitally important and essential to the power users. As the Government has decided to complete the Trent canal in the next two years it is vitally important that the conservation of the waters of the Trent district should be conserved now. From time to time difficulties had arisen. When the water supplies were plentiful there was no case to complain, but when the water ran low there was considerable grumbling. The speaker remarked how sometime ago he and Mr. Peck dug up considerable material on the question and that they informed the Commission on the matter.

No power policy had been adopted in this district before, therefore the meeting was to realise the facts as presented by the municipalities. On taking them up the Association were to press them home to the Government.

Must Be a Policy

"There must be a policy developed and at once,' said Mr. Burnham, with emphasis. It apparently was possible to develop the whole system. If there was a power policy we would not need the conservation of the waters. It was impossible to allow these things to go on as in the past. Mr. Burnham then quoted several abstracts from a report on the matter by Dr. Fernow.

The Government have a right to look after this owing to the navigation. It is a dire necessity that they should provide an even flow of water. They are not working intently, but with our assistance, ultimately, they shall produce something.

The lumbermen do not look after their privileges or do they know how. Our river is a perfect God send. Form an association and send a strong deputation to Premier Borden. Men of the State are impressed with strong deputations if they are intent. It appeals to him and he and the Government must respond. When impressed, they will respond quickly.

In two years the Trent will be completed and no power. The men will kick, all the districts elsewhere know what they are about in these cases but this one does not.

Movement Is Endorsed

Warden Bottum of Bobcaygeon, expressed himself as being strongly in favor of the project. He was particularly interested in the power side. He was also deeply interested in the conservation of the waters which meant power. Mr. Bottum assured the Association that when the project was pushed the people of Bobcaygeon would be on hand with every assistance possible.

Mr. Edwards of Lindsay, expressed his opinion that the question was an excellent one and heartily endorsed the formation of the Association.

Mayor Bradburn said that as a representative of the city of Peterborough, "we want power, not only for a few days at a time, but for every day in the whole twelve months of the year. Last summer there was an immense volume of water went over the dams. We should have it for the reserve flow. As usual the water was very low in August.

Mayor Bradburn, also referred to the trip over the back lakes of last summer. As Mr. Burnham suggested, he heartily endorsed the plan that the committee be appointed to wait on the Government and press home the advisability of the conversation of the water.

W. H. Denham stated that he was vitally interested in the power question, and referred to the trip of last summer over the lakes in company with the deputation.

KNOX CHURCH ANNIVERSARY

Principal Gordon D.D., of Queen's University, has received every honor and has occupied every position that the Presbyterian Church in Canada has in her power to bestow. Sufficient is it however, that he is Principal of Queen's University. As a minister he has been pastor of some of the most prominent churches in the Dominion, including St. Andrew's, Ottawa, and Knox Church, Winnipeg. As a preacher The Montreal Star has this to say of him. "His presence is graceful and impressive; his matter invariably well arrange d,and his delivery is beauty of elocution, unsurpassed in the Canadian Church.

Knox Church, in which Rev. Dr. Gordon will preach tomorrow, has had a very progressive seven years since St. Paul's Church on the 1st of January, 1907 bid the young church God speed. The development has been far beyond expectations and more rapid than the young church could well handle. But it has not been without generous friends in both St. Andrews and St. Paul's. Beginning in the spring of 1914 the three churches will together supervise a further extension of Presbyterianism in the city.

THE PROBABLE ENDING OF LIFE UPON THE EARTH

Hear Dr. Marsh's Lecture on the Phenomena of the Sun, on Tuesday Evening Next, at the Collegiate.

The phenomena of the sun will be explained by the learned doctor on Tuesday evening in the Collegiate Institute.

The discovery of that wonderful matter radium has caused the scientists to greatly lengthen their previously calculated time of the duration of the life of the sun.

The earth will probably be a worn out cinder long before the sun ceases to shine.

Our ideas of time are too limited to understand the ages of the spheres so we just say that the sun will most likely yet live for eons of time.

In the past many fanciful ideas were entertained regarding the great life giving centre of our solar system.

One of the most ingenious was the theory that the sun was a great electric centre and that the planets were points of magnetism and that there was a continual stream of electricity issuing from the sun to the planets, they cited the aurora borealis as evidence of the stream of electricity leaving the earth.

In this way they argued that there could be no waste of the energy of the sun and that the solar system would endure forever.

Of course this calculation overlooked the fact that when the small particles of matter became so small that the push of light became stronger than the pull of gravitation, thus gradually dissapating the substance of the planets. This of course may be counterbalanced by the constant stream of cosmic dust into the members of the sun's family of worlds.

Doctor Marsh will explain all this and much more. Do not neglect the privilege of hearing him on Tuesday next in the Collegiate Institute. Everybody welcome, no charge.

MRS. McCLURE TOLD OF HER WORK IN HONAN, CHINA

Interesting Address to St. Paul's W.F.M.S.—Secretary Reports Balance of $910—Election of Officers

Over 150 ladies attended the annual meeting and election of officers of the W.F.M.S. of St. Paul's Church yesterday afternoon in the Sunday School room. The president, Miss Dickson, presided.

One of the main features of the afternoon was the address of Mrs. Dr. McClure, of Honan, China. Mrs. McClure depicted the life in China of the missionary. Her own experiences were very interesting as she has spent some 3 years in the mission fields of China.

Mrs. McClure referred to the fact that not far from her quarters there was a building erected by Mrs. M. Maxwell of this city. This home had proved to be one of the most beneficial and successful homes erected for the heathen. It had also been the means of proving to the Government, the value of mission schools, resulting in several being erected at the expense of the Government.

The report of the Society presented by the secretary, Mrs. Harstone, was very satisfactory, showing a balance of $910.00 on hand. The other reports presented showed decided increases on the right side.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

Hon. Pres.—Mrs. Robert Pogue.
Pres.—Miss Dickson.

BASEBALL GAMES IN REGINA TO-DAY

REGINA, Dec. 13.—With hockey and curling openings not in sight, devotees of summer sports are again becoming active. Golf has been played right long, while horsemen are holding regular matinee meets. Baseball games are billed for today and football players are getting active again. Old-timers say the present is the mildest December in 30 years, and the same conditions prevail all over the West.

The firemen are busily engaged these days in preparation for their annual banquet and Christmas tree which is to be held next Thursday evening commencing at six o'clock. The dormitory is being fittingly decorated and already abundance of geese and turkeys have been purchased. The firemen's wives are supplying the Christmas cake, while T. Hopper will provide the potatoes.

As the firemen have no holiday on Christmas Day, this banquet is really their Christmas dinner so a big time is expected.

RETURNS FROM GUELPH SHOW

Archie Breault Says Peterborough Birds Made Good Showing.

Mr. Archie Breault of this city returned yesterday from Guelph where he was attending the Poultry Show. In conversation with a Review scribe Mr. Breault stated that the show is a record breaker and it was gratifying to see the Peterborough entries well within the money. In all there must be some 6,000 entries and as the local birds number around 100, they are drawing considerable attention. Judge McNeil who will be the judge at the local show in January, has a large division of the Guelph Show to handle, so the local association were exceedingly fortunate in obtaining the services of such a man.

While in Guelph Mr. Breault attended the Confederation of Poultry Association the main object of which was the application for a larger government grant for smaller shows. Mr. Breault states that this would undoubtedly be of much assistance to the local association as well as other associations which are now so numerous throughout the province.

DOROTHY STILL MISSING

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—It was three years ago today that Dorothy Arnold, daughter of a wealthy perfume importer, mysteriously disappeared. No trace of her has ever been discovered even though a world-wide search, similar to that which followed the kidnapping of Charlie Ross, followed.

C.G.E. COMPANY, SPLENDID EXAMPLE

An Industry With Sound Management and Faith in Canada's Future.

Electrical News.

Mr. Frederic Nicholls, vice-president and general manager of the Canadian General Electric Company is quoted, in an interview, as denying the rumor that any material reduction in the working staff at Peterborough is contemplated. Mr. Nicholls states that, although the number of employees in Peterborough now approximates 5,000, there are so many departments in the Peterborough factories and the orders have been coming in so satisfactorily, he believes continued employment can be assured, in one department or another, to all. Mr. Nicholls attributes this desirable state of affairs—all the more remarkable in this time of semi- depression in many of our industries—to the splendid reputation of the products of his company, their diverse character, and to the fact of the tremendous expansion of Canada with the resultant expenditures for railway, public works, power and lighting supplies.

The Canadian General Electric Company is a splendid example of the Canadian industry which bases its operation on sound management and a faith in Canada's future. With such a foundation there does not seem to be any need to fear temporary storms like that of the past year Most of our troubles—domestic, individual and otherwise—are creatures of a too vivid imagination. We see calamities impending that have no existence in fact. A little more faith in ourselves as a nation and a little more confidence in Canada's future is a good lesson for us all to take to heart at the present moment.

The directors of the C. G. E. Company have since given tangible proof of their own confidence by the declaration of a one per cent. bonus along with the regular dividend.

MOTHER DOES NOT KNOW

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—The aged mother of Charles Becker, former police lieutenant, who is in the death house for the murder of Herman Rosenthal, the gambler, is dying in this city, ignorant of the reason that prevents her son coming to see her.

SMITHVILLE VISITED BY DISASTROUS FIRE IN THE EARLY MORNING

Business Properties Destroyed — One Family Escapes in Night Clothes.

Loss is $40,000

Canadian Press Despatch.

SMITHVILLE, (near Hamilton), Dec 13.—Fire at one o'clock this morning, destroyed Morgan's store, Gracey's furniture and undertaking establishment, Joyner's barber shop, Hays' hardware and jewellry store, Patterson's grocery and the Smithville Public Library, and Masonic Hall were damaged.

The fire burned itself out at half-past four, the only things saved from the burned buildings being one trunk and some bedding. A bucket brigade prevented the flames from spreading and wiping out the village.

The Joyner family, mother and three childrne, one a baby in arms escaped from the burning building in their night clothes, losing everything.

The loss is estimated at nearly forty thousand dollars.

HEIR TO PEERAGE NOT ASHAMED TO WORK

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Lord Hyde, the son and heir of the Earl of Clarendon, who emigrated to Canada with his wife and family, eighteen months ago, is on a brief visit to England.

"I do not think I am ashamed to work," said the man who is related by brith or marriage to half the peerage, and who ened the intimate friendship of King Edward and Queen Alexandra.

"I have learned, since I went to Canada, the meaning of the ten-hour day, and since you ask me, I did lend a hand in building our pig pen at Pickering, and one or two other structures."

Lord Hdye is returning to Canada in Hyde in his venture apparently shares her husband's liking for work.

Lord Hyde's farm is a short distance out from Pickering and is something more than 20 miles east of Toronto. He has had a fine new residence constructed. He and Lady Hyde are quite popular in the district.

THEY ASKED FIFTY CENTS FOR EGGS

And No Difficulty Was Evidenced in Saying it.

TO-DAY'S MARKET

Christmas and Christmas marketing comes but once a year, and the latter was in full swing today for the stores were crowded as was the market, both inside and out.

When asked by a Review reporter how things were selling in comparison to this time last year one of the leading local grocers made known the fact that oranges and pineapples were a little cheaper and of a better quality while apples and nuts were a trifle dearer. The reason given in the case of oranges was that the growers experienced no frost and on the whole the crop was plentiful and of a much better quality. It was figured that they are selling on an average of five cents a dozen cheaper. A new shipment of pineapples a few weeks ago from Porta Rico to this section of the country brought that fruit prominently to the front and they are selling at 25 and 30 cents. First class nuts are selling for 25 cents a pound, while apples range from $3.75 to $5.50 a barrel.

On the market everything was like a midway. It was crowd and shove or else stand still. Every year this is the same story yet it could be otherwise of those attending the market would use a little tact. In the first place no one person or persons have any right to stop and tell a friend how much he or she has to pay for an article. This habit is done persistently, especially at the end of the building and it holds the crowd up to such an extent that the time of the seller and purchaser is lost. If you want to have a little chat with friends for pity sake pick out some other meeting place than the market hall.

It is reported that some 500 baskets of produce was placed on the tables and it was very evident by the crowd of buyers present that there would be nothing but empties going back, that is if the purse could stand the strain. Turkeys sold from $1.50 to $3.50. Geese from $1.50 to $2.00 and chickens from 90c to $1.50 a pair. Butter sold from 28c to 30c, while eggs were 45c per dozen. Some people were asking fifty cents and said it just as easily as fifteen cents.

The outside market was fairly well filled but the prices remained the same as last week. Sanitary Inspector Spence sent a load of meat away because it wasn't properly covered. This is something farmers should be careful about. Christmas trees were offered for sale and many were purchased. The price was 25c.

Canadian Press Despatch.

GLASGOW, Dec. 13.—The Unionist candidate, Hon. W. Watson, was elected in South Lanarkshire yesterday, in the by-election caused by the death of Sir Walter Mensies, the Liberal home ruler.

At the previous election the Liberal candidate in a straight fight had twelve hundred majority.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—Notices calling the attention of women passengers to the danger to male passenfiers and conductors from hat pins with unprotected points were posted in the London street cars yesterday by order of the County Council.

MINISTERS' RESOLUTION CONDEMNING BAZAARS

Commercializing Religion and Tend to Obscure the Lofty Mission of the Church.

The following resolution was submitted to the last meeting of the Ministerial Association and after earnest discussion was passed by a unanimous vote:

1. That this Association hereby expresses its sense of the great encouragement which has come to its members through the "Every member Canvass" and its warm appreciation of the very general and generous support promised by the members of our churches.

2. That the members of our Association consider this a favorable opportunity to express their conviction that bazaars, public entertainments, and other appeals to the community should be discouraged as means for raising funds for either church support or church extension.

This it is hoped, will lessen what seems to have become a burden, especially to the merchants of our city.

Jealous of the honor and usefulness of the whole church in her relation to the community, we would strongly deprecate any approach to the commercialising of Religion or anything else which may tend to obscure the Divine character and lofty mission of the church.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, DEC. 13, 1913.

GRAPPLING WITH TUBERCULOSIS.

To Liverpool, England, is due the credit for grappling in a practical way with the tuberculosis fiend. They have not instituted a Tuberculosis Sunday. They realize tuberculosis bacilli does not yield to sentiment and it has no regard for Scripture, all the thundering of Sinai could not shift it. The Liverpool scheme provides for an annual income of £40,000, of which £15,000 each will be donated by the city and the Government, and £10,000 by the insurance committee. It is estimated that this will be sufficient for the treatment of every tuberculosis case in the city. Liverpool is the first city to advance such a scheme in working order.

PEACE MONUMENTS.

IT MAY BE a good sign of the times that monuments, which once were raised to celebrate wars, are now to be raised to celebrate the century of peace between Great Britain and America. Peace hath her statues no less heroic than war. On this question of monuments it will be remembered that the Spartans built all their war monuments of wood, so that they would soon perish and the strife be forgotten. The Spartans were wise in this, but we have not followed their good example. With the Britisher, the Nelson monument in Trafalgar Square is an enduring reminder of the conflict with the French. But there may be something to be said for the educative value of the observance of Trafalgar Day, and it helps to sustain the national spirit.

As for a peace monument, some might regard it is a strange inversion of things to celebrate the fact that we didn't fight. It seems like going up to an old friend and saying:—"My dear friend, we have lived together in this world for many years and during all that time we have never shot each other or even had a round at fisticuffs, let us build ourselves a monument." It is a good thing for both Great Britain and America to have kept from bloodshed, but this fact doesn't mean that the American has always loved his cousin on the other side of the Atlantic. The relations between England and France and even Germany have often been far more intimate and friendly than have sometimes existed between England and the United States. But there is at present a better understanding between John Bull and Johnathan than ever before, and the friendship ought to be closer knit under the Presidency of so cultured a Christian gentleman as Woodrow Wilson.

ARE WE REALLY A GREAT PEOPLE?

PROFESSOR STEPHEN LEACOCK is well known for his genial, but candid criticisms of Canadians and Canadian life, the following is a taste of his medicine:

"Our rising generation really is beginning to think that Canada is the most important country in the world. If the slightest of our defects is hinted at by a friendly critic, he is called a jelly bag. If a German writes an article in a Berlin paper criticizing our climate, it is viewed as a national insult. Few Canadians pause to think of how little we count as yet, or deserve to count, in the world. In literature we count for nothing or next to it. In art about the same. To the progress of science, or invention, or thought, we have made as yet practically no contribution. Nor is the general aspect of our civilization, apart from its full dinner-pail and its material comfort, very reassuring to look upon. We are, after all, a crass, dollar-ridden crowd inspired people with only one idea. The man with the money is king. The rest of us are nowhere. The rising generation feasts its eyes on the goal of financial success."

There is always a danger with most young people if they are over-praised or given credit for the possession of superior qualities, that they will become swelled in the head. They not only become "too big for their shoes," but they have to get a larger sized hat. We Canadians do boast a little too much about the vastness of our territory, we brag about our monster harvests, and talk of being the senior partner in the firm of Empire. We pity those insignificant islands on the shores of Europe, with their toiling millions and can already see the time when London, and possibly King George, or his successor, will have to emigrate to Montreal or Toronto or Peterborough.

There is no gainsaying the statement of Professor Leacock that "in literature we count for nothing or next to it." It would mean death to even whisper this at the Arts and Letters Club in Toronto, where there abide continually a coterie of Socratic intellects who comprise a sort of mutual admiration society and daily convince each other that if there is any literary genius in Canada it is divided among the members of that club. Professor Leacock may be unacquainted with this Mecca of large minds.

The hysterical way in which some of our journals hail a new poet, instance the case of Miss Pickthal, who recently published a volume of lyrics, is an evidence of the paucity of genius and the lack of sane judgment in great poetry. A short time ago Robert Service was the national poet and it was dangerous to doubt his title as a Canadian Kipling. There is no great disgrace in the fact that Canada does not possess a great poet, for they are very scarce in these days, even in countries that have had time to breed them. There may be a great poet in England or France, but he is not known as such. The wonder is that Canada has any poets at all, for the one essential thing for the production of poetry is meditation and that is an attitude toward life which few people on this far-away continent can tolerate for more than five minutes. We are a business people, and everything is brought to the touch-stone of business. Possibly we will get a national set-back one of these days and we will have time to reflect upon things a little more than we do. The greatness of a nation, as the greatness and nobility of a character, depends upon what it can endure or what it has endured. Providence has been good to Canada and there is a danger of our being "spoiled." It is very easy to get mad with Professor Leacock over his candid criticisms. It would be better and more profitable to ask ourselves if they are not true. We are not a great people. But, as Byron said:—"It is not what we are, but what we may be."

HAVE WE A SOUL?

IN OUR NEWS COLUMNS we publish a copy of a resolution passed by the Ministerial Association, condemning bazaars and all public entertainments for the purpose of raising funds for the advancement of church work. There are various reasons for coming to such a decision. One is that bazaars are competitors of local trades-people and whatever money is made at these affairs is made at the expense of the shop-keepers. This is certainly a good reason for their discontinuance, and possibly the protests of local dealers have had some weight with the ministers. They can scarcely be expected to support a concern that is run in direct opposition to their business.

But there is a higher ground for objection to these means of supporting religion, and that is, that these methods tend toward the commercializing of religion. Religion is not a money-getting affair. The church that begins to regard itself as a business concern soon becomes a business. Organization is necessary, but there is only too much truth in the saying that the churches are "organized to death." The efforts that some of our modern ministers are making to combine saint-ship with stock-broking is very pitiful and the result is that the stock-broker comes out on top, or else the man goes under in the struggle and becomes a nervous wreck.

Canada has been called the "country without a soul." How much of the blame for this reputation (whether it be entirely true or not) lies at the door of the churches? What shall it profit a church if it gains the whole world and lose its own soul?

EDITORIAL NOTES.

STEFANSSON does not seem to be getting on very well with his crew. The chief difficulty is over the food. Mr. Stefansson has a liking for blubber, but his mates, having different tastes, have taken to blubbering.

"CANADA CAN'T is the most humiliating form of cant," says a Liberal contemporary. That is just what we have said—the Liberals were responsible for the silly saying.

CERTAIN TORONTO PAPERS seem to be in a perpetual state of quarrel—no one knows, or cares what it is all about. Each paper is at present trying to have the last word.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

How Sweet.

Hamilton Spectator.

From Paris Mrs. Pankhurst announces that she will be back in England soon. How considerate of her thus to give notice to the police, who will await her coming. "How sweet to know that there are eyes will mark her coming and look brighter when she comes!"

Illiterate Montreal.

Montreal Star.

When we hear that there are 40,000 illiterate persons in the city of Montreal, we begin to realize the problem that is before our educational authorities We may take some consolation from the fact that most of those uneducated are foreign born, but the percentage of Canadian-born who can neither read nor write is sufficiently alarming. It is even more alarming when we remember that the census shows many people as being able to write who can do little more than sign their names and whose powers of reading are of scarcely any practical use.

Past and Present.

Montreal Mail.

Are the public men of the present up to the standard of the past? That is a question that is often asked. Of course men of a past generation may not appear greater than they seemed to the people of their own days. Public men often do not get the credit they deserve until they are dead. But still it may at least be questioned whether we have the same number of big men to-day in Canadian public life that there was some years ago. What a galaxy of great figures for instance there was at the time of Confederation—John A. Macdonald, George Etienne Cartier, George Brown, A. T. Gault, Charles Tupper and Leonard Tilley—to mention only the leaders! Have we such men to-day at leats in equal numbers?

"Dont's" for Musical Students.

Westminster Gazette.

Sir Frederick Bridge, the veteran organist of Westminster Abbey, is more often seen on the lecture platform than any other British musician. He recently gave some sound advice to the students of Trinity College of Music as to how to act when they began the serious business of their profession He also warned them of some "vulgar errors,'" such as: "Don't let your profession turn you into an æsthetic prig." "Don't let your hair grow too long," "Don't burst out into some abnormal kind of German dress with true-lovers' knots flopping about," "Don't adopt a foreign name.." Apropos of a change of nomenclature, Sir Frederick related the fate of a vocalist he once knew named Green, who one day disguised himself as "Signor Broccolini," and was never again heard of in the musical world.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WORKINGMAN'S CANDIDATE

Editor of Review:

Dear Sir,—I notice by tonight's issue that Mr. W. Hill is mentioned as a probable candidate for the Utilities Commission. Has Mr. Hill signified his intention of coming out as a workingman's candidate or is it only rumor? I should be pleased to have this rumor verified. As a workingman, I would like to see the working classes represented, especially by such a strong candidate as Mr. Hill would make, and, seeing that we are now branching out into municipal ownership, I think the move is one in the right direction.

Yours truly,
WORKINGMAN.

THE PAPER BOYS

The Editor Review:

Sir,—The following incident occurred last evening. On the way home from the city I met a boy leaning up against an electric pole with a bundle of papers under his arm, crying piteously. Two other boys, evidently Review boys, as they had also papers under their arms, were jeering him. I asked the boy what was the matter, and he replied with a tut of boo-hoos, etc. "The Examiner ain't printing a Xmas number like the Review, sir!"

However I consoled him a little by giving him 10 cents. But to my amazement the bigger boy of the two, selling Reviews, answered back "That's right sir. The Examiner is getting like Laurier sir. Going down the hill fast, sir, etc."

Can you inform me if the above is a fact, not as regards Laurier, but the Examiner Xmas number.

Yours truly,
H.M.S. "THUNDERBOLT"
Peterboro, Dec. 13, 1913.

OPEN AIR SKATING

To the Editor:

Dear Sir,—Will you allow me through your columns to congratulate the leaders in the "Big Brothers" movement on the success of their meeting.

Among the names mentioned were those of men of influence in our city, might I suggest that this influence be used just now to secure for the children open air skating rinks which would provide them with recreation and tend to keep them off the streets. In the summer these might be converted into "supervised play grounds."

Open spaces for such play grounds are becoming scarce in our city, year by year, especially in that central district. What could be of more continuous or lasting benfit to the children of the poor than provision for healthful recreation and safety at their very doors?

Could not our "Big Brothers" take some steps NOW to secure these, not by appealing to an already overburdened City Council, or Board of Education, but to the benevolent spirit abroad at this season of the year, and which must be very wide awake in Peterboro to bring about the formation of the "Big Brothers' Club."

A MOTHER.

A CLEAN SHAVEN PINK-FACED CITY

An English Poet's View of Toronto.

Rupert Brooke, writing in the Westminster Gazette, on Toronto, says:

"Toronto has an idividuality, but an elusive one. It is a healthy, cheerful city, (by modern standards); a clean-shaven, pink-faced respectably dressed, fairly energetic unintellectual, passably sociable, well-to-do public-school-and-varsity sort of city.

"A Toronto man, like most Canadians, dislikes an Englishman; but unlike some Canadians, he detests an American. And he has some inkling of the conditions and responsibilities of the British Empire.

"Toronto, soul of Canada, is wealthy, busy, commercial, Scotch, absorbent of whisky; but she is duly aware of other things. She has a most modern and efficient interest in education; and here are gathered what faint, faint beginnings of premonitions of such things as art Canada can boast.

"Toronto is not squalid like Birmingham or cramped like Canton, or scattered like Edmonton, or sham like Berlin, or hellish like New York or tiresome like Nice. It is all right.. The only depressing thing is that it will always be what it is, only larger, and that no Canadian city can ever be anything better or different."

To Have Real Christmas.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—The Sheffield Telegraph announces the unanimous decision of the English press, including The London Times, to suspend publication on Christmas Day. Last year The London Times published for postal subscribers only, but this year it is definitely associated with every other English newspaper, and consequently there will be an entire suspension by all newspapers, morning and evening, on Christmas Day.

More than a million workers engaged in the publication and distribution of newspapers will enjoy a real Christmas Day for the first time.

New Chinese Consul-General.

OTTAWA, Dec. 13.—Yang Sewen, who will succeed Lu Ping Tien as Chinese consul-general to Canada, arrived in Ottawa yesterday. The new consul is about forty years of age and has been for many years in the Chinese Imperial Service. He was formerly consul-general to the Philippine Islands and has held important offices in Shanghai, Pekin and other cities in his native country.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

NOVEL

By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

"By George!" Fitzgerald whistled softly. "Has he ever found any?"

"Not so much as a postage stamp, so far as I know. Money's always been in the family, and his Wall street friends have shown him how to double what he has, from time to time. Just for the sport of the thing some old fellows go in for crockery, some for pictures, and some for horses. The admiral just hunts treasures. Half-past 6; you'll excuse me. There'll be some train dispatches in a minute."

Fitzgerald gave him a good cigar, took up his bag, and started off for the main street; and once there he remembered with chagrin that he had not asked the agent the most important thing of all: Had the admiral a daughter? Well, at 8 o'clock he would learn all about that. Pirates! It would be as good as a play. But where did he come in? And why was courage necessary? His interest found new life.

Swan's hotel was one of these nondescript buildings of wood which are not worth more than a three line paragraph even when they burn down.

The landlord himself lifted Fitzgerald's bag to the counter.

"A room for the night and supper, right away."

"Here, Jimmy," called the landlord to a growing, lumbering boy, "take this satchel up to No. 5."

The boy went his way, eying the labels respectfully and with some awe. This was the third of its kind he had ported upstairs in the past twenty-four hours.

Fitzgerald cast an idle glance at the loungers. There were half a dozen of them, some of them playing cards and some displaying talent on a pool table, badly worn and beer stained. There was nothing distinctive about any of them excepting the little man who was reading an evening paper, and the only distinctive thing about him was a pair of bright eyes. Behind their gold rimmed spectacles they did not waver under Fitzgerald's scrutiny. So the latter dismissed the room and its company from his mind and proceeded into dinner. As he was late he dined alone on mildly warm chicken, greasy potatoes and muddy coffee. He was used often to worse fare than this, and no complaint was even thought of. After he had changed his linen he took the road to the house at the top of the hill. Now, then, what sort of an affair was this going to be, such as would bend a girl of her bearing to speak to him on the street? Moreover, at a moment when he was playing a grownup child's game? It could not be a joke. Women never rise to such extravagant heights. Pirates and treasures! He wouldn't have been surprised at all had Old Long John Silver hobbled out from behind any one of those vine grown fences and demanded his purse.

The street was dim, and more than once he stumbled over a loose board in the wooden walk. If the admiral had been the right kind of philanthropist he would have furnished stone. But, then, it was one thing to give a country town something and another to force the town council into accepting it. The lampposts, also of wood, stood irregularly apart, often less than a hundred feet, and sometimes more, lighting nothing but their immediate vicinity. Fitzgerald could see the lamps plainly, but could separate none of the objects round or beneath. That is why he did not see the face of the man who passed him in a hurry. He never forgot a face if it were a man's. His only difficulty was in placing it at once.

Fitzgerald tramped on cheerfully. It was not an unpleasant climb, only dark. The millionaire's home seemed to grow up out of a fine park. There was a great iron fence inclosing the grounds, and the lights on top of the gates set the dull red trunks of the pines aglowing. There were no lights shining in the windows of the pretty lodge. Still, the pedestrians' gate was ajar. He passed in, fully expecting to be greeted by the growl of a dog. Instead he heard mysterious footsteps on the gravel. He listened. Some one was running.

"Hello, there!" he called.

No answer. The sound ceased. The runner had evidently taken to the silent going of the turf. Fitzgerald came to a stand. Should he go on or return to the hotel? Whoever was running had no right here. Fitzgerald rarely carried arms, at least in civilized countries. A stout cane was the best weapon for general purposes. He swung this lightly.

"I am going on. I should like to see the library."

He was not overfond of unknown dangers in the night, but he possessed a keen ear and a sharp pair of eyes, being a good hunter. A poacher, possibly. At any rate, he determined to go forward and ring the bell.

Both the park and the house were old. Some of those well trimmed pines had scored easily a hundred and fifty years, and the oak standing before the house and dividing the view into halves was older still. No iron deer or marble lion marred the lawn which he was now traversing. A sign of good taste. Gardeners had been at work here, men who knew their business thoroughly. He breathed the odor of trampled pine needles mingled with the harsher essence of the sea. It was tonic.

In summer the place would be beautiful. The house itself was built on severe and simple lines. It was quite apparent that in no time of its history had it been left to run down. The hall and lower left wing were lighted, but the inner blinds and curtains were drawn. He did not waste any time. It was exactly 8 o'clock when he stepped up to the door and pulled the ancient, wire bell. At once he saw signs of life. The broad door opened, and an English butler, having scrutinized his face, silently motioned him to be seated. The young man in search of an adventure selected the far end of the hall seat and dandled his hat. An English butler was a good beginning. Perhaps three minutes passed, then the door to the library opened and a young woman came out. Fitzgerald stood up. Yes, it was she.

"So you have come?" There was welcome neither in her tone nor face, nor was there the suggestion of any other sentiment.

"Yes. I am not sure that I gave you my name, Miss Killigrew." He was secretly confused over this enigmatical reception.

She nodded. She had been certain that, did he come at all, he would come in the knowledge of who she was.

"I am John Fitzgerald," he said.

She thought for a space. "Are you the Mr. Fitzgerald who wrote the long article recently on the piracy in the Chinese seas?"

"Yes," full of wonder.

Interest began to stir her face. "It turns out, then, rather better than I expected. I can see that you are puzzled. I picked you out of many yesterday on impulse because you had the sang froid necessary to carry out your jest to the end."

"I am glad that I am not here under false colors. What I did yesterday was, as you say, a jest. But, on the other hand, are you not playing me one in kind? I have much curiosity."

"I shall proceed to allay it somewhat. This will be no jest. Did you come armed?"

"Oh, indeed, no!" smiling.

She rather liked that. "I was wondering if you did not believe this to be some silly intrigue."

"I gave thought to but two things, that you were jesting or that you were in need of a gentleman as well as a man of courage. Tell me, what is the danger and why do you ask me if I am armed?" It occurred to him that her own charm and beauty might be the greatest danger he could possibly face. More and more grew the certainty that he had seen her somewhere in the past.

"Ah, if I only knew what the danger was! But that it exists I am positive. Within the past two weeks on odd nights there have been strange noises here and there about the house, especially in the chimney. My father, being slightly deaf, believes that these sounds are wholly imaginative on my part. This is the first spring in years we have resided here. It is really our summer home. I am not more than normally timorous. Some one we do not know enters the house at will. How or why I can't unravel. Nothing has ever disappeared, either money, jewels or silver, though I have laid many traps. There is the huge fireplace in the library, and my room is above. I have heard a tapping like some one hammering gently on stone. I have examined the bricks and so has my father, but neither of us has discovered anything. Three days ago I placed flour thinly on the flagstone before the fireplace. There were footprints in the morning—of rubber shoes. When I called in my father the maid had unfortunately cleaned the stone without observing anything. So my father still holds that I am subject to dreams. His secretary, whom he had for three years, has left him. The butler's and servants' quarters are in the rear of the other wing. They have never been disturbed."

"I am not a detective, Miss Killigrew," he remarked as she paused.

"No, but you seem to be a man of invention and good spirit. Will you help me?"

"In whatever way I can." His opinion at that moment perhaps agreed with that of her father. Still, a test could be of no harm. She was a charming young woman, and he was assured that beneath this present concern there was a lively, humorous disposition. He had a month for idleness, and why not play detective for a change? Then he recalled the trespasser in the park. By George, she might be right!

"Come, then, and I will present you to my father. His deafness is not so bad that one has to speak loudly. To speak distinctly will be simplest."

She thereupon conducted him into the library. His quick glance, thrown here and there absorbingly, convinced him that there were at least 5,000 volumes in the cases. He was glad to see that some of his old friends were here, too, and that the shelves were not wholly given over to piracy. What a hobby to follow! What adventures all within thirty square feet! And a shiver passed over his spine as he saw several tattered black flags hanging from the walls, the real articles, too, now faded to a rusty brown.

Behind a broad, flat mahogany desk, with a green shaded student lamp at his elbow, sat a bright cheeked, white haired man, writing. Fitzgerald instantly recognized him. Abruptly his gaze returned to the girl. Yes, now he knew. It was stupid of him not to have remembered at once. Why, it was she who had given the bunch of violets that day to the old veteran in Napoleon's tomb. To have remembered the father and to have forgotten the daughter!

"I was wondering where I had seen you," he said lowly.

"Where was that?"

"In Napoleon's tomb nearly a year ago. You gave an old French soldier a bouquet of violets. I was there."

"Were you?" As a matter of fact his face was absolutely new to her. "I am not very good at recalling faces. And in traveling one sees so many."

"That is true." Queer sort of girl not to show just a little more interest. The moment was not ordinary by any means. He was disappointed.

"Father!" she called in a clear, sweet voice, for the admiral had not heard them enter.

At the call he raised his head and took off his Mandarin spectacles. Like all sailors, he never had any trouble in seeing distances clearly. The difficulty lay in books, letters and small type.

"What is it, Laura?"

"This is Mr. Fitzgerald, the new secretary," she answered blandly.

"Aha! Bring a chair over and sit down. What did you say the name is, Laura?"

"Fitzgerald."

"Sit down, Mr. Fitzgerald," repeated the admiral cordially.

Fitzgerald desired but one thing—the privilege of laughter!

CHAPTER V.

NO FALSE PRETENSES.

A PRIVATE secretary, and only one way out! If the girl had been kind enough to stand her ground with him he would not have cared so much. But there she was vanishing beyond the door. There was a suggestion of feline cruelty in thus abandoning him. He dared not call her back. What should he say to the admiral? There was one thing he knew absolutely nothing about, and this was the duties of a private secretary to a retired admiral who had riches, a yacht, a hobby and a beautiful, though impulsive, daughter. His thought became irrelevant, as is frequent when one faces a crisis, humorous or tragic. Here, indeed, was the coveted opportunity to study at close range the habits of a man who spent less than his income.

"Come, come; draw up your chair, Mr. Fitzgerald. Are you a sailor?"

"Not in the technical sense," answered Fitzgerald. "I know a stanchion from an anchor and a rope from a smokestack. But, as for travel, I believe that I have crossed all the high and middle seas."

"Sounds good—Australia, East Indies, China, the Antilles, gulf and the south Atlantic.

"Yes; round the Horn, too, and east Africa." Fitzgerald remembered his instructions and spoke clearly.

"Well, well; you are a find. In what capacity have you taken these voyages?"

An Admitted Charge

By LOUISE CARPENTER

Miss Mathews' "tea" was in session, and the young ladies who had met for the mental improvement to be gained by an exchange of ideas, having exhausted the topics the young hostess had laid out for them, descended at once to ordinary conversation, which in common parlance means gossip.

"I've heard," said Miss Phillips, "that this new arrival, Mr. Edmonds, is the best catch that has come to this town in years."

"And I have heard," said Miss Atherton, "that he's not a marrying man."

"No man is a marrying man," remarked Miss Gregory, "unless he be tired of single life and hunting a home. Men don't seek matrimony as we girls do, because a man, especially a young man, is not ambitious to take care of some one. We, on the contrary, must look out for ourselves. Which one of you is willing to be an old maid?"

"But I've heard," Miss Atherton went on, "that Mr. Edmonds has expressed himself openly as being a woman hater."

"Then," said Miss Mathews, "it is our duty to give him to understand that we don't wish to have anything to do with him. What do you say, girls?"

"I don't see," said Miss Gregory, "that there is any necessity to show the gentleman that we don't wish to have anything to do with him since he has avowed himself a woman hater, which means that he doesn't care to have anything to do with us."

"That's just like you, Kit," put in Miss Britton. "You're always on the off side."

"How do you know that he is a woman hater? Did you hear him say so?" Miss Gregory asked.

"No, but May Farnsworth got it direct from Betty Fiske, who knows him very well."

"Supposing," Miss Gregory replied, "that we girls were a jury to try Mr. Edmonds on the charge of being a woman hater, do you think the judge would admit such evidence? If I were his counsel I would show a motive on the part of the girl who reported the confession."

"What motive?"

"Why, I don't know any better way for her if she wants him herself to destroy competition. Mind you, I don't accuse her of intending to do so. I only use the point as an illustration."

It looked for a time as though the matter would be dropped, but another girl had heard the same report, and the majority admitted that it must be so. It was finally agreed that no notice should be taken socially of Mr. Edmonds until it was known whether he was or was not a woman hater. Then the young ladies separated, each and every one, except Miss Gregory, who was not in sympathy with the rest, resolving that she would find out for herself whether the charge was correct.

It was not long before it was noticed that Miss Betty Fiske, who had spread the charge, was seen a great deal with Mr. Edmonds. Then the conspiracy broke apart, and each of the young ladies of the tea party managed by hook or crook to make Mr. Edmonds' acquaintance. A conversation very like this was apt to follow:

"I'm very glad to meet you, Mr. Edmonds, but I don't suppose you're glad to meet me."

"Why?" was the surprised rejoinder.

"Because I hear you are a woman hater."

Mr. Edmonds knit his brows.

"Are you?"

"Yes."

After the question was thus put to him six times, each time with a similar reply, the gentleman began an investigation as to how the report about him came to be circulated. One of the girls present at Miss Mathews' "tea" had given an account of the discussion to her mother, and that lady gave it to the accused.

Suddenly Miss Fiske found herself dropped by Mr. Edmonds, and he showed by his manner to the girls who had asked him about being a woman hater that he had no use for their society. However, there was one exception. Mr. Edmonds solicited an introduction to Miss Gregory and on obtaining it said:

"I have understood that I have admitted myself to be a hater of women, and I have admitted the fact. But there are few statements that do not need a qualification. I hate all women who are unwomanly, who are backbiters and slanderers, who spread false reports and who believe anything that is told them without an investigation."

This is all the gentleman said to the lady at the time. He remained for some time in the town and during the period of his sojourn lavished upon Miss Gregory every attention she would accept, while to the others who had been implicated in the charge against him he showed himself all that he had been accused of being.

"I do believe," said one of the conspirators to another in discussing the matter, "that Sue Gregory told him the story herself, putting forward her defense of him and lashing the rest of us."

A year later, when the engagement between Mr. Edmonds and Miss Gregory was announced, all the girls agreed that Sue had played her cards very cleverly, but Mr. Edmonds declared that he had been attracted to his fiancee from the fact that she was the first woman he had come in contact with who wouldn't believe anything that was told her without proof.

BUILD OF THE BABY.

Normal Weights and Measurements Up to Three Years of Age.

A baby should weigh at birth seven pounds, at three months eleven pounds, at five months fourteen pounds, at one year twenty-one pounds, at two years twenty-six pounds and at three years thirty-one pounds. The length of a baby at birth should be twenty and one-half inches, at three months twenty-two inches, at five months twenty-three and a half inches, at one year twenty-eight inches, at two years thirty-two and a half inches and at three years thirty-five inches.

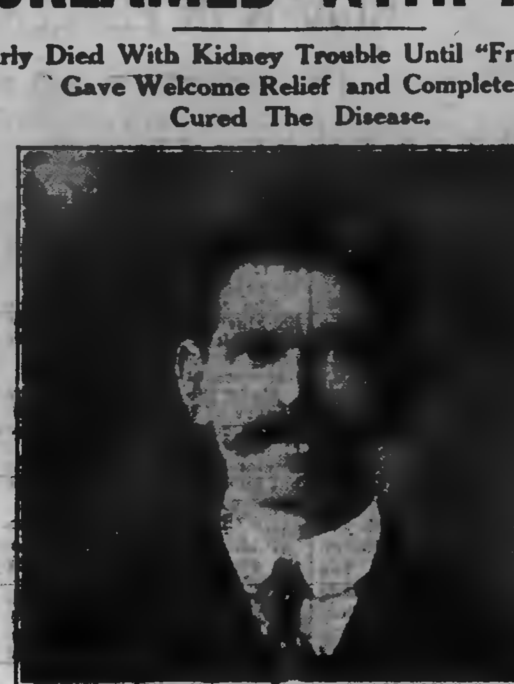
Its chest measure at birth should be thirteen and a half inches, at three months fourteen and a half inches, at five months sixteen inches, at one year eighteen inches, at two years nineteen inches and at three years twenty inches.

Some babies are built very small, and, if well, even if below these figures, there is no cause for worry. But if a baby is about normal size and does not come up to these figures its diet should be carefully looked into, as evidently it is not being properly nourished.

The growth of baby's body is very important. See that the teeth come in properly and that the legs grow straight and strong. The babies should be carefully watched and developed naturally.—Rural Farmer.

SCREAMED WITH PAIN

Nearly Died With Kidney Trouble Until "Fruit-a-tives" Gave Welcome Relief and Completely Cured The Disease.



CHARLES CALVEART, Esq.

St. Thomas, Ont., April 1st., 1913

"In 1911, I was laid up with Kidney Trouble and not able to get out of my chair. The pain was excruciating and my screams could be heard in the street. I tried many different remedies without any results and I was steadily growing weaker. One day, a friend from Ottawa came in to see me and when he found me in such poor health, said he would send me a sample of "Fruit-a-tives," which he did and I commenced taking them. They did me good from the start and in a very short time I was up and around. "Fruit-a-tives" completely cured me and I have enjoyed the best of health ever since.

I would not have any other remedy for Kidney Trouble and would strongly advise anyone suffering from this trouble to cure themselves with "Fruit-a-tives." CHARLES CALVEART

It is simply wonderful, the relief that "Fruit-a-tives" gives in Kidney and Bladder Troubles. In the great majority of cases of "acid urine," pain in the back, "kidney cramps" and Rheumatism, the kidneys are not actually diseased. They are merely overworked. That is, they are doing more than their share of the work of ridding the system of waste matter. In most cases of Kidney and Bladder Trouble, there is also Constipation and faulty Skin Action. "Fruit-a-tives" relieves the Kidney Trouble by correcting the action of the Bowels and Skin. This marvellous fruit medicine acts directly on the liver kidneys and skin, and is the only medicine in the world that does act on all three of these great eliminating organs. "Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Kidney Trouble when caused by poor skin action, constipation and acid indigestion. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, trial size 25c., at all dealers or sent on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

MONA LISA IS FOUND HIDDEN IN FLORENCE

Italian Named Vindenzo Perugia Who Stole it From the Louvre Gallery in Paris Has Been Arrested —He Says He Took it Out of Revenge For Napoleon's Theft of Italian Paintings.

FLORENCE, Italy, Dec. 13.—Leonardo Da Vinci's masterpiece "Mona Lisa," or as it is popularly known, "La Joconde," the mysterious disappearance of which from the Louvre in August, 1911, threw the art world into consternation, was found yesterday in Florence.

The man who stole it was arrested. He is an Italian.

The find was made by Prof. L. Credaro, Minister of Public Instruction and Fine Arts. He announced the discovery in the lobby of the Italian Parliament in Rome yesterday. The picture has been placed in the hands of the Prefecture of Police in Florence.

It is not yet known how the picture came to Florence, but there is no doubt as to its authenticity, for it has been identified by Dr. Conrado Ricci, General Director of Fine Arts and Public Instruction, one of the most competent art critics in Italy.

The police had been informed that the stolen picture was hidden at Milan, but failing to find it there, they directed their inquiries to Florence with successful results. The name of the arrested man is Vincenzo Perugia, an Italian who has lived in Paris. He declares he stole the masterpiece out of spite against France, as he wanted to restore it to his native country as compensation for all the works or art stolen by Napoleon from Italy.

The French Embassy here have been notified of the finding of the picture, which, it is understood, the Italian Government will restore to France without delay.

The picture was offered to a local dealer in antiques, who informed Mr. Poggi, director of the art galleries at Florence. Subsequently Ricci went to Florence from Rome and identified the picture. The Minister of Public Instruction was have made a full statement of finding the painting in the Chamber yesterday, but in consequence of the Socialists engaging in a bout of fisticuffs the sitting had to be adjourned until to-day.

La Jocende, one of the world's most famous paintings, is regarded as priceless. Leonardo da Vinci took as his model Lisa Del Giocondo, a woman of Florence, and he worked on the picture for four years, from 1500 to 1504. It was bought for France by Francis I.

The value of the work can only be imagined, since all offers were refused for it, among them one reported to have been made by the British Government of $5,000,000.

Since the disappearance from the Louvre of the picture, the search for it had been world-wide. It has been reported to be in Germany, Russia, England, Spain and even in America, but no definite clue ever was obtained of its whereabouts.

Offered To Antiquarian.

PARIS, Dec. 13.—The discovery of the whereabouts of the famous "Joconde" was made when the picture was offered by an Italian resident of Paris to an antiquarian of Florence, according to an announcement made last evening by the French Ministry of Public Instruction.

Both the picture and the Italian are now in custody of the police of Florence.

The Italian declares that he stole the picture from the Louvre in order to avenge the thefts which Napoleon I. committed in Italy.

Germany Not To Exhibit.

BERLIN, Dec. 13.—It was decided yesterday to withdraw the bill for the appropriation of $500,000 for the purpose of arranging German representation at the Panama Pacific Exhibition at San Francisco.

This step was taken owing to the strong objections raised by several state Ministers.

Schmidt's Confession Read.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13. — Hans Schmidt's confession of the murder of Anna Aumuller was read yesterday into the records of his trial by Police Inspector Faurot in command of the detective bureau. It was Faurot who arrested Schmidt, and to him the one time priest told the story of his crime.

Big Suit Against G.T.R.

OWOSSO, Mich., Dec. 13.—The Grand Trunk Railroad is to be sued for an aggregate amount of $250,000 damages for the fire that wiped out the town of Perry, Mich., last summer. It is alleged that the fire was started by a spark from a G. T. R. locomotive.

SIR JAMES WHITNEY

Premier of Ontario, and Hon. Dr. Pyne, Minister of Education, are spending a holiday fortnight in Washington for rest and health. They have for the past week enjoyed themselves quietly, seeing the sights, among which have been the Houses of Congress in session and the Supreme Court of the United States. Neither has called at the State department and their stay is regarded as entirely private. They will remain three or four days before returning to Canada.

COMMANDER OF U.S. FLEET ENDS TAMPICO BATTLE

Foreigners in Oil City Are Taking Refuge on Boats in Harbor While Fierce Battle Rages About Town.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 13.—Rear-Admiral Fletcher, commander of the American naval forces in Mexican waters, yesterday ordered the rebels and Federals fighting at Tampico to cease firing, threatening to open on them with the guns of the gunboat Wheeling if his order was not obeyed. Both sides complied with the order.

This information is contained in a despatch received last night by Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister, from Admiral Sir Richard Christopher Craddock of the British cruiser Berwick, which is lying off Tampico.

The Federals hold the centre of the town of Tampico and the waterfront. Rear Admiral Fletcher has ordered foreigners to take refuge on board ships, or to congregate on the waterfront, where they will be under the protection of his guns.

At the Mexican War Office it was announced that 800 additional troops had been despatched from Vera Cruz to aid in the defence of Tampico. Reinforcements, it was added, also had been sent to the beleaguered town from San Luis Potosi, leaving at the latter place only a very small garrison.

Jacinto de Cologan y Cologan, the Spanish Minister to Mexico, made a demand yesterday on Querido Moheno, the provisional Foreign Minister, for the protection of 100 Spanish subjects, refugees from the city of Chihuahua, who are trying to reach Torreon.

The Spaniards, Senor Cologan y Cologan said, were ordered out of Chihuahua by the rebel leaders under the threat of death. The Foreign Minister promised to send a detachment of troops from Torreon to rescue the wayfarers.

The Mexican gunboat Bravo is playing an important part in standing off the rebels who are attacking Tampico, the warship directing its fire from the river at the insurgent positions on the other side of the town

In spite of the heavy firing of both the Federals and rebels in the Tampico battle, little damage has been done to the city, according to private telegrams received here yesterday, on account of the long range at which the engagement is being fought.

The fighting Thursday was confined to the vicinity of Dona Cecilia, a suburb three miles east of Tampico where are located oil refineries, shipping wharves and railroad yards.

Sir Lionel Carden, the British Minister here, received a message yesterday morning from Rear Admiral Sir Christopher Craddock, saying that a number of British subjects and Mexicans, including several women and children, had taken refuge on board the British steamer Logician at Tampico. Other foreigners, the British admiral said, were being cared for on the American warships and German vessels in the harbor.

The message contained no information as to the result of the fighting.

Archer-Shee Visits Carranza.

HERMOSILLO, Sonora, Mexico, Dec. 13.—Major Martin Archer-Shee, a Unionist member of the British Parliament, was here yesterday to confer with Gen. Carranza regarding matters which he termed purely personal. He arrived after a hurried trip, part of which was made by automobile from Tucson, Arizona, and went into conference at once with the rebel commander-in-chief.

He said his interest was caused by the fact that most of the English investigation had been made "on the other side."

Trouble With Bilinguals.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 13.—"The provision of satisfactory teaching in English in the bilingual schools remains one of the big problems," says Hon. Mr. Coldwell, Minister of Education, in a report to the Legislature, "but satisfactory progress has been made. Polish and Ruthenian training schools graduated ninety-two teachers."

LADS ADMIT THEY STOLE

For some time Detective Newhall and Constable Meagher have had two suspects under surveillance for breaking into the stores of Nelson Routley and R. C. Braund which were entered last fall and a quantity of goods stolen. Yesterday afternoon the officers arrested two local youths.

On their appearance at this morning's session of Police Court they elected to be tried by Magistrate Dumble and pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing $2 from the till of the store of Nelson Routley and to the charge of stealing jewellry to the value of $100 from the store of R. C. Braund.

TURNBULL'S

GOVERNMENT WILL ENCOURAGE CO-OPERATION FOR FARMERS

New Branch of the Department of Agriculture is Organized Under the Direction of F. C. Hart, B.S.A., to Encourage Direct Selling of Produce in Order to Give Farmers Fullest Benefit.

TORONTO, Dec. 13.—The Ontario Government, working through the Department of Agriculture, is out gunning for the high prices of farm products in the province. The new organization was announced last evening as the co-operation and markets branch, and F. C. Hart, B.S.A., district representative of Galt, is the man who will take charge.

The purpose of the move is explained by the Hon. J. S. Duff as an endeavor to assist the farmers in the solution of their local marketing problems. The general subject of marketing will be thoroughly discussed in public, and the best methods and means of placing farm products before the public will be advertised. An important part of the work of the new branch will be in dealing with the preparation of produce for the market, a thing which at the present is often overlooked by the average producer.

The matter of transportation will necessarily be linked up with the subject of freight and produce rates, which have been threshed out so vigorously in recent conventions of farmers and market gardeners. The aim will be to allow the grower to arrive at a position where he can secure the best price available and make the demand for his goods more steady and more satisfactorily supplied.

F. C. HART, B.S.A.

Co-operation and methods contributing to the unity of farmers in the scientific culture of their farms will be one of the greater problems of the new director. In the advocating of better organization, special emphasis will be laid on the business side of farm management. This follows the growing dissatisfaction with the great difference existing between the price the producer receives and that which the consumer pays.

F. C. Hart, the new director, is well qualified for the work he assumes. Born in Nova Scotia in 1878, he is a graduate of the Halifax Academy. After teaching school in rural sections and farming for a number of years, he graduated at the O. A. C. in 1902. He distinguished himself in his class, being president of his year, president of the Junior Literary Society, and staff editor of "The O. A. C. Review." During undergraduate holidays, and for a year after graduating, he was engaged in Federal Government forestry work in the west. In 1907 he returned to Ontario to take the position as district representative for Waterloo County, with headquarters at Galt. He was one of the first half dozen district representatives. He has taken a special interest in all forms of rural organization, having been instrumental in bringing together a number of the Farmers' Clubs which have done excellent service to their several communities.

Want Forty Thousand Men.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—A newspaper advertising campaign for recruits to the British army is to be undertaken in all parts of the country. The War Office has become convinced of the value of the newspapers as a medium and has placed a contract with the head of the regular advertising agency to conduct the campaign during the next year on a large scale.

No less than 40,000 men are needed to fill vacancies in British regiments.

Big Rifle Shipment Seized.

BELFAST, Ireland, Dec. 13.—Customs officers yesterday seized here a consignment of 200 rifles which arrived on board a freight steamer from Germany. This was one of the largest seizures since the issue of the proclamation against the importation of arms and ammunition into Ireland. Captures have been made daily, but usually in small lots. Most of the rifles are of patterns which have been discarded by the European armies.

"For Another's Crime."

KAMLOOPS, B.C., Dec. 13.—"I am dying for another's crime," were Paul Spintlum's words before being hanged by Executioner Ellis in the jail yard here yesterday morning. He went to the gallows calmly.

HUMILIATED WOMAN

Would Not Attend Social Functions Because of Her Hair.

There are many women in this world, handsome in features, perfect in form, graceful of movements and brilliant of mind, who keep in the background just because they have thin, colorless and lustreless hair.

In Paris they understand things about the hair that we do not know in this country. It was a Parisian, Dr. Sangerbond, who discovered that thin hair and dandruff are caused by a microbe.

It is Parisian Sage that proves Dr. Sangerhood's theory to be correct, for it is rigidly guaranteed to kill the dandruff germ and cure dandruff, falling hair and itching scalp in two weeks or money back.

Parisian Sage is a delightfully pleasant hair dressing and invigorator; it is not sticky or greasy. It should be used freely in Spring and Summer as it keeps the scalp clean and cool and free from odors.

Parisian Sage comes in large 50 cent bottles and it is for sale by The Warne Drug Co., and leading druggists everywhere on the money-back plan. "The Girl with the Auburn Hair" is on every package. Made in Canada by The R. T. Booth Co., Ltd., Fort Erie, Ont.

"Salome" Not Coming.

The Sheehan Opera Co. will not present "Salome" at the Grand on Monday night, as the company will disband at Hamilton, after the performance to-night. Poor business is the cause.

A STALWART IN SOUTH MONAGHAN

Mr. Joseph Clark Tells Why He is Hale and Hearty.

"EARLY TO BED"

Among the callers at The Review today was the veteran Mr. Joseph Clark, who resides at Centreville, in South Monaghan. Besides renewing his subscription to The Review Mr. Clark's visit was interesting in other ways for he was in a reminiscent mood. While he is now in his 89th year, he does not show his age, and few would take him to have reached more than his 60th year at most, and he informed the Review that he had performed a good summer's work in the field, not because he had to, but for the reason that he believes that a fair amount of labor is conducive to his good health. Mr. Clark has resided in South Monaghan since 1835, where he has raised a family of eight children, and besides has been able to accumulate a sufficiency of this world's goods. Mr. Clark attributes his vigor and good health to the fact that when a young man instead of going to "sprees" and sitting up all night, he went to rest at a proper time, and never indulged in anything that was liable to injure his body. Mr. Clark is certainly one of the stalwarts of this part of the country, and is a fine representative of the many north of Ireland natives that have made such splendid citizens of this part of Ontario.

REV. J. R. WEBB AT BELLEVILLE

Spoke on the Bible and the Church of Christ.

A Belleville exchange contains the following reference to Rev. J. R. Webb's address before Belleville branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society which was in session on Wednesday evening.

Rev. J. R. Webb, of Peterborough, gave an address, basing his remarks on the 9th verse of the 4th chapter of Isaiah. The subject of his remarks was "The Bible and the Church of Christ." The divine stated that in the past few years there had been great changes, and that business and professional men are taking a more active interest in the work of the Master. We are witnessing a greater revival for religious work in this and other countries. We were living in a grand and glorious time. The Bible is the Book of God and the power of God unto salvation. It is amazing what the Word of God has done for the world. We must put emphasis on God's Word. The Bible has transformed the world and it is the Word that abides forever. It is the work of the church to get up on to the highest pinnacle of faith in God. The Bible was the grandest book ever published and a power for good throughout the world.

KANSAS WOMAN WHO SUFFERED

From Headache, Backache, Dizziness and Nervousness, Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Lawrence, Kans. — "A year ago I was suffering from a number of ailments. I always had pain and was irregular. During the delay I suffered a great deal with headache, backache, dizziness, feverish spells, nervousness and bloating. I had been married nearly three years. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and now I feel better than I have for years. I recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound to all who suffer as I did." — Mrs. M. ZEUNER, 1045 New Jersey Street, Lawrence, Kansas.

Montana Woman's Case.

Burns, Mont. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound cured me of awful backache which I had suffered with for months. I was so weak I could hardly do my work and my head and eyes ached all the time. Your Compound helped me in many ways and is a great strengthener. I always recommend it to my friends and tell them what a grand medicine it is for women. You may use my name for the good of others." — Mrs. JOHN FRANCIS, Burns, Montana.

The makers of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound have thousands of such letters as those above — they tell the truth, else they could not have been obtained for love or money. This medicine is no stranger — it has stood the test for years.

HAZEN SCOUTS IDEA

He Does Not Believe Rumors About Artic Explorer.

OTTAWA, Dec. 13.—Speaking of the theory that Stefansson has been abandoned by the Karluk, Hon. J. D. Hazen, Minister of Marine, said yesterday:

"The story is not only absolutely unfounded and unwarranted by anything that has occurred in regard to the expedition, but it is a most serious allegation to make against the character of the scientists who accompanied Stefansson.

"We have not a shred of information which would justify such a theory," he continued. "The Stefansson expedition was better equipped than any previous venture of its kind ever sent north. Supplies abundant enough to last for three years were carried, and every possible provision was made, not only for the subsistence, but for the comfort of the men. Everything furnished to the crew, as well as to the officers, was first-class in every way."

PLOT AGAINST THE OFFICIALS

Convict Says Evidence Is All a Frame-up.

KINGSTON, Dec. 13.—The feature at yesterday afternoon's session of the prison reform commission was the sworn statement of convict F95 that stories of ill-treatment told by many convicts already heard were "frame-ups" on their parts, to do injury to prison official. This convict gave the name of another convict and claimed he was the chief leader in the scheme to give false evidence against officials.

"I know these men, and I know their stories have just been manufactured," declared.

He gave the name of a certain convict and stated that he, after giving evidence, had gone back to his cell and then told him that he had "put it over" the deputy and surgeon.

Asked about the traffic of tobacco, he said that it was brought into the pen. in wagons and carts.

GUN PLAY IN NEW YORK

Gangsters Meet in Battle at Madison Square Gardens.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—Fifty shots were fired yesterday morning near the Fourth avenue entrance of Madison Square Garden in a battle royal between two gangs that have infested the Garden during the six-day bicycle race. A Madison avenue street car was commandeered by one element as a barricade while bullets whistled in all directions. Passengers threw themselves face downward on the floor.

The police were prompt in reaching the scene, but the combatants jumped into automobiles and escaped. So far as is known no one was hurt, a remarkable fact in view of the promiscuous shooting. It is said that the battle started in a row over the right of rival leaders to furnish "strong arm" men for special police work in the Garden.

The consolidation gives the Canada S. S. Lines a fleet of over one hundred steamers. The capital will be, as already announced, $25,000,000

Presbyterian Church Union Committe Will Probe Conditions.

TORONTO, Dec. 13.—After three days' discussion the Presbyterian Committee on Church Union finished its deliberations yesterday morning and in the afternoon a joint conference of the Methodist, Presbyterian and Congregational Church Union Sub-Committees was held. The cardinal feature of the whole proceedings was the motion of Principal Gandier of Knox College. This was carried by the Presbyterian Church Union Committee, and later in the afternoon, the proposal of Principal Gandier with regard to a survey of the whole religious field of Canada was carried by the joint sub-committees on the motion of Rev. Dr. Cleaver which was seconded by Rev. Frank J. Day. The whole motion of Principal Gendier is as follows:

"That having considered further amendments to the present basis of union and alternative proposals, as sent in from presbyteries, sessions, congregations and individuals, we do now, in accordance with the instructions of the General Assembly, and in the hope that union may be consummated without any unnecessary delay, ask our sub-committee to confer with representatives of the other negotiating churches, with a view to common agreement on an amended basis.

"That the sub-committee be further instructed to bring before the joint committee the desirability of a complete survey of church conditions throughout the Dominion, that before any vote is taken our people may know the facts."

Girl Killed by Bomb.

NEW YORK, Dec. 13.—A bomb sent by express, exploded and instantly killed Ida Anusewitz, aged 18, employed in an uptown bottling works, yesterday and injured two men employes. The girl's head was nearly torn off. She had been employed there only a short time.

The package containing the bomb was addressed to the bottling company in stencil. It was received by Thomas McCabe, who placed it on the girl's desk awaiting her arrival. The explosion wrecked the room, shattering plate glass windows, and tearing a jagged hole in the floor. The police believe dynamite was used.

Canal Is Progressing.

OTTAWA, Dec. 13.—Work is advancing rapidly on the new Welland Canal and section 8 will be the next section for which tenders will be called. This is the section next to Port Colborne, and will be an expensive cut, as it is through rock for the most part. Plans and specifications are now in preparation and tenders will be called for during the winter.

Sections 1, 2, 3 and 5 are in progress.

Wreck Seen on Lake Erie.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—Revenue cutter headquarters yesterday telegraphed the commander of the cutter Morrill at Detroit to proceed at once to make a search for the wreckage of an unknown vessel sighted in Lake Erie, about 30 miles north of the Cleveland breakwater. According to reports here, a mast attached to some rigging has been sighted in that vicinity by passing ships.

Latest Quotations in Grain, Dairy Products, Live Stock, etc.

DROPS DEAD IN CEMETERY.

Caretaker Dies While Locating Grave at Ingersoll.

INGERSOLL, Dec. 13. — While marking the location of a grave in the Ingersoll rural cemetery yesterday Mr. J. D. Knapp dropped dead. He had been summoned in connection with the digging of a grave, and while in the act of marking the spot where it was to be dug, fell over and expired at once. He had been caretaker of the cemetery for nearly twenty-five years and had resided in Ingersoll over thirty years. With his wife he came to Canada from Dorsetshire, Eng. During the time that he had resided here he manifested a keen interest in civic affairs, and had served as a councillor. In September last Mr. and Mrs. Knapp celebrated their golden wedding. The widow and two sons and two daughters survive.

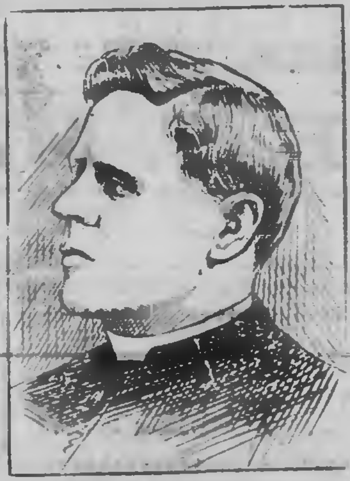
HE PEDDLED PENCILS

REV. CANON RIDLEY TURNED IN TO HELP THE CRIPPLE.

Galt's Popular Clergyman Has a Long Record of Kindly Acts Which Have Endeared Him to a Whole Diocese—He Is on the Job For All When Vacation Time Is On—Is a Great Friend of the Poor.

If you had been out on the main street of Galt the other day, at a bustle hour, you would have witnessed the novel spectacle of a well-built man, in clerical garb, "holding it down" for a poor, crippled vendor of lead pencils, and creating a run of business on what, as it happened, was proving an off-day of trade for the legless unfortunate. The bunch of pencils in the hands of the cripple's coadjutor went like hot cakes. As he turned in the proceeds and left his post, with a word of good cheer to his partner pro tem., you would have heard people remark: "That's just like John Ridley, of Trinity, the man who goes about doing good."

There is, perhaps, no clergyman in the Anglican Diocese of Huron better known or more sincerely esteemed and beloved than the Rev. Canon Ridley, rector of Trinity Church, Galt. For over twenty-five years he has labored in this community, a rigid English Church parson ostensibly, a broad Catholic in reality—for in acts of service to his fellows, whether in sacred or secular concerns, he knows neither creed, communion, race, nor social condition. His parish is the whole town, the countryside—the district at large.



REV. CANON RIDLEY.

There have been vacation months when Rev. John Ridley was the only Protestant minister left in Galt. At such periods he cheerfully does, as well as his own, the work of the ministerial absentees — burials, marriages, baptisms, visits to the sick and destitute, and asked no man's commendation or gratitude.

Does a poor teamster lose his horse, it is John Ridley who heads and industriously circulates a subscription list to replace it. When misfortune of unusual character overtakes some humble individual or family, the good rector is among the first to learn of it and to give practical aid.

The new-arrived immigrant, a trifle hard-up in making a start in town, is directed to Mr. Ridley, and is helped tide it over nicely.

"A man he was to all the country dear" will be written of Canon Ridley by the future local historian. And, if it be added, "passing rich," that term goes, and with it records that his modern stipend was ever regarded as "God's money," and spent accordingly.

Not long ago Rural Dean Ridley became Canon Ridley. They say that he is well in line for elevation to the archdeaconship. And—but we must not crowd the preferments likely to come to the genial, large-hearted, practically benevolent rector of Trinity, whose daily walk admirably illustrates the moralist's dictum, that "the highest form of Christian life is self-denial for others good."—Toronto Star Weekly.

Laws Against Beggars.

Begging was a capital offence in England in the days of Henry VIII., when the laws were very severe against beggars, and under a statute passed in that reign any one caught begging for the first time, being neither aged nor infirm, was whipped at the cart's tail. If caught a second time his ear was slit or bored through with a hot iron. If caught a third time he suffered death as a felon unless some honest person having $50 in goods or 40 shillings in land or some householder approved by the justice would take the offender into his service for two years, entering into a bond of $50. So the law of England remained for sixty years.

To Allay Dust.

A new device for allaying dust in the mines is about to be placed on the market in South Africa. The machine consists of a cylindrical metal drum, fitted with two nozzles, into which pure water is fed from any pips in the mine. The power required for distributing and vaporizing this water is derived from the air-compressor which drives the drills. Hitherto the difficulty has been to deal with dust during the period of blasting, when the dust evil is greatest; it is claimed, that this new invention gets over the difficulty, as it can be operated from the surface.

Origin of Hydropathy.

Hydropathy, or the application of water to the cure of disease, was known as early as 1855, when a Dr. Heberden of London placed his patients in a damp house and made them sleep between damp sheets. It astonished other physicians that sheets were dipped into a spring, then wrapped around the patients, who were put to bed.

FRANKLIN'S LONDON HOME.

Passing of the Old House in Which the Philosopher Once Lived.

The house in London where Benjamin Franklin once lived is about to be turn down. It is at 7 Craven street, the site of a great new restaurant about to be erected, and it is supposed that the tablet which now marks the building will be replaced upon the new building. It reads: "Lived here Benjamin Franklin, printer, philosopher and statesman. Born 1703; died 1790."

At No. 7 Franklin lived about 1770. Here he "went home and thought over it" when the secretary of state informed him that orders in council had the effect of law. Here he boarded with a Mrs. Stevenson and entertained his fellow boarders by a series of whimsical papers, the Craven Street Gazette, detailing the adventures of Mrs. Stevenson upon a trip. Sparks prints this citation: "At 6 o'clock this afternoon news came to the post that her majesty" (Mrs. Stevenson) "had arrived safely at Rochester on Saturday night. The belle immediately rung for candles to illuminate the parlour; the court went into cribbage, and the evening concluded with every demonstration of joy."

N. Darnell Davis of the Royal Colonial institute suggests that if Americans would interest themselves no doubt they could induce Sir Joseph Lyons, the restaurateur, to deal gently with the historical relic, which might well become a Franklin hall. — New York World.

How G. B. S. Does Love Himself!

Bluntly tackled about the date of his next volume of plays, George Bernard Shaw again made confession.

"A volume is due very soon now," he said. "What has been holding that back is the most important part of the book."

"You mean the preface?"

"Yes. This is to be the last of my great prefaces. It is to be called 'Parents and Children.' and it will be the first really complete exposure that has ever been made of the tyrannic imposture of our whole system of imprisoning children because they are troublesome under the pretense of educating them."

"Quite in the key of your other famous prefaces?"

"I think so. When this is finished all my prefaces, taken together, will form a body of doctrine more complete than anything since Plato."—London News.

Scrip Has Gone Astray.

LONDON, Dec. 13.—In connection with the recent issue of £4,000,000 Dominion of Canada four per cent stock The Times says that several pieces of scrip have gone astray. These pieces may bear the lithograph signature of Sir Frederick Williams Taylor, but as there is a possibility that the missing scrip may get into circulation, the bank has adopted the precaution of having all the genuine scrip countersigned by another official as "pro accountant," and bankers, stock brokers, and others are warned against negotiating or dealing in any way with scrip of the above-mentioned issue not so countersigned.

REINSTATED PLAYERS WERE GIVEN BENEFIT OF DOUBT

Toronto Star: Those who take exception to the reinstatement by the O.H.A. of Messrs. Boyer, Langman and Denison, are apparently not acquainted with the facts. The players in question were not professionalized, but suspended with the other players of the Hamilton Alerts. The other players were subsequently declared professionals when complete evidence of contracts etc., was obtained against them. The three players mentioned were not included in the category and no evidence of that character was secured against them; had it been there would have been no chance of reinstatement.

As it stands now the O.H.A. gave the three boys the benefit of the doubt on the evidence submitted. As to the allegations of manipulation by one member of the executive there is absolutely no foundation for such a charge. The O.H.A. does not do business in that manner, it is governed by representative men from from all parts of the province, who know their own minds, have the courage of their convictions, and are actuated by the highest motives in the government of the sport.

LIPTON'S YACHT TO BE READY IN APRIL: PRELIMINARY PLANS FOR COMING RACE

Preliminary details for the 1914 yacht race for America's cup are rapidly being completed on both sides of the Atlantic. Long before the challenger and defending candidates slide off the ways and sailing masters, skippers and crews will have been selected and all plans arranged for the trial and tuning-up races, both off the English and American coasts.

Three possible cup defenders are assured for the United States, and one or two others may be built if those interested can find satisfactory yacht builders to undertake the work.

Work Has Started

In England the actual construction of Shamrock IV. Sir Thomas Lipton's challenging yacht, was started on November 3, and the 75 footer is expected to take the water early in April.

Although five months will elapse before the tuning-up process is started, English yachting circles are already busily engaged in discussing the plans for the test races and the selection of the crew and officers for Shamrock IV.

A prominent yachting man in discussing these preliminaries, says:

"In the trial races between Sir Thomas Lipton's cutters, the new challenger, Shamrock IV., and the old Shamrock 23 meters, built in 1908, W. P. Burton will have sole charge of both the yachts and will sail the challenger, assisted by his sailing master, Albert Turner.

All New Skippers

The 23-meter will be steered by Captain Gould, a skipper who has a high reputation in racing circles. That the professional skippers whose names are so familiar to yachting people are not connected with the matches for the America's Cup for 1914 will appear extraordinary to many, and it is undoubtedly a circumstance of much interest and will form a topic of conversation among yachtsmen for many months to come.

"However, good men as they are, Sir Thomas Lipton has failed before with them in command of his yachts, and he can but try again with new hands in charge."

"Captain Gould is not a young man, but he is a skilled racing man, and, while W. P. Burton and Albert Turner are, of course, typical of the latest school of seamanship in modern racing cutters using all the science and forethought that is required in handling the beautiful tall-sparred racers of the day, it may perhaps be said that Captain Gould is a skipper of an older school."

In addition Mike Murphy, Pappin and three others are expected to arrive during the week.

At the Mercantile Hockey League meeting, the resigning of Mr. T. Moffat as Secretary Treasurer was received with regret. "Tommy" was one of the father of Mercantile sports and hockey was not the only branch of sport that received his attention for he was about the first to take the baseball league in hand and get it started. He stated when resigning that he was not getting tired of the work but his future was rather uncertain and he might perhaps be out of the city before spring. If this is to be the case amateur sport in this city will lose one of its best supporters.

KEEP ASHES CLEAR OF ALL OTHER REFUSE

An Important Notice Governing Garbage Collections

The residents in the garbage collecting district are requested to note that in future garbage may be wrapped in paper. This will prevent garbage freezing in winter. All other refuse except ashes may be placed with the garbage, but ashes must be kept clear of all other rubbish or refuse.

The above notice from the Sanitary Inspector follows a meeting of the Property Committee last night.

The contractors will take all garbage to the incinerator and will receive $100 extra. Up to the present they have ben making a profit on some of the garbage, but the object of the committee is to have all the garbage sent to the incinerator so that there will be sufficient fuel.

CASE IS CLOSED

Early Judgment Expected In Huge Legal Battle.

OTTAWA, Dec. 13.—"Well, gentlemen, this case is closed," said Chairman H. L. Drayton, K.C., of the Railway Commission, just as the electric clock on the wall of the board room clicked off four o'clock yesterday afternoon.

He gave a sigh of relief and then added smilingly to the assembled counsel before him: "I don't suppose you expect a judgment on this case before to-morrow." Then the regiment of lawyers and their assistants began to gather their briefs, etc., together and five minutes later the room, in which most of the hearings in the western freight case have been heard, was empty. Since February, 1912, the case has dragged its weary way on, absorbing the labor of mathematicians, statisticians, lawyer newspapermen, traffic and tariff experts, almost ad infinitum, and now the judgment day will be awaited with interest by half the nation, as the judgment, whatever it be, will affect the whole country in some way or other.

It is reported that the judgment will be given without much delay.

WINTER FAIR AT AN END

Attendance of 10,000 in Excess of Any Other Year.

GUELPH, Dec. 13.—The Provincial Winter Fair, which has been in progress since Tuesday, closed yesterday afternoon at five o'clock. This year's was the most successful fair since 1883, and according to a large number who ought to know it was the best agricultural and live stock show ever held in Canada.

The attendance could not have been better under the prevailing conditions. All previous records were broken, there being nearly 10,000 people present in excess of any previous year.

The prices at the auction sale of the sheep and hog carcasses shown at the fair were in advance of those of last year. Hogs went $2.28 per cwt. higher than last year's price, which was $11.75. The hogs, which were sold in one large bulk, brought $14 per cwt.

Lambs also brought considerably in excess of former prices. The average lamb sold at 16 cents per pound while some went at 18 cents.

TRENT VALLEY FOREST RESERVE

Mail and Empire.

The Commission of Conservation is recommending that the 2,000 square miles of land in the Trent Canal watershed be set aside by either the Dominion or Provincial Governments as a forest reserve. Such a protective measure would under the peculiar circumstances, seem to be well advised. The water supply for the Trent Canal and Kawartha Lakes is obtained from the watershed mainly, and would be seriously impaired if the area in question were denuded of the remaining timber. Since the Dominion Government in 1905 obtained control of the water rights, much valuable work in damming up the back lakes has been done, with the result that the flow of water for power purposes north of Peterborough has enlarged most satisfactorily. The Dominion has spent over ten millions already on the Trent Canal, and by the time the extensions to Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario are completed it will have spent several millions more. And further, there are cogent reasons beyond the water-conservation interest to support the commission's recommendation. Half of the area is now unpatented, or in possession of the Crown. Only a tenth of the land can be farmed, and the farming at the best is so poor as to be quite unprofitable. Less than 700 acres of a million acres of forest is untouched virgin area. Under the provincial order-in-Council of 1905, conveying to the Dominion the water control, the right to buy land along the lakes and water-courses at 50 cents an acre was granted the Dominion Government, but only two thousand acres were bought. It seems obvious that the best interests of the district, as well as the requirements of a wise conservation policy, would be served by making the areas in question a reserve for afforestation purposes.

JUDGMENT RESERVED

Judgment was reserved until Monday in the case of Percy Holland and Laverne Killenbeck, charged with theft of $15 from a man named Ireland. Both pleaded not guilty and elected summary trial. G. N. Gordon conducted the prosecution.

William Ireland, said that yesterday he had been drinking a little and while on his way from the American house in company with Killenbeck and Holland he felt a hand being put into his pocket. He immediately discovered the loss of his money. Killenbeck was walking along side of him locked arms. Holland was just behind them.

Cross examined by Killenbeck, witness swore that it was he, (Killenbeck) that put his hand into his pocket and took the money.

Witness also saw Killenbeck transfer something from his vest pocket into his pants pocket.

Constable Brown told of assisting in the arrest of the two men. He saw Killenbeck change something from his vest pocket to that of an inside pocket and he rushed forward and found a roll of bills.

Killenbeck remarked "Well, I guess you have got us this time."

Constable Reid gave practically the same evidence as the former witness.

On searching the prisoners at the station money was found on them.

At the door of the Police Station Holland had tried to pass something to the other man. P. C. Reid interfered.

In his evidence Killenbeck told how he met the man Ireland in the American hotel and they went to the Palace to get a drink. Holland followed behind. There was no robbery on the way to the hotel.

"In the bar room of the hotel, some one yelled 'here comes the cops,' and then some one grabbed me, saying, 'take this,' and with that some one stuffed the money into my pants pocket. I don't know who it was."

"Why did you refuse to take the bills when offered them by Holland at the Police Station door?" asked Mr. Gordon.

"Because Reid interfered."

"How much money did you have?"

"About $13."

"Did Holland tell you in the morning that he was busted?"

"Not that I know of."

"How long since you were working?"

"About a month."

Killenbeck then told the court a story of how he had won a bet and made some money that way a few days ago.

Holland admited that he had tried to pass the money to Killenbeck as he did not want to be found with the money on him.

He denied saying that he was busted. Witness then described how he had sold his watch for $7 on the morning in question and that was how he had come to have money

CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 280, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,267 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 3 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 437 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

THE SPORTING WORLD

REINSTATED PLAYERS WERE GIVEN BENEFIT OF DOUBT

Toronto Star: Those who take exception to the reinstatement by the O.H.A. of Messrs. Boyer, Langman and Denison, are apparently not acquainted with the facts. The players in question were not professionalized, but suspended with the other players of the Hamilton Alerts. The other players were subsequently declared professionals when complete evidence of contracts etc., was obtained against them. The three players mentioned were not included in the category and no evidence of that character was secured against them; had it been there would have been no chance of reinstatement.

As it stands now the O.H.A. gave the three boys the benefit of the doubt on the evidence submitted. As to the allegations of manipulation by one member of the executive there is absolutely no foundation for such a charge. The O.H.A. does not do busines in that manner. It is governed by representative men from from all parts of the province, who know their own minds, have the courage of their convictions, and are actuated by the highest motives in the government of the sport.

LIPTON'S YACHT TO BE READY IN APRIL; PRELIMINARY PLANS FOR COMING RACE

Preliminary details for the 1914 yacht race for America's cup are rapidly being completed on both sides of the Atlantic. Long before the challenger and defending candidates slide off the ways and sailing masters, skippers and crews will have been selected and all plans arranged for the trial and tuning-up races, both off the English and American coasts.

Three possible cup defenders are assured for the United States, and one or two others may be built if those interested can find satisfactory yacht builders to undertake the work.

Work Has Started

In England the actual construction of Shamrock IV. Sir Thomas Lipton's challenging yacht, was started on November 3, and the 75 footer is expected to take the water early in April.

Although five months will elapse before the tuning-up process is started, English yachting circles are already busily engaged in discussing the plans for the test races and the selection of the crew and officers for Shamrock IV.

A prominent yachting man in discussing these preliminaries, says:

"In the trial races between Sir Thomas Lipton's cutters, the new challenger, Shamrock IV., and the old Shamrock 23 meters, built in 1908, W. P. Burton will have sole charge of both the yachts and will sail the challenger, assisted by his sailing master, Albert Turner.

All New Skippers

The 23-meter will be steered by Captain Gould, a skipper who has a high reputation in racing circles. That the professional skippers whose names are so familiar to yachting people are not connected with the matches for the America's Cup for 1914 will appear extraordinary to many, and it is undoubtedly a circumstance of much interest and will form a topic of conversation among yachtsmen for many months to come.

"However, good men as they are. Sir Thomas Lipton has failed before with them in command of his yachts, and he can but try again with new hands in charge."

"Captain Gould is not a young man, but he is a skilled racing man, and, while W. P. Burton and Albert Turner are, of course, typical of the latest school of seamanship in modern racing cutters using all the science and forethought that is required in handling the beautiful tall-sparred racers of the day, it may perhaps be said that Captain Gould is a skipper of an older school."

CHRISTMAS APPEAL FOR The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1912, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1912, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 276 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 3 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 8 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1912, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 437 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

PETERBORO HEALTH ASSOCIATION

Nursing is not confined to tuberculosis, only, but takes in all branches of general cases, one nurse attending to that part of the work. All calls coming through the doctors will be promptly attended to. The following are the monthly reports from Nov. 1st, to Dec. 1st, for nurses in general work and tuberculosis:

Nurses for General Work

Number of patients	9
Number of visits made	80

Nurses for Tuberculosis

Number of patients	30
Number of visits	163

So much depends upon the nurses. They go about as St. Paul with the Ephesians, healing from house to house, bringing cheer, happiness and hope and general encouragement, of which the parents need so much.

Too much praise cannot be given for the good work that is being done in Peterboro today, by the Health Association, and if the public would only interest themselves and all join and help in the grand work, much advancement would be made in the matter of health and against tuberculosis. Can we look each other in the eye and say at least we have done our part, or have done the work that fell to our part or ask ourselves what we have left undone?

Last summer we asked Mr. Cochrane about the conservation of the waters. He said the waters could be conserved for navigation purposes. The money derived from the boats on the lakes goes into private pockets. The Government spends the money for the benfiet of the private parties who own the boats. We ask as an industrial people, that they recognise us as an industry and therefore I maintain that the Government should take action. Ontario is the centre of the industries of the Dominion. Unless we get water conservation we are going to lose and it will be a big disgrace to the Dominion. The principle manufacturers of the city are dependant on the power of water. In the Quaker Oats Company they have only been able to run the flour mill from ten to twelve hours instead of twenty-four. The water is not properly regulated. The men at the back of it are doing as their fathers did. The stop logs should be properly handled at all seasons. The dams should be constructed of concrete and higher. His object as that of the Association was to get facts and set them before the Government.

Mr. Patterson was of the opinion that it was very essential to have the matter pressed and he heartily endorsed the steps taken by preceding speakers on the question. It's a question of dollars and cents, the industries, the municipalities, the amount of business, these facts taken to Ottawa will produce a strong impression. "Unless something is done we will be out of lights. Let's get down to the facts of this affair," concluded Mr. Patterson.

Mr. J. C. Shook also expressed himself as being greatly in favor of the project and said it was one of general interest to every one.

Mr. Davidson expresed himself as being most favorable in regard to the question and was of the opinion that the deputation to Ottawa would be of great assistance to the Association.

Mr. J. B. McWilliams addressed the men present, pointing out some very striking facts of the question and their usefulness. He had prepared the report of Dr. Fernow and was of the opinion that reforestry would be also of great assistance.

Mr Diamond, a lumberman, said that it would greatly tend to the protection from damage caused by fire if the Association was to have the question of new locations of hunters' lodges settled.

Mr. Jas. Kendry, ex-M.P., stated that it was a vital mtater and needed attention. The Government should divert the power evenly. They are far more interested in the navigation side of the affair.

Take Nassau, Auburn and the Quaker dams, they are all in the same way. It would be advisable for the committee to make special mention of the navigation side of the question as the Government tends in that direction. As a power user it's certainly a great hardship to spend money in factories and then be unable to get power to run them. Superintendent McClellan admitted that with the completion of the balance of the Trent Valley Canal it did not look very bright for more power.

Mr. W. H. Munro of the Light and Power Company of the city, described how the city managed to get along at present as they were connected with power out of the city and this was getting them over this year. The power users are just mediums. Everyone is dependant on the power. Every man would lose his day's wages if the power were to fail. The power is just a medium to pass on to the every-day workman. The Government should also turn their attention to the reforestration side too.

Mr. Kendry: "It would be far stronger politically for the deputation to tend towards the navigation side."

Mr. E. G. Patterson: "Take the proposition of everything and present the facts depending upon this power."

The election of the officers then took place and resulted in the following being elected:

Hon .Pres.—J. H. Burnham M.P.,
Pres.—W. H. Denham.
Vice.-Pres.—Warden Bottum of Bobcaygeon.
Sec.-Treas.—W. H. Munro.

Executive Com.—Messrs. J. Edwards, Lindsay, J. H. Brandon, Feneleon Falls, Reeve Fitzgerald, Lakefield, Jas. Peel, Coboconk, Jas. Carew, Lindsay, T. F. Matthews, Mayor Bradburn, E. G. Patterson, Jas. Owens, Campbellford, G. Porter, M. P., Belleville, and Mayor Dr. Kidd of Trenton.

The late Mrs John Brown, whose funeral was held yesterday afternon, was born in Hope township in 1831, and she came to Peterborough in 1853. For forty years she resided on Harvey street, and during her residence in this city, Mrs. Brown had been a faithful worker at George street Methodist church.

In 1897 she went to Chicago and remained there until her death, which occurred on Tuesday of this week. Her husband predeceased her 14 years. Surviving are five sons, Wellington, Manitoba; Richard and Fred, Nevada; Nelson, Seattle, and James, in Chicago, and three daughters, Misses Mattie and Nettie, Chicago, and Mrs. D. Allison, of this city. Two sisters are Mrs. R. P. Butler, Newcastle, and Mrs. C. Sexberry, Iowa.

Mr. James Brown accompanied the remains from Chicago.

THE LATE H. H. SPRING

Hubert Horace Spring, aged 19 years, passed away last evening at his home at 176 Edinburgh Street, after an illness of but ten days. Death was due to pneumonia. Deceased up till the time of his illness was employed as an operator in the Royal Theatre, and was very popular with the young men of the city.

He was born in Deseronto, but came here some seven years ago. Save for a few months spent in Rochester, he had lived here ever since. A young wife, his father and three brothers, are left to mourn his death.

THE NORMAL AT HOME

On Friday evening the staff of the Normal school tendered a reception to the Normal students and the city teachers, the function taking the form of a farewell to the Modelites as well. After greeting the staff, who received in one of the teachers' rooms, the guests gathered in the assembly hall. Here a very enjoyable though short program, was presented, consisting of a solo, "Macushla," by Mrs. Paul Trebilcock, Tosti's "Goodbye," sung very sympathetically by Mrs Perrin, a very beautiful violin selection from Dr. Park, who responded to a hearty encore with Barcaroll. Miss Katy Leary gave a humorous dialect entitled "Property," and Mr. Maurice Park delighted all with a song from Hiawatha; Miss Rannie acted as accompanist throughout in her usual pleasing way. Following the program Mr. Walker made a few remarks expressing the good will all felt towards the departing Modelites and the hope that they would be successful in their chosen vocation and so bring honor to their training schol. In a few happy words Mr. Walker gave the guests the freedom of the school and warning them to lay off their pedagogical air and make themselves at home, left the platform to the pianist, Miss Rannie, who soon had the promenaders in motion.

Following the promenades, some drifted off to the tea room, while others followed Mr. Thompson, the director of physical training to the halls to join in games. Two long lines of happy girls were formed, Mr. Thompson acting as director for a clothespin race. The excitement ran high as the game came to a close amidst a burst of applause from the victorious side. Next a Shakespearian contest was engaged in. The questions were to be answered from the plays of Shakespeare and they taxed the thinking powers of even the literary students.

The tea room was very prettily decorated in red and green, the artistic arrangement showing evidence of Miss McRae's superintendence. Thence the company filed up into the library where a huge Xmas tree awaited them. The students and teachers entered heartily into the spirit of fun and songs were sung to while away the time before the good saint of childhood should make his appearance. Everybody was happy deliriously happy, hugging little woolly dogs and waving deafening rattles, wildly in the air, the teachers especially being presented with most appropriate gifts.

THE EVER OPEN DOOR

"The Door that always opens" is the title of the latest illustrated booklet issued by Dr. Barnardo's Homes. It contains the life stories of a day's admissions told in a very readable fashion. Here is one of them:

"In the dark hours comes little Teddle, found in the street at two o'clock in the morning, burning with fever. Not even Dr. Barnardo's Homes could save him, and we can see that he must die. But nobody could know how pitiful some of his last words would be. His good nurse kissed him like a mother. 'Why did you do that?' said the astonished boy.' and then, 'Nobody—never—kissed—me—afore.'"

TO THE ELECTORS OF THE CITY

In the Field for Water Commissioner.

Ladies and Gentlemen:

The retirement of Mr. W. H. Hill from the board of Water Commissioners has decided me to offer myself as a candidate for the vacancy made by his withdrawal.

Realizing that the Board of Water Commissioners to be an efficient and business-like organization and that the local Hydro-Electric will be an addition to the duties of the Commission for the coming year it will be my aim if honored with a seat at the board, to co-operate with the present members of that commission and to assist in continuing the success already achieved by the Waterworks department, and help, so far as in my power, with the organization of the local Hydro-Electric system, (which has had in our city since its advent, my loyal support), to make this public utility of the greatest possible service to the citizens of the municipality.

The qualification which I present to you in support of my candidature is service in your interest for five years on your board of Aldermen.

On this record I ask your support at the polls.

Respectfully,
ROBERT HICKS.

Your umbrella will last longer if you don't roll it or lend it.

"You have both been in this court since you were boys; I have warned you but is has not been effective, and therefore there is nothing to do but to stop your career now," continued His Worship.

The reception into the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin of St. Peter's Cathedral, was held last night, sixteen aspirants for the white ribbon and thirteen for the blue ribbon being received. Vespers was sung by Rev. Father Phelan, while His Lordship Bishop O'Brien presented the ribbons and the medals and also spoke a few words commending the good work of the Sodality and urging the new members to practise the virtues of piety, obedience and chastity. Rev. Father Galvin delivered a special sermon on the Blessed Virgin.

Acts of Consecration to the Blessed Virgin were read by Miss Geraldine Lane (first degree), Miss Lydia Delaire (second degree) and Miss B. O'Hearn, President of the Sodality. The society now embraces some 150 members.

Three of the deaths occurred in Chicago.

HYDRO POWER IN OTTAWA CHEAPEST IN PROVINCE

Cooking by Electricity Cheaper Than Cooking With Use of Gas

OTTAWA, Dec. 15.—The Ontario Hydro Electric Commission have reduced the prices of hydro-electric power to all of their city and town customers, and to none as much as the city of Ottawa. By the new schedule Ottawa will get all the power it needs for years to come at a price not exceeding $14 per h.p., for the minimum quantity, and ranging down to $11 per horse power for a larger amount. This should tell strongly for the benefit of Ottawa, both for residential purposes and as regards industry. If Ottawa takes 1,800 horse power it will be obtained as low as $11, and so graded up to $14 for the minimum quantity taken. This contract is for 33 years with the proviso that the city, by giving two years' notice, may terminate the agreement at any time.

Lowest Lighting Rates

Concurrently with the reduction in the cost of power, Ottawa has reduced its lighting rates to the lowest of any city in Canada. The rates for the coming years are as follows: A house rate of 4 c p, 100 square feet house area, and 2 c.p., 100 sq. less 10 per cent. metre rate. This reduces them etre rate from 3 cents less 10 per cent per K. W., or 2.7 cents, to 2 cents, less 10 per cent. 30 days, is 1.8 per K. W. With a metre rate now in Ottawa of 1.8 cents per K.W. hour, electricity will be considerably cheaper than gas for cooking purposes.

A movement, and a very strong one, to build a municipal gas plant, which would furnish cheap gas to the citizens, has now, with the lower rates for electricity, been abandoned. Electricity in Ottawa at 1.8 cents per K. W. will be the cheapest cooking agency in the world. No gas can compete with it at this price. The Ottawa Municipal Electric having abandoned the gas proposition, are now preparing to open up a store in the city with a full es. stock of electrical cooking appliances. These appliances, stoves, etc., will be sold to consumers at a small cash payment monthly instalments, at cost, to encourage, of course, the use of electricity for cooking purposes.

The writer of these notes takes some credit for this by his putting the matter plain before the city officers and consumers, both.

The other Ontario cities, which have been gettink power from the Ontario Hydro Electric Commission, and which obtained reductions in rates of power, on: Hamilton, $15 to $15 per h.p.; London, $23 to $24; Guelph, $21 to $22; St. Thomas, $28 to $29; Port Credit $28 to $31 etc. The figures should be put the other way, for example, Hamilton should be put $16 to $15, because $16 is the maximum price and $15 is made possible by taking the maximum amount of power for the minimum price, $15.

Ottawa, in the same way, gets its power at $14 and $11. By taking the minimum quality, but $11 of the maximum quality of 18,000 to 20,000 horse power is taken. It will be seen that Ottawa has obtained its power cheaper than any other city in the province, hence is able to gain its citizens electricity at the cheaper rate ofa ay city in the province, namely, 1.8 cents metre rate.

ESTIMATES FOR THE HYDRO ARE NOT EXCEEDED

Except in Case Where Copper Wire Has Advanced in Price.

(Brantford Courier)

"The estimated price of the different requirements for the Hydro-Electric System have not exceeded the estimates save in only one instance, the price of copper wire having gone up one and one-half cents per pound since the estimates were made in 1910," stated Ald. McFarland, chairman of the Fire and Light Committee of the City Council, in an interview yesterday afternoon with The Courier.

Continuing Mr. McFarland stated that the number of new streets added since the fall of 1910 amounted to approximately three and a half miles. In the estimates no allowance was made for this expansion. The estimates had been figured on a basis of a service for street and domestic lighting only. In order to provide for power customers a larger transformer capacity had to be installed, which while it added to the cost and exceeded the estimates, it was much better to have this portion of the work done now than at a later date.

A full statement of work done, monies expended, and work yet to be done; also the report of extensions to outlying districts will be given by Engineer Ireland at the first meeting of the new commission. The amount expended beyond the estimates stated Mr. McFarland, will not run into very much money as money was saved on several items. The largest of these was the erection and purchase of the power house. The estimates had allowed for the expenditure of $7,500 on this portion of the work.

When asked as to the cost to the consumer, Ald. McFarland said: "That will come out in the engineer's report. The cost to the consumer will be exceedingly cut down and there will be a good service."

WOMEN CONSTITUTIONAL SOLDIERS NEAR JUAREZ

Women in the Mexican constitutionalists' army are not an uncommon thing. They stand the hardship of marches as well as men, and in the thick of battle they do not flinch. They load and fire their rifles like veterans. After the engagements are over these women take care of the wounded and are greatly appreciated by the soldiers of the sterner sex.

SHOP EARLY

Go and shop early and let them see
A little fun, too, in the Christmas glee.
Go and shop early that they may rest
With more of the spirit of joy in the breast,
Go and shop early that they who toil
May throw off the burden and grind and moil,
And loved in the kindling kindness of men,
Really be glad it is Christmas again.

Go and shop early and help them to feel
Christmas in spirit is Christmas for real,
Go and shop early and help them to know
A share of it laughter and music and glow.
Go and shop early that worn hands and feet,
May share in the pleasures that make it so sweet
With holiday revel and fun and delight,
To know you shop early and leave them that night.

Go and shop early that those who must serve
May smile though they labor, not falter and swerve,
Go and shop early that all the day long
The hearts of the toilers may echo your song,
And catch your contagion of cheer and of love,
And feel some attachment to bright things above,
The old sordid selfishness so often shown,
By small thought for their joy and much for your own.

POLICE OFFICERS MADE AN ARREST

But They Failed to Get the Right Man.

It was an incident calculated to arouse suspicion but the police officers made a mistake. They were scouting in the vicinity of Scott's cold storage plant in East City last night, when thei prospective victims hove in sight. They used the track as a thoroughfare and they looked guilty enough.

One carried what looked like a crate of eggs and at the signal, both officers pounced out from their hiding place. Both was arrested in the name of the law. But explanations were quickly made. The more suspicious looking one of the crooks was that well known poultryman, Harry Lush. He and his companion were on their way to the home of another poultryman with the object of returning one of his birds that had been taken to the Guelph show by Mr. Lush.

He was allowed to proceed.

GOVERNMENT WINS BOTH BY-ELECTIONS

A. E. Hanna is Returned in South Lanark With a Majority Over the Independent Candidate of 135, While Alex. Morrison in Macdonald, Man., Defeats Liberal--- Hawkes Made Poor Showing

PERTH, Dec. 15—Dr. A. E. Hanna, of Perth, was elected Saturday to represent the riding of South Lanark in the Dominion House of Commons. The fight was a three-cornered one, Col. J. M. Balderson, Perth, an Independent Conservative, and Arthur Hawkes, of Toronto, "Canada First," entering the contest with the nominee of the Conservative Association. Dr. Hanna ran 135 votes ahead of Col. Balderson. Mr. Hawkes only received 70 votes in the whole riding and loses his deposit.

The vote by townships stood:

	Hanna	Balderson	Hawkes
Bathurst	239	206	7
Beckwith	114	146	12
North Burgess	91	56	5
Drummond	213	204	8
North Elmsley ...	118	74	4
Montagu	190	219	1
Perth	366	242	9
South Sherbrooke .	78	33	5
Smith's Falls	504	542	29
Totals	1907	1772	70

The total vote polled Saturday was 3,749 out of a possible 5,035, which is considerably larger than at the last general election, when it was 3,300, the Liberal candidate at that time losing his deposit.

The riding has been Conservative since Confederation, Hon. John Haggart representing it from 1878 until the time of his death, early in the summer of this year. Hon. Alex. Morris represented it from 1867 until his death in 1872.

The split in the Conservative party in this election occurred when Col. Balderson alleged he had not been given a square deal by the party convention and annouced his candidature. Mr. Hawkes' coming into the riding was a surprise, as he was unknown, which probably accounts for his small vote.

Morrison Is Elected.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 15.—Alexander Morrison (Con.) was re-elected in Macdonald on Saturday by a majority of 200 or more in excess of that by which he was returned a year ago. With two polls to hear from Mr. Morrison has a lead of 913 over Dr. A. W. Myles, the Liberal candidate.

In the previous bye-election R. L. Richardson, proprietor of The Winnipeg Free Press, ran as an independent Liberal, and was defeated by 700.

A heavier vote was polled than at the previous election, when Mr. Morrison was elected and later unseated on petitions. Several polls in the Winnipeg suburbs ran up the increased majority, showing an advance of 186 over the former majority they gave the Conservative candidate.

Walter Burnside was arrested in St. James, charged with perjury. Aside from this incident the election was quiet.

GIFT FOR MISS NELLIE SIMMONS

Friends at C. G. E. Presented Amethyst Cross and Address

Shortly before noon on Saturday the employees of the Blue Print Department of the Canadian General Electric Company, gathered about Miss Nellie Simons and presented her with an amethyst cross and address. It was the occasion of losing one of their most popular fellow employees for Miss Simons on Saturday severed her connection with the company.

Miss Simons made a very fitting reply, thanking her friends not only for the beautiful cross, but also for their friendship which was always so prominent.

THE LATE MR. CREIGHTON

The remains of the late Rev. Mr. Creighton who passed away in Port Hope on Saturday were brought to this city via G. T. R., 12:10, today, noon, and removed to Belleghem's Undertaking Parlors. They were taken to the C. P. R. depot at 4:25 this afternoon and forwarded to Burketon Junction.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Curvin of Campbellford passed away at Nicholl's Hospital yesterday. The funeral took place this afternoon, with interment at the Little Lake Cemetery.

OPENING OF THE FREIGHT SHEDS

Grand Orchestra to Supply Music for Dancing.

By all appearances the ball to be held in the new C.P.R. freight sheds on Wednesday evening is going to be a grand success. The large floor, the dimensions of which is 150 by 50 feet, is two inch matched hardwood, and when waxed it is doubtful if it's superior could be found in the city. The building will be fittingly decorated and heated, the latter receiving special attention.

The offices will be reserved for a card room, ladies dressing room and gents' cloak room. There will be a lady in charge of the ladies' dressing room, which will also be fitted with a large mirror. In all probability there will be a short program rendered in the main office as a move towards entertaining those who do not dance.

The music will be supplied by the Grand Opera House Orchestra, which will be stationed on an elevated platform mid-way between the ends of the hall and to the side. T. Hooper wil serve refreshments.

CHARGE IS DISMISSED

The charge against D. N. King of Norwood, of sellingl iquor in his hotel, was dismissed without costs by Magistrate Edminson, this afternoon.

PETERBOROUGH, MONDAY, DEC. 15, 1913.

THE TWO LANARKS.

The South Lanark election has turned out pretty much as expected, and everyone concerned are no doubt satisfied with the result; even Mr. Hawkes himself, for, with all his bombast and show of confidence, he never really believed he had what is vulgarly called "a dog's sight." Mr. Hawkes' object was not to win South Lanark but to get himself talked about in the country. He is perhaps the most blatant egotist in Canadian politics, if he can be said to be in politics at all.

The election had no political significance, Dr. Hanna's victory is chiefly a personal one, it is a triumph for the party organization and closes what has been a long drawn-out party feud, which was a very discreditable business.

By a strange co-incidence another election was in progress in South Lanarkshire in Scotland, and the news of the result was published on the same day. This also was a three-cornered fight, the Labor member being the third candidate. The effect of this being, as is usual at all such, to split the Liberal vote and let the Conservative in. It is claimed by the Conservatives that this is a blow to Home Rule, while the Liberals claim it to be an endorsement of their policy. It is questionable whether Home Rule entered into consideration at all, as the Scotch people never were enthusiastic over the sorrows of Ireland, nor could ever understand what they wanted with a Parliament in Dublin. The Scotchman has no desire for a Parliament in Edinburgh, London is good enough for him. He can go there and get all he wants—including some of the best positions in the state and in journalism or anywhere he sets his mind upon.

THE NAVY QUESTION NEXT SESSION.

There is some speculation as to what are the Government's intentions in regard to the naval question for the next session. There is no doubt that the Cabinet has not dropped the matter, that it has often been discussed in private and plans drawn up for future action. These are all kept strictly secret and we may be sure that the Premier has a surprise in store for the ruthless obstructionists of Ottawa.

There is a strong feeling that it would be useless to re-introduce the Naval Aid Bill and that it would only mean a repetition of the turbulent scenes of last session and emphasize before the world the humiliating position in which Canada has been placed by the action of the Liberals. But others feel that, since the Senate's blunder, a process of education has been going on throughout the country and that most people, including many Liberals, recognize that the Opposition went too far and a repetition of the political Hooliganism of last session would scarcely be possible.

The reports from Ottawa state that the Navy question in some form will be before Parliament this session. This can be taken for granted. In the meantime the permanent policy is being worked out and will be ready to submit to the people at the next election, as promised by Mr. Borden.

THE TRENT VALLEY DISTRICT.

ON FRIDAY EVENING last the Trent Valley Water Conservation Association was formed in Peterborough, and those who are acquainted with the problem of utilizing the abundance of water which flows through that district will admit that this association is not formed a moment too soon and that there is a great and important work ahead of it. The results of last Friday's meeting may be far-reaching and beyond estimating both to the industrial and social life of the Trent Valley District.

There was a time when the Trent Valley was one of the busiest regions of Canada. In the days of men like Senator Billa Flint the country was full of life and prosperity and promised great things for the future. But those were the days of lumbering, every season the lumber-Jack hacked his way northward, leaving in his wake nothing but a waste of immovable pine-stumps. Upon this land there settled farmers, some of them were lumber-men and others came in from the States and a few Germans were amongst them. These people worked hard clearing the underbrush and to-day many of them have good farms. But many of them have very poor farms and out of three-hundred acres it is often enough almost impossible to make ends meet. The geological formation of the district is largely granite. There is a great deal of mineral; gold, copper, iron, mundic, arsenic, asbestos, etc., being in large quantities in some places. Many years ago, when everyone was after gold, this district was boomed as a new Elderado, one village is still known by that name. But as the gold was only in small quantities, or where is was in large quantities, it was not properly dealt with, the result was that the country got a bad name and was gibbeted like the proverbial dog.

The lumbering is now practically over and the rivers are seldom used for log-rolling, except in a few instances. The water is therefore running to waste, which could be utilized for a multitude of purposes. For one thing, practically the whole of the Trent Valley district could be supplied with electric light and power for farm and mill work. If mining was developed there would be sufficient "white coal" to run them and even manufacture the mineral.

This cannot be done without the conservation of the water in the upper lakes. To be satisfactory, the flow of the water must be regulated, in order to get an even supply throughout the year. This is not a matter that can be taken up by the people of the Trent Valley district, and it is difficult to get private money interested in it. The object of the Conservation Association is to urge the Government to either take up the work or subsidise some company that would do so. Peterborough is directly concerned in the project, but if it is carried through it will be to the benefit of the whole of eastern Ontario.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

SEVENTY-TWO BODIES have been, up-to-date, recovered from the Canadian shore of Lake Huron, as the result of the great disasters. These represent at least seventy-two sad hearts this Christmas-tide. What have we done to cheer them?

JOHN D. KNAPP, an old sexton at Ingersoll, dropped dead the other day while in the act of marking out the place where a grave was to be dug. He came from Dorsetshire, England, and celebrated his golden wedding in September last.

THE CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the Globe contains a message printed in facsimile of the handwriting of the editor, who, by the way, is a bad writer, and would lose ten marks in an examination, it is signed J.A.M. Like all the jam doled out by that doctor, there is a pill in it.

GREAT BRITAIN can learn some things from Canada. It has just decided to do without its newspapers on Christmas day. One million newspaper workers are to have a real Christmas holiday for the first time. Hitherto an English editor was always afraid to face a plum-pudding, now he can dare it to do its worst.

A YOUNG ENGLISH POET, Rupert Brooke, who recently toured the United States and Canada, has been recording his impressions. He says some peculiar things about Toronto. He calls it a "cleanshaven, pink-faced city." There are certainly a lot of bare-faced men in Toronto, but then they are not unblushing and this accounts for their pink complexion.

SALOME, who was billed to dance and sing before Herod at the Grand Opera House this evening with the head of the John the Baptist on a charger, has come to a sad end at Hamilton, the company having closed down through lack of public support. The advance manager, who visited The Review Office a few days ago, when asked as to the nature of Salome's costume, assured us that there was "nothing in it." That was just what we thought. A little more material in the costume of that dancing lady might have saved her from getting her death of cold.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Armed or Unarmed.

Ulster can resist Home Rule just as effectively unarmed as armed, if matters reach this crisis. In the end it will be the justice of her cause, not the strength of her opposition, that will decide the issue.

Hunger at Christmas.

Ottawa Free Press.

Miss Sylvia Pankhurst is again in custody and the police this time were not outwitted. It is well to remember the old proverb that those laugh best who laugh last. The police may be mistaken sometimes, but they have a knack of staying on the job that wins out in the end. There will probably be another hunger strike, which is awkward in the Christmas season. How would it be to tempt the obdurate with some Christmas dainties? If they would resist they would deserve release.

Next For Mowing.

Ottawa Journal.

To the man accustomed to shave himself daily, the announcement that a miniature mowing machine, for shaving, run by electric power, will soon be put on the market by a Chicago firm will be received with mingled feelings. The machine consists of a safety razor connected to a motor by means of a flexible shaft, the blade actuated in such a way as to cut the beard by impact or blows. The blades, therefore, do not need to be so sharp as in hand-cutting. No soap is necessary, wetting of the skin being sufficient, and a clean shave can be accomplished, it is declared, in a short time. The after-effects are described as being those following a mild massage. A plug is provided for attaching the razor to any lamp-socket.

Ashamed to Holiday.

Calgary Daily Herald.

Colonel Denison, of Toronto, is a very ardent imperialist, and when he announced last summer that he would not holiday in England because of the humiliation he felt over the defeat of the Borden emergency naval bill many Canadians thought that he took the situation a little too personally. Many months have passed since the defeat of the Borden bill, and we venture the opinion that a great many Canadians have come around to the colonel's viewpoint in the interval. Not a week goes by but news comes from the motherland telling of the taxes inflicted, of the sacrifices made by the people of the United Kingdom to preserve the naval supremacy of the Empire, to protect the overseas dominions and the trade and commerce of the Empire upon the high seas.

Opticians Note.

J. Lewis Williams.

All that we opticians want is to prevent ignorant and incompetent people from pretending to examine the eyesight and prescribe for people, as the eye is man's most delicate and valuable organ and should only be fitted by competent opticians, who have had sufficient study and practice and have followed the prescribed college courses and passed the necessary examinations and are capable of correcting the different errors of refraction.

If any one will take the trouble to call on any optician and ask for an eyesight examination (which is free) they will be readily convinced that the licensed optician is the only one who should have the right to make such examination and that we are rendering a great service to the public.

RESTORING THE MESOPOTAMIA

Was Once the Granary of the World.

THE GARDEN OF EDEN.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The first step in the work of restoring the prosperity of Mesopotamia, once the granary of the world, by means of irrigation, is described in a Constantinople despatch to the London Daily Mail. Sir William Wilcocks, who designed the works for the Turkish government, often asserted that the Garden of Eden once flourished in the district between Babylon and Bagdad.

The formal opening of the Euphrates barrage takes place on Friday. The barrage, which is at Hindia, about forty-seven miles north of Bagdad, is the first completed part of the extensive irrigation works undertaken by the Young Turk Government for the improvement of Mesopotamia. The work was started in February, 1911, by Sir John Jackson. The barrage consists of masonry piers with thirty-six openings fitted with sluices to hold the water to the desired level. There is also a navigation lock for barge traffic. Below the main barrage is a subsidiary one constructed with a lock of the same size. The water level can be raised to 16½ feet, enabling an extensive area of rich land to be irrigated. Upstream the ancient Hilla channel leading to Hilla and Babylon, has been cleared for a distance of fifty miles. This allows the utilization of the water of this area also.

Further works still remain to complete the scheme of converting the country into a second Egypt and restoring the ancient granary to the empire. Notable among the uncompleted works is the Habbania escape, which will allow the surplus floods to flow into an adjacent lake, thence to a large natural depression, thus avoiding the submersion of the area between the Euphrates and Bagdad.

Poincare May Visit U. S.

PARIS, Dec. 15.—President Raymond Poincare has talked unofficially with Jean Jules Jusserand, French ambassador to the United States, Byron T. Herrick, U. S. Ambassador to France, and others of the possibility of his paying a visit to the United States during his term of office.

The suggestion was first made to him privately by a friend who enquired whether the President's visits to other countries ought not to include one to the United States, pointing out that the relations between the two countries always had been so agreeable, and that the United States was the sole other republic among all the great powers.

Fire at Le Pas.

LE PAS, Man., Dec. 15.—Fire, driven by a strong northwest wind, which originated in the second storey of the Imperial Hotel, at five o'clock Saturday morning, destroyed a whole block of buildings on Fischer avenue, with property loss exceeding $70,000.

All the plate glass windows in the stores across the street were broken by the intense heat.

Guests of the Imperial Hotel had just sufficient time to vacate the premises in scant attire.

A SPLENDID HAZARD

By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

Here was the young man's opportunity. This was a likable old seadog, and he determined not to impose upon him another moment. Some men, for the sake of the adventure, would have left the truth to be found out later, to the disillusion of all concerned. The abrupt manner in which Miss Killigrew had abandoned him merited some revenge.

"Admiral, I'm afraid there has been a mistake, and before we go any further I'll be glad to explain. I'm not a private secretary and never have been one. I should be less familiar with the work than a Chinaman. I am a special writer for the magazines and have been at odd times a war correspondent." And then he went on to describe the little comedy of the statuettes, and it was not without some charm in the telling.

Plainly the admiral was nonplused. That girl, that minx, with her innocent eyes and placid face! He got up, and Fitzgerald awaited the explosion. His expectancy missed fire. The admiral exploded, but with laughter.

"I beg pardon, Mr. Fitzgerald, and I beg it again on my daughter's behalf.. What would you do in my place?"

"Show me the door at once and have done with it."

"I'm hanged if I do! You shall have a toddy for your pains, and, by cracky, Laura shall mix it." He pushed the butler's bell. "Tell Miss Laura that I wish to see her at once."

"Very well, sir."

She appeared shortly. If Fitzgerald admired her beauty he yet more admired her perfect poise and unconcern. Many another woman would have evinced some embarrassment. Not she.

"Laura, what's the meaning of this hoax?" the admiral demanded sternly. "Mr. Fitzgerald tells me that he had no idea you were hiring him as my secretary."

"I am sure he hadn't the slightest." The look she sent Fitzgerald was full of approval. "He hadn't any idea at all save that I asked him to come here at 8 this evening. And his confession proves that I haven't made any mistake."

"But what in thunder"—

"Father!"

"My dear, give me credit for resisting the desire to make the term stronger. Mr. Fitzgerald's joke, I take it, bothered no one. Yours has put him in a peculiar embarrassment. What does it mean? You went to the city to get me a first class secretary."

"Mr. Fitzgerald has the making of one, I believe."

"But on your word I sent a capable man away half an hour gone. He could speak half a dozen languages."

"Mr. Fitzgerald is, perhaps, as efficient."

Fitzgerald's wonder grew and grew.

"But he doesn't want to be a secretary. He doesn't know anything about the work. And I haven't got the time to teach him, even if he wanted the place."

"Father," began the girl, the fun leaving her eyes and her lips becoming grave, "I do not like the noises at night. I have not suggested the police, because robbery is not the motive."

"Laura, that's all tommyrot. This is an old house, and the wood always creaks with a change of temperature. But this doesn't seem to touch Mr. Fitzgerald."

The girl shrugged.

"Well, I'm glad I told that German chap not to leave till he heard again from me. I'll hire him. He looks like a man who wouldn't let noises worry him. You will find your noises are entirely those of imagination."

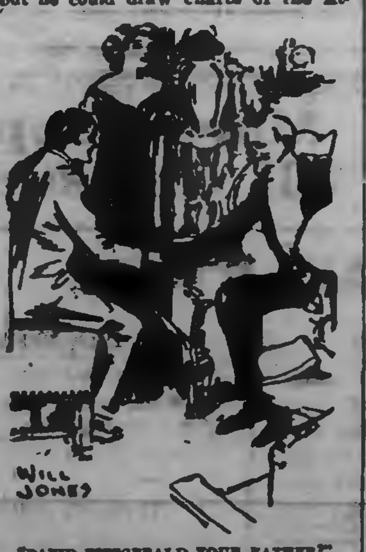
"Have it that way," she agreed patiently.

"But here's Mr. Fitzgerald still," said the admiral pointedly.

"Not long ago you said to me that if ever I saw the son of David Fitzgerald to bring him home. Till yesterday I never saw him; only then because Mrs. Coldfield pointed him out and wondered what he was doing with a tray of statuettes around his neck. As I could not invite him to come home with me, I did the next best thing. I invited him to call on me. I was told that he was fond of adventures, so I gave the invitation as much color as I could. Do I stand pardoned?"

"Indeed you do!" cried Fitzgerald. So this was the Killigrew his father had known?

"David Fitzgerald your father? That makes all the difference in the world." The admiral thrust out a hand. "Your father wasn't a good business man, nor was he in the navy, but he could draw charts of the Atlantic coast with his eyes shut. Laura, you get the whisky and sugar and hot water. You haven't brought me a secretary, but you have brought under my roof the son of an old friend."



"DAVID FITZGERALD YOUR FATHER?"

She laughed. It was rich and free toned laughter good for any man to hear. As she went to prepare the toddy music echoed through the hall.

"Sometimes I wake up in the morning with a new gray hair," sighed the admiral. "What would you do with a girl like that?"

"I'd hang on to her as long as I could." earnestly.

"I shall," grimly. "Your father and I were old friends. There wasn't a yacht on these waters that could show him her heels, not even my own. You don't mean to tell me you're no yachtsman! Why, it ought to be in the blood."

"Oh, I can handle small craft, but I don't know much about the engine room. What time does the next train return to New York?"

"For you there'll be no train under a week. You're going to stay here, since you've been the victim of a hoax."

"Disabuse your mind there, sir. I don't know when I've enjoyed anything so thoroughly."

"But you'll stay? Oh, yes!" as Fitzgerald shook his head. "The secretary can do the work here while you and I can take care of the rats in the hold. Laura's just imagining things, but we'll humor her. If there's any trouble with the chimney, why, we'll get a bricklayer and pull it down."

"Miss Killigrew may have some real cause for alarm. I saw a man, or, rather, I heard him, running as I came up the road from the gates. I called to him, but he did not answer."

"Is that so? Wasn't the porter at the gates when you came in?"

"No. The footpath was free."

"This begins to look serious. If the porter isn't there the gate bell rings. I can open it myself by wire. I never bother about it at night unless I am expecting some one. But in the daytime I can see from here whether or not I wish to open the gate. A man running in the park, eh? Little good it will do him. The house is a network of burglar alarms."

"Wires can be cut and quickly repaired."

"But this is no house to rob. All my valuables, excepting these books, are in New York. The average burglar isn't of a literary turn of mind. Still, if Laura has really heard something, all the more reason why you should make us a visit. Wait a moment. I've an idea." The admiral set the burglar alarm and tried it. The expression on his face was blank. "Am I getting deafer?"

"No bell rang," said Fitzgerald quickly.

"By cracky, if Laura is right! But not a word to her, mind. When she goes upstairs we'll take a trip into the cellar and have a look at the main wire. You've got to stay; that's all there is about it. This is serious. I hadn't tested the wires in a week."

"Perhaps it's only a fuse."

"We can soon find out about that. Sh! Not a word to her!"

She entered with a tray and two steaming toddies, as graceful a being as Hebe before she spilled the precious drop. The two men could not keep their eyes off her, the one with loving possession, the other with admiration not wholly free from unrest. The daring manner in which she had lured him here would never be forgetable. And she had known him at the start? And that merry Mrs. Coldfield in the plot!

"I hope this will cheer you, father."

"It always does," replied the admiral as he took the second glass. "I have asked Mr. Fitzgerald to spend a week with us."

"Thank you, father. It was thoughtful of you. If you had not asked him the pleasure of doing so would have been mine. Mrs. Coldfield pointed you out to me as a most ungrateful fellow, because you never called on your father's or mother's friends any more, but preferred to gallivant around the world. You will stay? We are very unconventional here."

"Thanks, very much; I shall be very happy to stay. My handbag, however, is at Swan's hotel, and there's very little in it."

"A trifling matter to send to New York for what you need," said the admiral, mightily pleased to have a man to talk to who was not paid to reply. "I'll have William bring the cart round and take you down."

"No, no; I had much rather walk. I'll turn up some time in the morning—say luncheon, if that will be agreeable to you."

"As you please. Only I should like to save you an unpleasant walk in the dark."

"I don't mind. A dark street in a country village this side of the Atlantic holds little or no danger."

"I offered to build a first class lighting plant if the town would agree to pay the running expenses, but the council threw it over. They want me to build a library. Not much! Hold on," as Fitzgerald was rising. "You are not going right away. I shan't permit that. Just a little visit first."

Fitzgerald resumed his chair.

"Have a cigar. Laura is used to it."

"But does Miss Killigrew like it?" laughing.

"Cigars and pipes and cigarettes," she returned. "I am really fond of the aroma. I have tried to acquire the cigarette habit, but I have yet to learn what satisfaction you men get out of it."

Conversation veered in various directions and finally rested upon the subject of piracy, and here the admiral proved himself a rare scholar. By some peculiar inadvertency as he was in the middle of one of his own adventures his finger touched the burglar alarm. Clang! Brrrr! From top to bottom of the house came the shock of differently voiced bells. The two men gaped at each other dumfounded. But the girl laughed merrily.

"You touched the alarm, father."

"I rather believe I did. And a few minutes before you came in with the toddies I tried it, and it didn't work."

It took some time to quiet the servants, and when that was done Fitzgerald determined to go down to the village.

"Good night, Mr. Fitzgerald," said the girl. "Better beware. This house is haunted."

"We'll see if we can't lay that ghost, as they say," he responded.

The admiral came to the door. "What do you make of it?" he whispered.

"You possibly did not press the button squarely the first time." And that was Fitzgerald's genuine belief.

"By the way, will you take a note for me to Swan's? It will not take me a moment to scribble it."

"Certainly."

Finally the young man found himself in the park heading quickly toward the gates. He searched the night keenly, but this time he neither heard nor saw any one. But the most surprising turn was yet to come.

In the office of Swan's hotel the landlord sat snoozing peacefully behind the desk. There was only one customer. He was a gray haired, ruddy visaged old salt in white duck—at this time of year!—and a blue sack coat dotted with shining brass buttons, the whole five foot four topped by a gold braided officer's cap. He was drinking what is jocularly called a "schooner" of beer, and finishing this he lurched from the room with a rolling, hiccoughing gait, due entirely to a wooden peg which extended from his right knee down to a highly polished brass ferrule.

Fitzgerald awakened the landlord and gave him the admiral's note.

"You will be sure and give this to the gentleman in the morning?"

"Certainly, sir. Mr. Karl Breitmann," reading the superscription aloud. "Yes, sir; first thing in the morning."

To be continued.

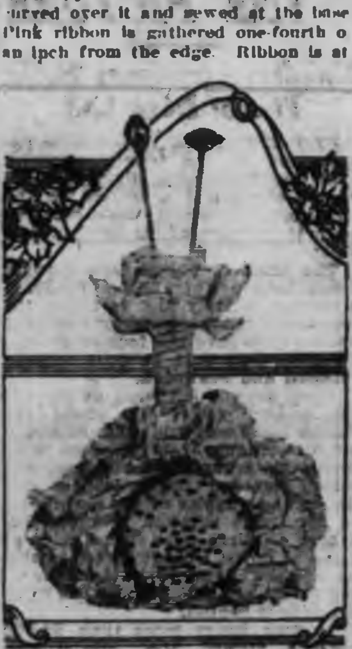
Daily Christmas Hint

This Poppy Pincushion Is Extremely New and Smart

This pincushion is made over a wooden hat stand. These wooden forms are purchased at any fancy work store. The huge flower forms are good imitations of large poppies. The top is a smaller poppy.

The flowers at the base are three in number. Around a padded satin covered center are the petals. The center is made by a ball of cotton, the silk turned over it and sewed at the base. Pink ribbon is gathered one-fourth of an inch from the edge. Ribbon is attached to the base of the padded center, and the ribbon is wound about in three layers. This gives the petal effect.



FANCY FLOWER PINCUSHION

The three forms are placed around the base after the stem is wrapped by the ribbon from base to top. A long piece of ribbon is shirred, as in the flower forms, and wound around itself as the swirled roses are made, the lower edge drawn and sewed fast to the top. Put pins with black, white and colored tops in the centers of each flower at the base and you will have finished as pretty a pincushion as you will see.

These floral pincushions may be made to represent other flowers than poppies, of course. It is a good idea to scent them with sachet powder. The scent should, if possible, be suited to the flowers, a rose cushion being perfumed with rose powder, etc. If you happen to know what is the favorite flower of the one for whom the gift is intended use it in designing the pincushion. A gift of this sort will be appreciated and kept long after the useless trifles so often got up in the name of fancy work are discarded and forgotten.

Of Course He Did.

3. The foregoing are the only occasions when orders, miniature decorations and medals will be worn with evening dress.

Exposed

By THOMAS R. DEANE

One morning in August a party of men started from Chamonix to climb Mont Blanc. There were Joseph Withers, a young lawyer from Philadelphia; Edward Swift, a recent graduate of a New England university, and Roswell Baker, a big, elegant looking fellow, who was the impersonation of manly strength.

About noon Baker and one of the guides came into the hotel, the guide looking very somber and Baker much agitated. They reported that at the time the snow squall came up they were ascending a razor shaped rock, the edge of which was but from one to two feet wide. The first man in the rope line was Koenig, the guide who returned. The second was Baker, then Withers, Swift and the other guide, Schufelt. Withers slipped and went down on one side of the declivity, dragging the man before him and the one behind him on one side of the edge, while the shock threw Baker and Koenig down on the opposite side. Baker said that the rope broke and those in his rear had gone down, he knew not where, because it was snowing so hard he could not see a dozen feet below him.

All listened to the recital of the accident with blanched faces. The landlord, Carl Becker, stepped forward, the only person present who seemed to grasp the situation. Seizing the rope that was in the hands of the guide, he looked at its end, threw it down and hurried away to make up a rescue party. When half a dozen volunteers had been collected they started up the mountain, piloted by Koenig. Baker declared that in falling he had hurt his side and feared that he would not be able to make the distance.

Some surprise was manifested that one who had appeared to be the Ajax of the party, who had seen his commander go down into a gulf, should be willing to remain behind when others were going to the rescue. As soon as the rescuers had gone Baker went to his room, remained there an hour, then left the hotel. He soon returned, stating that he had received a telegram to go immediately to Paris, where his mother was lying at the point of death. Within half an hour he had left Chamonix.

Meanwhile the rescue party, guided by Koenig, ascended to the place of the accident, arriving there about 4 o'clock in the afternoon. The sky was clear, and there was no difficulty in looking down into a crevasse into which the men they sought must have fallen. But it was not a straight descent, and the opening was narrow, so they could not tell how deep it was. The landlord of the hotel volunteered to be lowered for an exploration. A rope was tied around him under the arms, he was given an alpenstock for a fender and was let down slowly into the crevasse.

He had not descended more than forty feet before he heard a faint halloo. On being lowered another twenty feet he reached the snow, sinking into it to his knees. He was within three or four yards of Swift, whose head was protruding from the snow on which he had fallen. Becker got a second rope he had brought down with him under Swift's shoulders, gave a signal, and Swift was drawn up.

Not a dozen feet away the landlord found Withers. He was lying unconscious with his head and one leg above the snow. The rescuer had a flask of brandy with him and poured a quantity down Withers' throat. He opened his eyes. Becker called for the rope to be lowered, and Withers was pulled up. There only remained the guide, who had sufficient strength in him to fix the rope to his own shoulders, and he and Becker were brought to the surface.

The landlord had no sooner finished his work than he took up the end of the rope that was dangling from Withers' waist and, looking at it, muttered an oath.

"Cut!" he said.

"Withers, who was by this time somewhat restored, added: "I saw him cut it. He was on the edge of the rock, and we three, being heavier than Koenig on the other side, were overbalancing him, and Baker was being dragged over. To save himself he cut the rope."

"And frayed the end to make it appear that it had broken," added Becker.

Koenig declared that he had not seen Baker cut the rope. Indeed, this from their relative positions would have been impossible. He admitted to have seen him fray the end of the rope, but he had not revealed this because after the weight had been taken from the opposite side he would have gone down several hundred feet had not Baker given him a hand and helped him up on the edge.

When the rescue party returned to the hotel and found that Baker was missing so great was the indignation that it was proposed that they go after him and bring him back. But Baker was doubtless by this time in Geneva and would have left there before they could reach him.

Several years after this Withers met Baker strutting, with a chrysanthemum in his buttonhole, down Pennsylvania avenue, swinging a silver headed cane. Withers fixed his glance on the man in a cold stare. Baker paled. There was no word spoken, but Withers felt that he had avenged the intended sacrifice.

Nothing ever pleases his neighbors more than to see a man get what he deserves.

REBELS ARE DEFEATED WITH 800 MEN SLAIN

Fierce Battle Ends in Repulse of Constitutionalist Forces, Who Withdraw Taking Locomotives and Cars From Railway Yards---Relief of City is Only Temporary and a Stronger Force is Expected.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 15.—The rebels have failed in their attack on Tampico and have withdrawn some distance from the city.

Unofficial messages reaching here yesterday fully corroborate the War Office report of the rebel defeat Saturday as a result of a heavy and sustained bombardment by two federal gunboats and federal field artillery. They do not, however, bear out the idea of a rout.

Holding possession of the railroad yards throughout the battle, the rebels, when they were driven off, remained sufficiently cool in the face of the furious fire, to take away with them every locomotive and most of the rolling stock.

According to the federal report eight hundred rebels were killed before they could get out of range, and this would mean many other hundreds wounded and probably left behind.

It is regarded here as probable that the relief of Tampico is only temporary, and that before many days the rebels will resume the attack in greater numbers, although the three days' battle has materially cut down their supply of ammunition. This may delay operations for a time.

Reports reaching here do not indicate that the property loss as a result of the fighting has been large.

Shrapnel from the rebel guns burst over the outskirts of the town and stray shots killed and wounded civilians. Bodies could be seen hanging from telegraph poles. The situation became so dangerous to non-combatants that U. S. Rear Admiral Fletcher decided to send the foreign refugees to the battleship lying off La Barra, five miles from the fighting zone.

CRETE TAKEN BY THE GREEKS

Imposing Ceremony Attends the Formal Annexation.

CANEA, Crete, Dec. 15.—The formal annexation of the Island of Crete to Greece was carried out yesterday with imposing ceremonies. King Constantine personally ran up the Hellenic flag over the fort. People flocked to the capital from all parts of the island and from Greece and tumultuously greeted the King, the Crown Prince, Premier Venizelos and the other Ministers.

A Te Deum in the cathedral was attended by the foreign consuls, and subsequently the King attended another thanksgiving service in the synagogue.

The Island of Crete was finally evacuated on Feb. 15 last by the protecting powers—Great Britain, Russia, France and Italy—and the Greek flag was hoisted.

Although the United States is the richest country in the world in deposits of peat, none of several peat fuel plants that have been established has gone beyond the experimental stage.

IMPROVEMENTS FOR THE HARBOR

Goderich Jury Brings in Finding on Lake Tragedy.

GODERICH, Ont., Dec. 15. — A comprehensive finding was returned on Saturday afternoon by the coroner's jury investigating the death of Thomas Stone and other seamen whose bodies came ashore after the great storm of Nov. 9. The document lays stress upon the fact that information in the possession of the meteorological office at Toronto on the night of Nov. 8, indicating the approaching of a storm of unusual velocity, was not sent out as a warning to mariners, and continues: "Considering the appalling loss of life and property on that occasion, and that Goderich is nominally a harbor of refuge, and the only available harbor as such on the east side of the lake, to which vessels can have recourse in stress of weather, and that if completed and equipped as a harbor of refuge—as all such harbors are in American ports—some of the said vessels might have found safety in it. Considering the vast amount of lake traffic along this part of Lake Huron, and that Goderich is the second largest grain-receiving port on the upper lakes, and considering all the circumstances appearing before us, we strongly recommend the Government should, without delay, and at any cost, complete and equip Goderich as a real harbor of refuge, first, by fully completing the breakwall now begun; second, by installing up-to-date lights and a fog signal at the entrance of the breakwall; third, by dredging to the necessary depth the outside basin formed by the breakwall so that ships may have some sea room after the stress of entering, to manoeuvre and steady themselves before trying to enter the piers."

The verdict further declares that wireless, both on vessels and on land, would have saved many ships.

"We would recommend," it continues, "that the Government be asked to issue a commission of enquiry to include the above matters, also the questions of construction, power, equipment, inspection, loading, manning and life-saving appliances of lake freighters."

Desperado Cornered in Mine, Talks With Friend.

BINGHAM, Utah, Dec. 15.—Stimulus was given to the man hunt in the Utah-Apex mine for Ralph Lopes by a story told to the sheriffs early Saturday by Sam Rogers, a mine shift boss, who said he had seen and talked with the desperado Saturday and the day before. The work of searching sections and then bulkheading them off from the remainder of the mine was continued.

The sheriffs accepted the statements of Rogers as authentic. Rogers said he had agreed to meet Lopes again to-day. He said the fugitive had declared he would die fighting.

"I know they have me cornered in this mine," Lopes is quoted by Rogers as telling him Thursday. "This is my grave. I've made up my mind to that I am not going to commit suicide. I am going to wait here for the end and I shall fight whenever I have to."

Could Jail Others, He Says.

CALGARY, Alta., Dec. 15.—In his plea for a new trial for Harry Minchen, former alderman, and now serving a five-year sentence for embezzlement of $5,000 from the city, R. B. Bennett made the startling statement before court Saturday that he could pick out two other men whom he could place in the box and convict on the same evidence.

Government Repeats Instructions Regarding Christmas Seals.

OTTAWA, Dec. 15.—Another bulletin has been issued by the Postoffice Department advising the public that "Christmas or 'charity' stamps must not be placed on the face of letters or other mail matter, as postmasters are under strict instructions to send all letters having Christmas stamps or any other stamps than postage stamps on the face to the Dead Letter Office for return to the senders. The postoffice has no option in this, as other countries refuse to receive letters with stamps on the face other than postage stamps, and the first duty of the postoffice is to the man who sends the letters and pays postage thereon, and anything that is likely to lead to confusion or delay must, as a matter of good faith, be prohibited."

Burnt on Eve of Dedication.

TORONTO, Dec. 15.—Sixteen thousand five hundred dollars' damage was done to the newly erected Simpson avenue Methodist Sunday school building, at the southeast corner of Simpson avenue and Howland road, when a disastrous fire broke out at two o'clock yesterday morning. The conflagration is alleged to have originated from defective wiring, which caused a short circuit. Yesterday was to have been the occasion of dedication services.

Roller Towel Goes.

WELLAND, Dec. 15.—A death sentence has been passed on the common roller towel so far as its existence in the Welland public schools is concerned. At the meeting of the board Mr. McPherson, one of the members, charged that the offender was responsible for the spread of disease among children, for all were not so natural that they habitually shunned soap and water.

POLICE CONSTABLES MAKE CAPTURE BY CLEVER RUSE

Freight Agent Locks Them in Car With Stolen Horse and Cutter and the Rest Was Easy.

PERTH, Dec. 15.—William Wilson of Lavant and Joe Hart of Brockville, who were arrested in Ottawa by Chief Griffith of this town and Chief Phillips of Smith's Falls on a charge of steading a team of horses and a buggy from D. B. Lloyd of Gananoque, were committed by the magistrate in Gananoque Saturday to stand trial at Brockville.

The prisoners, according to the evidence, rented a team last Tuesday to drive to Seeley's Bay. At the Narrows Locks they exchanged the buggy for a cutter and $8. On Wednesday they tried to sell the horses in Burgess township and stopped in town over night. Having traded one horse off for another, they exchanged two for one with a farmer in Elmsley township. Chief Griffith heard about them and followed them to Smith's Falls, where he learned that the prisoners had tried to sell the outfit. Chief Phillips of Smith's Falls was also working on the case.

The two chiefs learned that the prisoners were shipping a horse and cutter by freight to Ottawa, and had gone ahead by express. The chiefs got the Smith's Falls freight agent to seal them in the car with the stolen horse and cutter and captured the prisoners at Ottawa when the latter claimed the property, after having paid freight charges. It took a day or so for each of the lawful claimants to get his own property back again.

THRONGS SEE THE PICTURE

Disorders Accompany Public View of Mona Lisa

FLORENCE, Dec. 15.—A close examination of the painting "Mona Lisa" has disclosed a slight abrasion on the cheek and a scratch on the left shoulder, which were received while the picture was in the hands of Vicenzo Perugia.

The chief of police says Perugia firmly believes that he has rendered a service to Italy and is under the impression that his imprisonment was necessary to save the face of the authorities, and that he soon will be released and rewarded.

Great crowds gathered at the Uffizi gallery yesterday, where the "Mona Lisa" was exhibited. Although strong cordons of carabineers were drawn up around the building, and others guarded the entrances and halls, the struggles of the multitudes to get inside resulted in great disorder. Soldiers were thrust aside or knocked down, windows were smashed, and the people swept through, being forced out the exist by the surging masses behind.

In four hours more than 30,000 persons viewed the masterpiece. When order was partially restored, 125 visitors on the average were admitted every minute.

"I did not take the painting through a desire for gain," said Perugia, who stole the painting, "but wished to accomplish a good and holy work by returning to my country one of the many treasures stolen from it."

The antiquary Geri, will claim the rewards offered by the French Government and the Paris newspapers for the recovery of the picture.

German Parliament Adjourns.

BERLIN, Dec. 15. — Recess was taken in the German Imperial Parliament until Jan. 13. In the confusion attending the suspension of the sitting, Speaker Kaepoff declared that the bill asking for an appropriation of $500,000 to be used in arranging for German representation at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco, had been withdrawn.

Later, however, it was announced that the Speaker's declaration was an error. The appropriation bill still awaits the decision of the members of Parliament and will come up for discussion again when the House reopens next year.

Train Hit Automobile.

MONTREAL, Dec. 15. — William McIntosh, an automobile machinist, was killed and two other occupants of a borrowed machine which he was driving Saturday night narrowly escaped serious injury when the car was driven through the Charlevoix street crossing gates and struck by a Delaware and Hudson passenger train traveling at a high speed.

McIntosh's companions jumped in time to save themselves and then disappeared, so that the cause of the accident will remain a mystery until they are located. McIntosh died in the General Hospital without regaining consciousness.

Grain-Laden Boat Released.

ALPENA, Mich., Dec. 15.—After working steadily for 96 hours, wreckers succeeded in releasing the steamer I. W. Nicholas of Cleveland, and she was towed into this port yesterday. The Nicholas, bound from Port Arthur to Duluth, with 175,000 bushels of flax, went hard aground off North Point in Lake Huron, on the night of Nov. 26. It was necessary to lighter part of her cargo before she could be leased. The diver who examined the vessel said she was almost broken apart.

Tragedy in Millinery Store.

CHICAGO, Dec. 15—Three persons were killed and one woman fatally wounded in a millinery store here yesterday. The divorced husband of the wounded woman, shot and killed the proprietor of the store and the latter's wife shot his own former wife, and then committed suicide. The name of none of the persons was contained in the first police report.

The dead are Louis F. Nieman, Mrs. L. F. Nieman and Emmanuel Harner, the slayer.

A Very Old Criticism.

It has recently been alleged that the college does not adequately fit the young man for business life. It is an old complaint. Back in the middle of the seventeenth century Samuel Pepys, whose immortal diary is mighty good reading, was appointed secretary of the naval board, which was really secretary of the navy. Pepys was a Cambridge man, but he had to learn the multiplication table after he entered the public service. And he proved a right competent naval administrator, after all.

MAGIC OF A MAGNET.

Makes a Chain Rigid Enough For a Man to Climb It.

A Berlin correspondent of the Scientific American describes an interesting experiment that was made at the works of one of the large German manufacturing firms with one of their lifting magnets.

A chain, fastened to the ground and carrying an iron ball at its free end, was raised to a vertical position by the approach of the great lifting magnet suspended from a crane.

The attraction of the magnet was so strong that the chain remained in a perfectly vertical position. A grown up workman climbed up the chain without disturbing its rigidity in the least. The chain seemed to float in air. The magnetic pull on the ball was greater than the gravitational pull on the man.

This remarkable experiment shows the enormous power of attraction exerted by the lifting magnets that are used in iron and steel works to carry about iron material of every description. The magnets enable the operator to seize iron material at any point desired and convey it to any other point within the range of the crane. Incidentally the use of lifting magnets has greatly diminished the risk of accidents in the moving of heavy masses of iron.

GOVERNMENT HAS SERIOUS PROBLEM ON ITS HANDS

Recent Rioting in Natal and Canadian Order Excluding Orientals Has Roused the Natives of the Indian Empire and Hindus and Mohammedans Are Uniting to Demand Justice.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—The British and Indian Governments are very seriously concerned over recent occurrences in South Africa arising out of what the East Indians consider discriminatory legislation against them. An effort is being made to minimise the seriousness of the situation which was accomplished by a general strike of thousands of East Indians in Natal, and riots in which several were killed. The influence of the Government has been sufficient to induce the press of the country to print nothing but favorable news and comments, while a very careful supervision of news in regard to the suppression of disturbances in South Africa is made before its appearance in the Indian papers.

Viscount Hardinge, Viceroy of India, has tried to pour oil on the troubled waters by expressing his sympathy with the East Indians in South Africa, and asking for thorough investigation by the Imperial authorities, and the Marquis of Crewe, Secretary of State for India, in reply to a deputation of Indians, has likewise expressed himself in favor of investigation.

All this, however, has not had much effect on the Indian, or, at any rate, those living in the British Isles. They are thoroughly aroused, and are demanding equal treatment for their fellow subjects in all the British Dominions, practically all of which have adopted or contemplate adopting laws to keep the Indians out of their respective countries.

The difficulties of the Imperial Government are twofold. It is pointed out that it cannot dictate to the dominions as to what immigrants they shall admit without arousing, particularly in South Africa, a storm that might lead to a demand for separation from the Empire; and in India it is realised by the authorities that it would not take a great deal to fan the flame into a rebellion that would tax the resources of the Empire to put down. A rebellion in India would be a very serious matter under any circumstances, but there is the added difficulty now that Hindus and Mohammedans are united in demanding what they consider is justice to the Indian subjects of His Majesty. It is not often that the two sects join together, but in this case they have been acting as one, and have been holding joint meetings of protest and making joint representations to the India office. The meetings have been scarcely noticed in the papers, although the speeches delivered at some of them have been of such an inflammatory character that on other occasions the speakers would have been charged with sedition.

The news that Canada, at the instigation of British Columbia, has been in negotiation with the Imperial authorities with a view to further legislation to restrict the immigration of Indians to the Pacific province, has also caused a great deal of alarm among those who know the seriousness of the situation. For, in this case, although probably not to the same extent, any steps by the Imperial Government to prevent such a move would arouse hostility in Canada and might jeopardize the proposals for assistance from the Dominion in the matter of naval defence.

The Anglo-Japanese alliance, too, is proving a thorn in the side of the British Empire now that the various dominions are attracting immigrants from all parts of the world. Australasia, New Zealand and Canada, or at any event, the western provinces of Canada, have declared for a "white man's country," and their laws aim at the exclusion of all orientals whether British subjects, as the Indians are or Japanese, the subjects of her ally.

Another matter irritating the Indians is that they have found out that some of the men who professed to be heart and soul in their campaign for redress were in the pay of the Imperial Government. One very prominent Indian, whose speeches at some of the meetings verged very close upon sedition, has been found to have been in the pay of the Indian Government for years, and he is now receiving police protection for fear of assassination.

Japan Has No Grievance.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—A despatch to The Times from Tokio says the Japanese Government has been notified that Canada intends to prohibit all immigration to British Columbia for three months. The correspondent adds that as there will be no discrimination against orientals Japan cannot object.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Neuralgia of the Ear.

Recurrent neuralgia of the ear should be treated by suitable constitutional remedies. To relieve pain nothing will prove more effective than heat, a hot water bag, hot brick, hot hop bag or bran being perhaps the most desirable methods of applying it. Moist heat in the form of a poultice is no more effectual than dry heat.

An ordinary hypodermic tablet of morphine and atropine, if dissolved in a little warm water and poured into the ear, although somewhat tardy in action, is generally adequate to relieve the pain. It is a good rule never to drop into the ear a larger dose of any active poison than could be safely taken into the stomach. Of all the local anodynes for earache, personal preference is for cocaine. If a 10 per cent ointment of cocaine is smeared thickly upon the drumhead it generally suffices to relieve tympanic neuralgia. These remedies must, however, only be taken under the supervision of a doctor.

Slatter's Last Bet.

Lieut. John Slatter, conductor of the 48th Highlanders' Band, Toronto, remarked at the last meeting of the Woodbine races, where his band was playing, that he made his last bet on horse races thirty-five years ago. At that time he was in band of the Life Guards, of which King Edward, then Prince of Wales, was honorary colonel. The races at Ascot were some thirteen miles across the Royal Forest from Windsor, and on this day the band was to play for the prince at the castle for dinner at eight o'clock. The bandsmen started off jauntily to walk the thirteen miles to Ascot, and with their winnings were to ride back in state in a tally ho. When they assembled for the return trip there wasn't enough money left among the crowd to permit of any stagecoaching, and the thirteen miles had to be negotiated on foot and against time. The prince wasn't kept waiting, but it was a tired and much wiser lot of men who played for him at dinner that night.

HE WAS A GOOD SOLDIER.

And His Loss Was Deplored by Paul I., the Half Mad Czar.

In Waleszewski's life of Paul I., the half mad son of Catherine the Great occurs the following anecdote illustrative of the workings of the disorganized mind. It seems that in a report on military affairs submitted to the Emperor Paul the final syllable kij of the Russian word for cornet or ensign was carried over from one page to another.

The emperor took it for a proper name, and, moved by a caprice, he gave orders that Ensign Kij should be promoted to the rank of lieutenant. He saw an expression of embarrassment and disappointment on the face of the staff, who did not dare to explain his error; so the next day he promoted the lieutenant of the day before to the rank of captain and some days later to that of colonel, demanding that the officer should be presented to him at once. There was consternation everywhere. The offices were turned upside down in search of the imaginary Kij.

A subaltern of the name or something like it was found in one of the regiments quartered on the Don. He was sent for, but Paul grew impatient, and in the end he had to be told that Kij had been carried off suddenly by a stroke.

"That is a pity," observed the czar. "He was a good soldier."

THE NAME "ARTHUR."

It Has a Wider Significance Than Is Generally Supposed.

The New Life, the London organ of "the most ancient faith," gives its readers the following recondite note on the name "Arthur."

The name is not pronounced Arthur but Ar-Tao-r.

The "A" is added for pronouncing in an accentuated manner.

The "R" should be by itself and is pronounced like "are."

"R" signifies the head, and the second part of the name is "Th" or "Tau" or "Tor."

Artau or Arthor is a tetragrammaton and is shown as R-Th-O-R. It means the head of Thor or Tor—i. e. the head of the highest intelligence.

The Tharus or Tharsus of the east is similar to the Tauris or Tories of Ireland and Scotland.

They were the religious mendicants of the past who led the people rightly in the way of the most ancient faith. With the uprooting of the ancient idealism these mendicants gradually assumed a political mission because of their social power among the Celtic peoples.

The word Tory associated with modern politics has come from this. The word Tory, therefore, has a similar meaning to Arthur and implies "the party or people of divine intelligence."

And many a man will admit that his success is due to his good judgment.

To Expend Imperial Trade.

OTTAWA, Dec. 15.—Two or three Canadian trade commissionerships are vacant, but these will not be filled. In the opinion of the Trade and Commerce Department the expense is not warranted in view of the fact that the services of the British consulates in these places can be requisitioned.

It is the purpose of the Department to utilize the British consular service more and more towards developing Canadian interests and Canadian trade in remote portions of the Empire

THE INSANE IN PRISON

Dr. Young Condemns Treatment of Prisoners

KINGSTON, Dec. 15.—The treatment of insane convicts in the penitentiary was severely arraigned by Dr. E. H. Young, assistant superintendent of Rockwood Hospital for the Insane, who read his report before the Prison Reform Commission Saturday. Dr. Young was engaged by the commission to make the report. He declared that he found things in a most unsatisfactory condition, a condition that was a disgrace to the country.

Dr. Young testified that there were 80 to 100 insane convicts in the penitentiary and for lack of understanding of mental nursing the guards mistake symptoms of insanity for malingering laziness and surliness. The result is that they use unnecessary violence in dealing with their charges. A guard, Dr. Young said, informed him that unruly patients were placed in the dungeons. Many of the convicts should never have been sent to prison, said the witness.

MAKE APPEAL TO THE KING

Suffragettes Made Demonstration in Opera House

LONDON, Dec. 15.—While King George and Queen Mary were attending the opera at Covent Garden Saturday evening they were made the objects of a suffragette appeal. A party of suffragettes had obtained possession of a box opposite the royal box. When the curtain went down on the first act they stood up and unfurled a banner on which was inscribed, "Women are being tortured in your prisons."

The suffragettes started to deliver speeches, addressing the King. What they said was inaudible, because their words were drowned by a volume of hisses from the audience. The King and Queen meanwhile were smiling.

The women's ineffectual efforts to make themselves heard occupied little more than a minute because the management was on the lookout for some such disturbance and quickly ejected the women from the box.

LABOR PARTY IS LEADING

Incomplete Returns Give Victory in New South Wales.

LONDON, Dec. 15.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The latest news regarding the New South Wales general election foreshadows a complete victory for the Labor party, which has now 48 seats against 36 for the Liberals, with one Independent. Five out of seven of the metropolitan centres on the second ballot have gone Labor.

The local option poll has resulted in majorities in favor of a reduction of licenses in sixteen constituencies. There is an absolute majority, but not the statutory three-fifth majority, in favor of prohibition in ten constituencies.

As a result of the visit of the American commissioners, the Governments of the Commonwealth, New South Wales, Victoria, South Australia, Queensland and Tasmania have definitely agreed to be represented at the Panama Exhibition at San Francisco. It is probable that the total financial grants will amount to £120,000. New Zealand has agreed to be represented, and will make a grant of from £25,000 to £40,000.

Cat Ejects Dogs.

The watch cat of the British Museum, London, had a busy time the other day ejecting trespassing dogs from the Museum grounds. The cat is a large handsome animal with peculiar privileges and marked antipathies. He has been named the watch cat because he had constituted himself guardian of the gate and keeper of the law which forbids all dogs to enter the precincts of the Museum. When the watch cat espies a dog, whether it be a bull terrier or a toy Pekingese, he arches his back, ruffles his tail, and hisses a challenge. Rarely do the intruders show fight.

Cynthia's Blue Gown

How It Caused Her Husband an Uncomfortable Evening : : :

By CLARISSA MACKIE

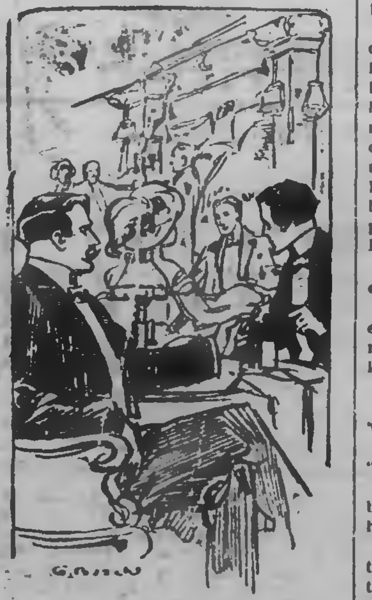
Ned Harkness hurried home that night and found supper waiting for him in the cheerful dining room of the small flat where they lived. Cynthia, his wife, was flying around with pink cheeks putting the last touches to the little dinner she had prepared with her own hands. The Harknesses were a very happy couple, despite the fact that Ned had not yet attained the highest pinnacle of clerkship in Marsh's office and Cynthia still did her own housework with the occasional help of a "woman by the day." Besides, they lived more quietly and saved more money than Ned's fellow clerks, who lived more showily and spent every penny of their incomes.

Tonight was a special night. The blue gown had come home on "approval." Ned and Cynthia had discussed the wisdom of putting so much money into one frivolous dress of blue satin and tissue, but at last they had decided that the blue gown for Cynthia would be a good investment. Ned's employer had invited them to dinner in his own home, and that presaged a promotion, and Cynthia's wardrobe was simple to actual plainness.

"You look like a peach!" admired Ned after dinner as he walked around his lovely wife garbed in the charming gown of delicate blue.

"You're a dear to say such nice things," murmured Cynthia delightedly. "I feel so wicked, Ned, taking all that money out of the bank to buy one foolish gown."

"It's all right, Cynthia. You know, Mr. Marsh expects his clerks to dress well, and I suppose he knows our wives must keep up with us," laughed Ned carelessly. "By the way, Cynthia, Brown says he and Mrs. Brown bought a Paris model for the occasion. Amber chiffon, I think he called it."



HE TURNED AND GLANCED AT THE COUPLE.

"That will be charming for Mrs. Brown, she is so dark," smiled Cynthia, slipping out of the blue gown. "Then you think we may venture on this, dear?"

"Certainly! You better go in and pay for it tomorrow."

* * * * * * *

The next day Ned Harkness telephoned to his wife that he would not be home to dinner that night. A special customer of the firm had appeared in town, and Mr. Marsh had asked Ned to take the stranger out to dinner.

The quiet hotel where they dined was noted for its excellent cuisine, and, while the restaurant was not crowded, the tables were well filled with handsomely gowned women and their escorts.

Ned and his companion sat down in a palm screened corner and watched the changing crowd coming and going. Mr. Fanshaw had an eye for a pretty woman, and more than once he called Ned's attention to some beautiful woman.

While they were eating their soup Fanshaw suddenly laid his hand on Ned's arm.

"Look there, Harkness; that's my ideal woman." He nodded toward a table in the center of the room.

Ned turned around just in time to see a woman in a blue gown sink gracefully into a chair opposite his office companion, James Brown. Brown was a handsome, black eyed young man, and he was paying devoted attention to his companion.

Of course Ned Harkness couldn't tell Fanshaw that the "ideal woman" was his wife. He scarcely believed it himself, though the swift glimpse he had of her profile as she sat down with her back toward him convinced him that it was Cynthia. And she was wearing the blue gown they had chosen last night, and on her head was a large feathered hat that tipped back until the edge of the brim almost touched her bare shoulders.

What was Cynthia doing here with James Brown?

Over and over again that question drummed itself through Ned's jealous mind.

More than once he turned and glanced at the couple sitting so absorbed at the prominent table under the clustered lights. Once Brown caught his eye and nodded good naturedly. But Ned only glared coldly in return.

He made up his mind that when the meal was concluded he would walk up to Brown's table and—of course he would accomplish it quietly—tell Cynthia that he would escort her home.

He wondered if the blue gown was not at the bottom of it all. He had heard that women's heads were turned by beautiful clothes, and, although he had never thought much about such matters in connection with Cynthia, why, of course, it might happen to Cynthia, and, although his faith and trust in her were unbounded, still he blamed himself for putting temptation in her way in the shape of the blue gown.

As for her being with Brown, why, that was all right if she wanted to, he told himself with a sickly smile. She knew the Browns well, and it was very likely an accident that she and Brown had met in time for dinner.

All this argument was perfectly ridiculous in the face of the fact that he knew Cynthia detested the Browns heartily and that she was not in the habit of dressing herself in an elaborate gown and happening to meet masculine friends in fashionable restaurants. Moreover, at this hour Cynthia Harkness was more likely to be at home preparing a modest dinner or playing Chopin in the parlor of their little flat.

Still, there she was, and who could explain it?

"Well, Harkness, I don't know whether you're married or not, but if you're not you certainly must be dead in love," laughed Mr. Fanshaw at last.

"Why?" asked Ned, startled.

"Nothing, only you've called me 'Cynthia' three times."

"I beg your pardon," stammered Ned; "I was thinking of my wife."

"You're excused," smiled his guest, but Ned was careful after that to keep his wandering thoughts in check.

When they had concluded the meal they arose from the table just in time to see James Brown and his fair companion leave the restaurant. By the time they had reached the lobby of the hotel the pair had entered a taxicab and were driven away.

"There goes my ideal," murmured Fanshaw lightly as they paused at the cigar stand.

Ned was silent. In one brief hour the whole course of his life had changed. He would go home and face Cynthia and then tell her that if she was weary of him he would go away and efface himself from her sight forever. He had an uncle who was a missionary in central China, and there was a wide field for laborers there.

Merged as he was in these gloomy meditations, it is not strange that Mr. Fanshaw excused himself on plea of an engagement and went off to spend the evening in a music hall.

Ned plunged into the nearest subway station and went home.

It might be hours before Cynthia came home, and then again she might arrive within an hour, especially if she feared Ned's disapproval of her action in dining with Brown.

He climbed the stairs to the third floor of their modest apartment house and turned the key in the hall door. A dim light burned there, as usual, the faint red glow that always welcomed him home.

There was a busy humming sound from the dining room, a dear familiar sound that he could not associate with the wearer of the blue gown and the big black hat.

The sound belonged distinctly to Cynthia, his dear, busy little wife!

It was nothing less than Cynthia's sewing machine whirring away.

He pushed open the door and looked in, pale and haggard with his evening's dread.

The sewing machine was pushed under the central light, and at it sat Cynthia in her little blue house gown stitching merrily away at breadths of misty blue satin. A deep rose color stained her cheeks, and her dark brown hair curled distractingly around her pretty ears.

"Why, Ned!" she cried delightedly. "Now, don't be cross, dear, but I've a confession to make."

"I can guess what it is," said Ned grimly.

"Then you've been spying, and it's not fair!" she pouted. "I thought it was a great surprise."

"The biggest surprise I ever had," retorted Ned.

"Let me explain. You see, I got to thinking about the price of that blessed blue gown, and I knew I could duplicate it for one quarter of the price. Miss Cassidy will come tomorrow and help me. And so, when Mrs. Brown came this morning and fell in love with it and wanted to buy it, why, I just let her do it. But I told her I was going to duplicate it, but she doesn't care, for she isn't going to wear it at the same places I shall wear mine. She said they were going to dine at the Humboldt. By the way, dearie, did you have a good time?" Cynthia got up and tucked her hand in his arm.

"Fine time," he said hoarsely. "Cynthia, dear, I don't mind about your changing the gown. You are such a darling! How am I ever going to make up to you for what you are to me?"

Cynthia smiled demurely.

"Well, the next time you dine at the Humboldt and see the Browns don't be jealous of me, Ned. Maybe Mrs. Brown just went there out of mischief to bewilder you with that blue gown I told her you were going there to night."

A Lucky Horseshoe.

The Australians when they find a horseshoe throw it over their shoulder. A lady in Sydney found one and threw it gracefully over her shoulder. It went through a hatter's window and hit a customer who was trying on a new hat. This gentleman, under the impression that one of the shopmen in a fit of temporary insanity had played the trick, promptly struck him and sent him through the plate glass window. A general melee ensued, although on consideration no body knew what it was all about.

The Wrestler's Pride.

In olden times a wrestler who had won a belt used to go to his village church on the following Sunday wearing the belt. On the Sunday following that he went to some neighboring church in his belt and claimed precedence over the other young fellows. Nearly all the champions were men great in girth and weight. Old Steadman, accounted by many the most powerful wrestler ever known, was twenty stone weight. — Manchester Guardian.

Subtle Advertising.

A successful hotel manager pointed to the advertisement of a hotel at a fashionable resort. The advertisement read:

"Special rates to single men."

"The proprietor of that hotel," said he, "deserves to succeed. He lays in his advertisement a subtle trap for mothers with marriageable daughters. They read the advertisement and they conclude that, given lower rates at this hotel, single men will be plentiful. They therefore decide that there is the place undoubtedly to take their daughters."

Then, laughing, he concluded:

"These mothers quite correctly believe that as far as their daughters' chances of matrimony are concerned the more the marryer."—Washington Star.

Daily Christmas Hint

Just the Thing For the Children's Stocking

Isn't this the cutest little candy kid you ever saw? He's the product of the fertile brain of a Vassar girl who first made him for a midnight "spread." The little fellow would be just the thing for the children's Christmas stocking.

How is he made? The easiest thing in the world. Get a goodly supply of strong toothpicks, some large raisins, marshmallows, almonds and figs. Then you are ready for the Frankenstein trick—making a man.

It is best to begin on the legs and arms first. To make the legs stick two of the raisins on two toothpicks, and to the ends of each place an almond for a foot. The arms are made in the same way; except for the hands the almonds are blanched. Now run two marshmallows through a tooth pick for the man's body. He hasn't any neck. Have ready some melted chocolate and dip an orange stick in this mixture and with it make large dots for the buttons on his coat and for his facial features. Now attach arms and legs, and when a good sized fig has been rakishly placed on his head for a hat the man is ready for the stocking.

THE CANDY KID.

SOME FINE COWS OF GLENGARRY

4540 Pounds Milk Average Yield by 155 Cows.

Among the records collected by the dairy division of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa this season are some from Glengarry that shows the average yield by 155 cows to be 4,540 pounds of milk, 3.5 test, 159 pounds of fat. Included in that is the yield of one herd of 9 cows, including one three year-old that averaged 6,209 pounds of milk 3.3 test, 205 pounds of fat. This herd produced 1,669 pounds of milk and 46 pounds of fat above the average of the 155 cows. Another herd averaged 220 pounds of fat, or 61 pounds per cow above the average. With fat reckoned at thirty cents per pound, this is equivalent to over eighteen dollars per cow, indicative of the thousands of dollars extra that might be coming into a district if the cows were keyed up to a higher producing level. One noticeable feature of this section is the large number of poor yields from two and three year olds. But it is not only the heifers that are responsible for lowering the average yield. There are cows from six to ten years old that gave only 2,800 pounds of milk and 102 pounds of fat as compared with that average of 4,540 pounds of milk and 259 pounds of fat. So that instead of a contrast of only eighteen dollars, it is found that there is an actual difference of forty one dollars in the cash received from mature cows in the same period. This, says the bulletin, is surely a statement strong enough to cause every dairyman to examine closely into the performance of each cow he keeps. Milk records are easily kept, and a composite sample from each tenth day's milk can be tested once a month. Is not this worth doing?

UNIONIST WINS.

Split Vote Defeats Home Rule Candidate in S. Lanarkshire.

GLASGOW, Scotland, Dec. 15.—The Unionist candidate won the bye-election Friday for the South Lanarkshire seat in Parliament, left vacant by the death of Sir Walter Menzies, a Liberal home ruler.

The figures were: Hon. W. Watson (Unionist), 4,257; G. Morton (Lib.), 4,000; Mr. Gibb (Labor), 1,670.

The number of registered voters in the constituency was 10,985, and of these 9,937 went to the polls.

This was the first time in the history of the constituency that a three-cornered contest had taken place, and the Liberals claim the result to be an endorsement of the Government's Irish policy, as the Liberal and Labor candidates are both home rulers, and together polled 1,423 votes more than the Unionist.

At the last previous election the poll was: Sir Walter Menzies (Lib.), 5,160; Dr. C. M. Douglas (Unionist), 3,963.

Origin of Duels.

Dueling took its rise from the judicial combats of the Celtic nations. The first formal duel in England, between William, Count D'Eu and Godfrey Baynard, took place in 1096. Dueling in civil matters was forbidden in France in 1305. Francis I. challenged the Emperor Charles V. in vain in 1528. The fight with small swords was introduced into England in 1587. A proclamation was made in 1679 that no person should be pardoned who had killed another in a duel. The custom was checked in the British army in 1792 and was abolished in England by the aid of public opinion.

Couldn't Fool Her.

This story of Gibbon, the famous historian, was told by a contemporary:

"Gibbon had a small face, almost lost between a high forehead and a big double chin and a caricature of a nose which was crushed between the encroaching slopes of a pair of baggy cheeks. One day he was introduced by M. de Lauzen to Mme. du Deffand, a blind lady, who was in the habit of passing her hands over the features of her renowned contemporaries when introduced to her in order to get an idea of their appearance. Gibbons received these marks of attention, offering his face to the exploration of the blind lady's fingers with a delightful frankness.

"Mme. du Deffand passed her fingers over his chubby face carefully. She did her utmost to discover some other outstanding trait than the pair of abnormally developed cheeks, but all to no purpose. During the examination expressions of doubt and bewilderment chased each other over the face of the blind woman until at last, in an outburst of anger, she let her hands fall by her side and cried out, 'Bah; this is a bad joke!'"

Ship Called Iron Duke.

Britain's next great battle ship is to be called the Iron Duke, after the Duke of Wellington, although that soldier came by the nickname in a roundabout way. He was never so called until long after Waterloo. An iron steamship, a novelty at the time, was built in the Mersey, and named the Duke of Wellington, and so the vessel came to be known as the Iron Duke—the transition being easy and obvious. It was the duke' union of resolution and physical energy which made the popular name for the Mersey built steamship to fit him like a perfect cap.

INSTRUCTIONS TO THE O.H.A. CLUBS ISSUED BY SECRETARY

Junior Player Can Play One Intermediate or One Senior Game.

FEES FOR REFEREES

The following instructions have been forwarded to all clubs in the Ontario Hockey Association:

Each club is responsible for the eligibility of its players.

Junior players must be under 20 years of age, Jan. 1st, 1914.

Certificates are revocable by the Association without notice.

Don't put off until the last minute the registration of players.

All certificates must be countersigned by the Secretary of the Association.

Each player must have a certificate signed by himself in ink, and by the President and Secretary of his club.

Birth Certificates for Juniors

In addition all junior players must furnish official birth certificates from the Parliament Buildings, Registry Office or church records. These should be sent in with the playing certificates and not separately. No junior will be allowed to play until this is done.

Official birth certificates filed last year for eligible junior players desiring to play this year will not require to be renewed.

Clubs are requested to pay particular attention to the lighting of their rinks, and to the condition of the goal nets. Both must be perfectly satisfactory to the referee, or there will be trouble for the home club.

No junior player will be eligible to again play in that series who plays more than one intermediate or one senior game in that season.

The Residence Rule

Under the residence rule, a player must be a bona fide and continuous resident of the town to which his clubs belong since Aug. 1st, 1913. The exceptions are students, teachers and sailors. The latter must play where they were living last January.

Players living in rural districts or police villages must play in their nearest O. H. A. town.

No player who has received an O. H. A. certificate shall play in an exhibition game for another club without first receiving permission from the Association.

No player shall play for more than one club in the Association year, nor shall he sign a certificate for more than one club.

Any club intending to default a match must give three days' clear notice to opposing club and the Association. Failure to give such notice will cost offending club $25, in addition to all expenses.

A Default Puts a Team Out

A club defaulting any match debars itself from further competition. All scheduled matches played by such club will count as played, and all unplayed matches will count as wins to the team scheduled against the club defaulting.

Every club must file a list of officers with the Association. Do this at once and save a lot of unnecessary correspondence.

O. H. A. clubs playing in another association must give precedence to O. H. A. scheduled matches.

A junior may play one intermediate or one senior game with his own club, and an intermediate player may play one senior game. Two games will disqualify the player from competing in the lower series.

Failure to start a game on the scheduled hour will cost the offending team or teams a fine of $10.

All clubs are required to register their playing colors with the association. Send these in with the list of officers.

Expenses of Visiting Club

Expenses of the traveling club are 10 cents per mile for one way for eight men, which amount must be paid by the home club.

The junior birth certificates must be official documents issued by the Registrar General's Department at Parliament Buildings, Toronto, or by a local registrar or an extract from a church baptismal record, certified to by the clergyman in charge.

Any club refusing or failing to play the club against which it is matched debars itself from further competition.

Notice of the result of each match must be sent to the association by the victorious club through the referee.

The Referee's Fee

Referee's fee is $5, in addition to an allowance at the rate of 10 cents a mile one way for all distances. The minimum of fee and allowance is $8, except in the case of a local referee. After the group winners are returned the association appoints all referees. Each club is to pay half the referee's expenses.

In case of a club playing its home game and defaulting the return game, the penalty will be the payment of a sum sufficient to cover the expenses of the visiting club in the first game, such expenses to be hotel and 'bus bills for ten men and one-half the referee's expenses.

72 Hours' Notice for Referee

Clubs failing to agree upon a referee must give the association seventy-two hours' notice of their match and an official will be sent; otherwise both teams will be ruled out of the competition. Either club may send in the notice. Clubs should agree on a referee whenever possible, and save trouble for themselves and the association.

Protests must be in duplicate and signed by the president or secretary, must be filed with the association within 48 hours of the match protested, and must be accompanied by a deposit of $25. Defending club has 36 hours to file a defence. Service personally or by registered post will conform with the rule. Protests on questions of fact will not be entertained, as the referee's decision is final.

Secretary.

PULPIT HUMOR.

When the Congregation Laughed and the Minister Blushed.

It was Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Archbishop of York, who, when he was Bishop of Stepney, remarked, apropos of the children of the East End, "They are doing a great deal to rebuke the tendency of the clergy to become middle-aged in spirit—dull, morose, and superior." And he told one of his favorite stories of an East End cleric who was feeling lifeless and disconsolate on setting out on his daily round of visits, when a little street urchin looked up at him with a cheerful eye and knowing smile, and said:—

"'Ullo, young man!"

"That greeting quite set the parson up for the rest of the day," Dr. Lang declares.

And it was Dr. Ingram, Bishop of London, who once declared that "a sense of humor is essential to success. If a young man has no sense of humor, I would keep him at college until he got one.

But although many clergymen seem to lack that sense of humor which is so essential if their work is to be successful and popular, there are occasions when they themselves are the cause, unconsciously, of much amusement to others. In his book "The Humorous Side of the Pulpit," Rev. W. Cowan tells, for instance how the "bull" at times arouses the risibilities of the congregation, and plays havoc with the solemnity of the occasion.

It is said, for instance, of the eloquent Bishop of Ripon, that he once made the following appeal from the pulpit:—

"Brethren, I beg of you to take hold of your heart, and look it straight in the face,' which is almost as bad as the Irish Roman Catholic priest who warned his hearers in these words: "If you don't obey your spiritual Father, you will go to the bottom of the bottomless pit." And it was a clergyman of the same country who, in a sermon on Grace ended with the words: "My brethren if you have in your hearts wan spark of heavenly grace, wather it, wather it continually."

The following is said to have been a preacher's peroration: "We pursue the shadow; the bubble bursts, it leaves the ashes in our hands." A London preacher a short time ago invited "young men and women of all ages" to attend his meetings, which reminds one of the memorable exordium of the nervous curate: "Young ladies, or perhaps I should say young women, for I wish to embrace you all." Nervousness is, indeed, accountable for some curious mistakes and laughable incidents. The preacher must have been nervous who gave out his text, "Heaviness may endure for a joy, but night cometh in the morning."

Apparently it is dangerous for the young clergyman to fish for compliments. There is a story of a reverend divine who once asked a sexton how he liked the sermon. "I didn't like it at all," candidly answered that worthy. "Why, pray?" inquired the preacher. "First, because you read it; secondly, because you read it very badly; and thirdly, because it was not worth reading."

Vegetation Following Fires.

A British scientist working in Australia, has been collecting interesting data with regard to the vegetation which follows forest fires. The fact that this growth is quite different to that which preceded the fire is explained in this way: That the covering of a seed may be so hard that the embyro cannot penetrate it and that it may be preserved in the ground indefinitely in this state without losing the power of growth. The ashes or heat acting on the seeds, softens or chars the outer coat and the seed germinates. After the great London fire in 1666, the site of the city became covered with a luxuriant growth of a yellow flower called "London rocket," which does not appear to have been noticed there before.

Curious Marriage Customs.

Among the East Indian Gonds a bride is carried on her brother-in-law's back to the house of her friends and is made to weep with each of them, while they give her small presents of money. When the ceremony is about to be performed at the bridegroom's house the bride hides in another house and calls "Coo!" and the bridegroom's brother-in-law searches for her. As she enters the bridegroom's house two spears are planted before the door to make an arch, and the bridegroom pushes her through, the girl hanging back.

On the day after the wedding the bride and bridegroom throw mud at each other for sport.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral-curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto

THE DIVINE CHARACTER OF LOVING SERVICE

Dr. Gordon Preaches Beautiful Sermon at Knox Church Anniversary Service---He Pleads for Closer Following of the Divine Teacher

(By our special Reporter)

Principal Gordon D.D., of Queen's University, of Kingston, was the special preacher at Knox Church, Anniversary yesterday. The well-known Presbyterian divine conducted services both morning and evening and large congregations were in attendance.

Dr. Gordon has a venerable appearance and his style of preaching is earnest and restrained. He combines the teaching manner of the scholar with solemn spirituality of thought and feeling. His diction is choice and scriptural and he has a fondness for quoting appropriate verses of hymns to gently force home his lessons. He does everything gently. He appeals to the heart and treats it as a delicate piece of chinaware which must be handled carefully. The doctor is the gentlest of preachers who seems to have lived all that he preaches.

Dr. Matheson's hymn, "O, Love that will not let me go" which was sung at the close of the service, was quoted two or three times in the sermon.

The morning service opened with the beautiful hymn by Annie Steele, beginning:

When I survey life's varied scene,
Amid the darkest hours,
Sweet rays of comfort shine between
And thorns are mixed with flowers.

Loving Service

The text for the sermon was taken from the 13th chapter John's Gospel, the incident of Jesus washing His disciples' feet. Dr. Gordon said that many precious lessons could be drawn from the incident. The one he wished to direct attention to was the divine character of loving service.

This incident occurred on the evening before the crucifixion. The time was short and Jesus had much to say and much to suffer, his words and actions had all that interest which attaches to last words and last incidents. They were in the Upper Room and had partaken of the Passover. There had been wranglings between the desciples as to which would be the greatest. Jesus used this occasion to illustrate to them the divine character of service. The custom in those days was to wear sandles and one of the first acts of courtesy to a visitor was for the servant to wash their feet. But who was to be the servant? Jesus himself took the water and the towel and proceeded to fulfil the office of servant as well as host. How that act would come home to them. Peter was shocked at the action of the Master, he said: "Thou shalt never wash my feet!"

Divine Character of Jesus

The preacher said that this was more than an illustration of the humility of Jesus, it was the revelation of the divine character of loving service. Jesus in his own life and ministry, was an example of this truth.

John is the only one of the four Apostles who records this incident, he found in it the inner teaching of the Lord's Supper, giving to others, the broken bread and the outpoured wine.

There were times when the desciples saw more clearly than at other times the divine character of the Master. John in this incident shows the way in which Christ manifests the Father. Many think of God as a far away Sovereign, who created the world and who rules the nations, but they cannot see that God dwells in all things and is with us in our daily lives, nearer to us than breathing closer than hands and feet. He is the Father and we are His children. Behind all the forces and processes of Nature is the face of the loving Father. At the centre of the universe is the heart of God and round about us are the arms of the Father.

Not only does Christ teach these things, He manifests them in Himself. "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." He, himself, by His life and utterances, manifested the Father unto us. "We have all tried to find out if Christ was divine," said Dr. Gordon, we were told that "no man has seen God at any time," but we know Jesus and in Him we see the Highest that has ever been manifested to men and we realize the Christlikeness of God.

In the life and ministry of Jesus he sought the deliverance of the sinner from his sins. In the cross of Christ is revealed to us the longing of God to draw us to Himself. The meaning of the resurrection is the triumph of life over death. He reveals to us the meaning of sorrow, and if we will but trust Him, He will lead us through the shadow into a more abundant life.

The washing of the desciples' feet by Jesus was an illustration of the Divine in human life. The nearest approach to this act in our day would be for a man to brush his friend's boots. With love all acts are alike. There are no great or small; love links together all its acts. The dew-drop illustrates the law of gravitation as does the Solar System. The patriot who sings to the glory of his country, or he who cleans out a slum or rescues a waif, is doing equal service. So the love of Christ could stoop to the lowliest service, the love that could not let us go. the same love stepped forth the next day and endured this suffering and shame of Calvary.

We must take that as our standard, true life is not in getting, but in giving. Our life must be along the same lines as His life if we are to be worthy children of God. In the Cross is the secret of our life, we all stumble at this because of the natural selfishness of the human heart.

Jesus Himself, to the world at large, is a mere name; but we are His members and must carry forward His work. He desires His life and work to be carried on by those who believe in Him. They are the members of His body, it would sometimes appear that their limbs were antrophied by lack of exercise, or that they were chilled by icy indifference.

The sermon was a scriptural exposition, fused with a warm and earnest plea for a closer following of Him who gave Himself for all.

Portugal's Wonderful Climate.

The climate of Portugal is the most wonderful in Europe. A polyglot crowd of scores of thousands flies annually to the Riviera from every part of Europe in order to enjoy the supposed maximum of sunshine, but often to be undeceived by weeping skies and with the cruel mistral as a certainty. At Lisbon, on the other hand, cold weather as understood elsewhere is literally unknown. The temperature is not only higher than that of the Riviera, but is equable to a degree that almost defies belief. What this means in practical effect is illustrated by the fact that in March last I met an English lady on board ship who had stayed six weeks at Mont 'Estoril, near Lisbon, and had bathed in the sea every day in February. Nor was the season exceptionally warm.—Scribner's.

"Her Christmas buying motto is: 'Not how good, but how many.'"

FINE FEATHERS

A Well-Acted Play at the Grand Opera House.

The presentation of Fine Feathers by a capable company, pleased two audiences at the Grand, on Saturday. Mrs. Bob Reynolds, wore fine feathers for a time, but she paid a high price for the pleasures for which her heart craves and for which her husband's honor was sacrificed.

The story is an interesting one. Reynolds, a manly young fellow, just manages to make both sides meet with $25 coming in each week. His young wife is dissatisfied, while he is quite happy and optimistic of the future.

Reynolds' position with the government is an important one as he inspects cement to be used for construction operations. John Brand, or his company, has the contract for a huge dam. He plays his cards well, and, aided by the young wife, Reynolds is drawn into the net and he gets $40,000 for passing on an inferior grade of cement.

Mrs. Reynolds looked very well in her fine feathers but not so her husband. No sooner had Brand gained his point than he proceeded to lead his victim into the stock market. His plans worked well and it was not long before he had his $40,000 back, and Reynolds, with a $10,000 note to meet.

Reynolds decides to compel Brand to make a more even division of the spoils as the deception saved $200,000 for the company. His threats at making a clean breast of the whole affair do not alarm Brand who again gains the day by informing Reynolds that his confession will send his wife to jail also.

There have been many tense situations, well acted, particularly by Mr. Ivan and Mr. Evans, Reynolds and Brand respectively, and part of the climax comes with the word that the dam has given way and many people are drowned. Already the Press Association has suspected. Reynolds, in remorse, decides to end it all and after a farewell to the unsuspecting wife, he rushes to the telephone, informs the police of what they will find, and forthwith blows out his brains.

The finale is not satisfactory to an audience, partial to the closing chapter that finds all well and everybody happy. Bob Reynolds doesn't deserve the end that fate has in store for him. But it is a change from the general rule. Miss Strickland as Reynolds' wife portrayed a difficult role very acceptably, but the best work was that of Mr. Ivan and Mr. Evans, whom Peterboro theatregoers will hope to see again. Mr. McKenna as a reporter, with an extensive vocabulary, fitted in well as did also Miss Mabel Strickland, as Frieda, a hired girl and Miss Van House, as a neighbor, with a fondness for chewing gum and consuming highballs.

"What right have you to arrest me?" demanded the citizen soldier.

Coinage is always a mystery to the wayfarer. In Johannesburg they talk in silver. In Holland they talk in florins; across the frontier they talk in francs. But there are places where they talk on a lower scale. And I greet the boy who brought me change for 8s. 9d. out of a sovereign with two farthings in it. MAGISTRATE EDMISON'S JUDGMENT IN LIQUOR CASE

Taking Evidence for the Defence and Considering Conduct of Special Officers, His Worship Feels He Cannot Safely Convict

In the Williams vs. King case, County Magistrate Edmison has given the following judgment:

The defendant who keeps a hotel or public house in the village of Norwood, is charged with having sold liquor on the fifteenth day of October last, without the license therefore by law required.

The only evidence against the defendant is that Harry Solomon and Arthur G. Green who are said to be special officers sent down from Toronto by the Department to act as detectives, and give evidence in case they should discover that any liquor was sold by the defendant or anyone else, on the day above mentioned, which was the day of the Norwood show fair, and these so-called detectives both swear that they were served that day with whiskey over the bar of the defendant's hotel, and if their evidence is true the defendant should be convicted, but the evidence put in on behalf of the defendant, creates serious doubts regarding the reliability of the evidence of the two so-called detectives, as it clearly shows that they were very much under the influence of liquor themselves when they boarded the train at the Don station to go to Norwood on the night of the fourteenth, so much so, that they were refused a seat in the parlor coach, although many seats were unoccupied.

Arrival in Norwood

They arrived at the Norwood station after midnight of the fourteenth or in the morning of the fifteenth and remained for several hours in or around the station, then went to the defendant's hotel, to get a bed. Why they remained so long at the station instead of going direct to the hotel, is not explained. It may be they were so much under the influence of liquor that they were afraid to go to the hotel fearing they might be refused admission. After spending a few hours about the station, however, they went to the defendant's hotel and secured a bed, and after resting a few hours, they got up and went out to the Show fair grounds where they were engaged taking photographs, and while there, they bought or procured a large bottle of whiskey containing about a quart, from one Lavasseur. It is not clear where they drank all that bottle of whiskey, but likely a part of it on the fair grounds and the remainder of it in the hotel after they returned, but they evidently drank it somewhere, as the bottle was found empty lying between them in the hotel. Sometime after they returned from the fair grounds and I think I may safely assume that after drinking a quantity of whiskey, they would scarcely know what they were doing and we can scarcely believe the defendant would be so foolish as to give them more liquor over the bar, they being strangers to him and he knowing that he would be liable to be heavily fined if discovered doing so. Then the evidence shows there were only three men behind the bar that day, namely: the defendant himself, his son and a brother-in-law, and all three swear positively that they did not serve the two so-called detectives or either of them or any one else, with whiskey that day. Then taking their evidence and also considering the conduct of the two so-called detectives from the time they left Toronto until they returned, I feel I cannot safely convict the defendant on their evidence and I therefore dismiss the complaint against him and the only question for me to consider is who should pay the costs.

The Question of Costs

The defendant and Lavasseur who sold the bottle of whisky to the two so-called detectives on the fair grounds were summoned to appear before me on the same day and at the same hour, each of them respectively being charged with a breach of the Liquor License Act on the fifteenth day of October last, at Norwood, and on the twenty-first of November last, they appeared before me for trial, the complainant being represented by Mr. Moore and the defendant by Mr. Gordon. The case against Lavasseur was first called when he through his Counsel pleaded guilty and was convicted, the question of costs being reserved until the case against the defendant King would be disposed off. The case against King was then called when, he through his Counsel pleaded not guilty, and stated he was not ready for trial and applied for an adjournment for one week in order to subpoena his witnesses and after some discussion the adjournment was granted. The only witnesses present that day being Solomon and Green, the two so-called detectives and they were there to give evidence if required in both cases and if both defendants had been convicted and fines and costs imposed and if the witnesses had been adjudged entitled to be paid a proper proportion of the amount would have been chargeable against each defendant. I think however, that on the final hearing of the case against King, the evidence then put in on behalf of the Defendant showed the conduct of the witnesses, Solomon and Green while coming from Toronto to Norwood and returning and while in the village of Norwood to be such as to disentitle them to any fees or remuneration for their attendance at the hearing of either case. And the information in this case having been laid by the Inspector at the instance on request of the Department or the Provincial Inspector, it is not customary or usual in such cases to order costs to be paid by the informant and I do not feel that it would be right for me to do so in this case and especially as the complainant under ordinary circumstances and according to the usual practice, would be entitled to recover from the defendant, certain costs of the day when the adjournment was granted which would be a set off against any costs that might be allowed now against him and all things being considered, I have come to the conclusion that my duty is simply to dismiss the complaint in this case without costs and to make no order for the payment of any costs of the day to the complainant when the adjournment was made, and the conviction against Lavasseur will be with all proper costs except the costs of the two so-called special officers, Solomon and Green, who are not to be paid as witnesses in either case, as the evidence shows that on the day in question they were at least among the first to violate the law and had they been prosecuted before me, I fail to see how they could have escaped conviction and punishment, but the time has now elapsed when that might have been done and all I can now do is to deprive them of all such fees and remuneration as they might have been entitled to, had they conducted themselves properly. The costs against Lavasseur as taxes and allowed by me are $7.66.

MEN NEEDED FOR THE MINISTRY

Canon Davidson Reads Letter Received From the Bishop.

The following letter from the Bishop, was read by Canon Davidson at both services in St. John's Church, on Sunday:

Reverend and Dear Brother:

The following (D.V.) are coming forward for Ordination as Deacons at the Cathedral on Sunday morning, the 21st inst., St. Thomas' Day, viz: Charles Howard Boulden, Thomas Joseph Dew, and Andrew Perry Park.

In connection with the use of Ember Collects during the season, and on the Ordination Sunday, I wish you would bring before your people as strongly as possibly, the great need there is for men for the Sacred Ministry and press upon them the splendid opportunity which exists for our young men to take up this work, and so to form a strong Christian Ministry to build up the Kingdom of Christ in our midst, and so prepare and make ready His way that at His second coming we may be found acceptable in His sight.

With prayers for the outpouring of His Spirit,

Yours faithfully,
James Toronto.

FAMILY IN GOOD HANDS

Have Been Furnished With Another House and Some Clothing

As a result of the story as told by Sanitary Inspector Spence and which appeared in the Review last Friday, several parties have investigated the case and the family will spend a happy Christmas.

In this case the father is ill and a five-year-old daughter does much of the house work, while the mother works out in an effort to support the family.

One of the first to respond was the Salvation Army, through Adjutant McElheney. A suitable house has been found as well as some clothing.

Neither Inspector Spence or Adjutant McElheney are looking for publicity. It will readily be understood that their duties take them to all parts of the city and they are in a position to give correct statements. The same can be said of Mr. Miller, the Relief Officer.

FARMERS SHOW MUCH INTEREST

Want to Hear the Speakers From Farmers' Organizations.

Next Saturday

Arrangements for the big farmers' banquet which is to be held in the Oriental hotel next Saturday afternoon at 1 o'clock, to hear the speakers from the farmers' organizations of Western Canada, indicate that it is likely to prove a great success. Only a limited number of tickets are available and already it is understood the greater part of them have been placed. Reeve Anderson, of Keene, who has handled a number, sent word today that his had all been taken and he wanted twice as many more. These could not all be sent him. Warden Garbutt has also disposed of his and asked for more.

The Western farmers are in Ottawa today waiting on the Dominion Government. They will attend a big meeting in Toronto on Wednesday and Thursday, where they will confer with leading Ontario farmers and a portion of them will be in Peterboro on Saturday next. Warden J. H. Garbutt will preside at the banquet. Arrangements have been made by which it will be possible for those who do not succeed in obtaining tickets for the banquet and who would like to hear the speakers, to obtain free admission to the banquet hall for the speeches.

Speaking of the proposed transatlantic flight Mr Curtiss said:—

"I would build machines for the flight, which I believe is more feasible now than at any time before. I would not myself make the flight, but I would build a machine that would do it, and there are hundreds of good mechanicians who would like the opportunity of making the flight."

ANNUAL REPORT ON THE WATERS

Is Received by the Board of Water Commissioners

The annual report of the inspection of the waters of the Stoney and Clear Lakes was read at the Board of Water Commissioners' regular meeting yesterday afternoon with Chairman Matthews presiding.

The report was as follows:

Board of Water Commissioners:

I beg leave to present my sixth annual report re the pollution of the waters of Stoney Lake and Clear Lake.

Also the pollution of the river from the city to Young's Point.

In May I received word that two dead cows had been drawn out on to the ice at Young's Point. I reported the matter to the Sanitary Inspector at Bridgenorth and immediate action was taken to have them removed.

In reference to Stoney Lake I am glad to say there is a marked improvement.

At Julian's Landing, Mr. Thompson has constructed a septic tank, with distributing beds, which comply with the law and which is very satisfactory.

Mr. Picken of the Morgan House at McCracken's Landing has also complied with the law.

The conditions at Viamede are also very satisfactory to the Health Authorities.

As to the Burleigh Falls hotel I have not hesitation in saying that there is not any improvement in conditions since the report of Dr. Bell in 1910. The conditions are very much the same. The sewerage at this particular point is more than any that goes into the lake at any other source. In June, Dr. Clinton pointed out to Mr. Darcy how ten yards of gravel at a certain place would greatly assist in filtering the sewerage. Mr. Darcy has as yet not taken any action.

There is very little to complain about as to the cottagers.

On Sept. 26th I received a complaint that one Mark Pengelley had dumped a load of night soil in the river above No. four lock. I laid an information but was unable to secure a conviction.

Respectively submitted,
George Cochrane.

The secretary was instructed to send a copy of the above report to Dr. Clinton and to ask him to take steps to stop the nuisance at Burleigh Falls.

A letter was received from A. Allison regarding a claim of $3.60 for digging up his water service. The matter was referred to the Superintendent for action.

The secretary was instructed to send a copy of the above report to Dr. Clinton and to ask him to take steps to stop the nuisance at Burleigh Falls.

The Superintendent was instructed to have all accounts of the Water Commissioners sent in before the next meeting.

Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson reported the city water as pure during the months of October and November.

The cause of the slight outbreak of typhoid fever was due to the using of well water.

SIX MEN ARE KILLED

Lodging House of Salvation Army is Destroyed

Canadian Press Despatch

CINCINNATI, Dec. 16.—Fire last night destroyed the west end Turner Hall, an old building used by the Salvation Army as a lodging house and a second hand clothing depot.

Six men were killed, one was fatally injured and a woman and two children are missing.

The loss is one hundred thousand dollars. Smoke caused by old clothing burning made rescue work difficult.

THE JUDGMENT IS RESERVED

Richard Heard in Action to Recover $150.

Judgment was reserved this morning by Judge Huycke, in the Heard vs. Touchburn action, in which the plaintiff, Richard Heard, of this city, seeks to recover from the defendant, Robert Touchburn, of Bridgenorth, the sum of $150.

The action has to do with an exchange of farm property.

E. L. Goodwill for the plaintiff, and D. O'Connell for the defendant.

CAME BACK BUT WAS DISCHARGED

Court Surprises Blacklister Who Had Been Drinking.

David Crowley charged with being drunk while on the list was handed a rather queer surprise by Magistrate Dumble this morning at Police Court.

Crowley was so surprised that he even failed to smile, when the Magistrate remarked "You're discharged."

Constable Hayward and Sills in giving evidence to the effect that the accused was drunk yesterday, had omitted the blacklist part of it, and as a result he was discharged as the Magistrate contended that there was no evidence that Crowley was on the list.

Crowley appeared yesterday and was fined $10 for the same offence.

EX-CONSTABLE IS FINED $1

Thos. Weller Charged With Assaulting Young Lad.

Ex-Constable Weller was fined $4.25 by Magistrate Dumble at the Police Court this morning on the charge of assaulting a boy named Matthew McClelland of Albert St. G. N. Gordon acted for the defendant who pleaded not guilty.

The boy claimed that on Friday evening about six o'clock while on his way home, Weller stopped him and asked him for his name. He refused to give him his name and tried to get away, but the man grabbed him and put him down, tearing off his tie and dragging him along the ground. The witness said Weller was under the influence of drink.

Other witnesses corroborated the boy's story and gave evidence to the effect that he was under the influence of drink.

The defendant denied the charge and stated that the boys had thrown a piece of ice at him. On being questioned by the Magistrate he could not tell which one of the boys threw the ice.

Jas. Middleston and Detective Newhall both stated that Weller was not in the habit of drinking and Detective Newhall said that he had never known the defendant to drink. Both had sen him shortly before this time.

Weller however admitted to the Magistrate that he had had a couple of drinks that morning.

"This is one of the worst things that has ever happened to increase the troubles of the police," remarked Mr. Gordon when the fine of $1 and costs was imposed.

His Worship contended that the constable's temper had gone beyond bounds and that he was injudicious in his punishment of the boy.

An appeal will be made.

WANTS TO RETURN TO PETERBORO

But Charity Board do not Want to See Mrs. Proffitt

SHE WAS DEPORTED

The Charity Board met in regular session last evening. City Relief Officer Miller reported that Mrs. Profit who was deported from here last spring, was trying through the Salvation Army to come to Canada again. He had written the Army in regard to the matter. The Board approved Mr. Miller's actions and instructed him to take any further action in regard to the matter to prevent the party from coming out to Canada.

It will be remembered Mrs. Proffit's husband deserted her last spring and that she was maintained by the city and also sent to the old country at the city's expense.

PETERBOROUGH, TUESDAY DEC. 16, 1913.

VINDICATION OF ROGERS.

THE RESULT of the Macdonald bye-election is perhaps the biggest blow that has been dealt the Liberal Party organization for a long time. The campaign of calumny which has been carried on by Liberals, from the ex-Premier downwards, ever since the Borden Government was elected, has now received a decided check. Macdonald was supposed to have been won by nothing but corruption and the name of Mr. Rogers was made a synonym for all that was vile in electioneering.

That there was corruption at the previous election, on both sides, no one denies; but to say that the people of Macdonald were so utterly depraved as to be influenced to such an extent by bribery is surely a wholesale libel upon an intelligent electorate. However, Macdonald has given the lie to the Laurierite libelers and they ought to have the good manners to give Mr. Rogers the credit for this vindication of his honor.

There is nothing heard just now of the Chateauguay appeal. Ever since the filing of counter charges by the Conservative Party, the Liberals have had nothing to say. Sir Wilfrid Laurier has ceased to cry in public—"they stole my Chateaugnay." After Macdonald Sir Wilfrid and his followers may cease from calumny and get down to clear and decent discussion of vital issues.

THE WATER-SHED OF THE WEST.

The policy of conservation might, with some benefit, be applied to many more things than the water in the Trent Valley. The London Times, commenting upon the British Columbia Electric Railway Company's report, says that the prevailing depression and its consequences seem to point to the possibilities that the colonies are pushing their development at somewhat too fast a pace. A great deal of capital has flowed into Canada within the last two years and the west has shown some good returns for the money. But there is danger in being over capitalized or of covering too large an area at a time. We used to hear of towns springing up within a few months on the Prairies and men and money flowed into these districts at an amazing rate. There is always the possibility and the probability of these cities going down as suddenly as they sprang up. Forced hot-house plants are very attractive in appearance, but they are soon chilled and have not the hardy qualities of plants of a slower growth. It is the same with human organizations as with Nature. A little more concentration and less diffuseness in the application of capital would bring better results and inspire greater confidence in the British or the Canadian investor. We must develope the west, but we must not forget that the water-shed of the west is the east and insofar as we conserve the life and energy of Ontario, shall we be doing our best for the lasting development of our western provinces.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION.

"INDUSTRIAL CANADA" is very much alarmed at the new Workmen's Compensation Bill recently laid before the Ontario Government by its special commissioner, Sir William Meredith. It says that the application of the proposed law will impose a heavy burden upon newspapers in particular. It will also place the farmers of Ontario in a perilous position.

In the case of a newspaper employee being killed, whether a pressman engaged in his work, or a reporter or editor being killed in a tustle with a politician or a poet; or if a stenographer contracts blood poisoning sharpening a pencil, the dependants, under the proposed bill, would receive compensation in the form of a monthly pension for life of from $20 to $40. If the employee is injured, whether the injury is temporary or permanent, partial of total, Sir William Meredith says that he should receive 55 per cent. of his former earnings for life, or until recovery. Earnings above $2,000 are not considered, so that the maximum amount of compensation would be $1,100 per annum. Highly paid editors, managers and presidents of a metropolitan newspaper would also receive compensation based on $2,000 of their salary.

The farmer is also threatened by the bill and it would be well for them to make a thorough examination of its provisions. If a farmer is sued for damages, arising out of the death or injury of one of his employees, the present law allows him three defences. The farmer can plead that the accident was due to the carelessness of the employee himself, or to the negligence of another employer, or to one of the unavoidable risks of farming.

According to section 101 of the proposed law, the farmer would not be allowed to set up any of these defences. In other words, Sir William Meredith has greatly increased the farmer's liability for damages by removing his safeguards against litigation, and by exposing him to innumerable common law actions for unlimited damages.

"Industrial Canada" gives some illustrations of how this proposed new law would apply in case of certain accidents in farm or country life, for example:

"A farmer's hired man leaves a vicious bull carelessly tied. The bull gores another hired man. The proposed law would make the farmer liable for damages.

"Or, suppose the farmer's hired girl throws a piece of newspaper out of the door. The paper whirls in the wind, causing the farmers' horses to bolt and to injure the hired man who is driving them. Sir William Meredith would make the farmer liable for damages.

"Suppose that a farmer's team of horses run away because the hired man forgets to tie them. The man seizes the bridle of one of the horses is dragged, is thrown violently against a post, and is killed. If the jury choose to find from the evidence that the farmer was negligent in trusting the horses to the man's care, or that the harness was defective, or that the post was located in a dangerous position, the farmer would be made liable, although the jury, in this case, would be able to compare the negligence of the farmer with that of the hired man in estimating the damages and to fix the amount accordingly."

If these examples indicate the effects of the new proposals the bill ought to be thoroughly examined by those who are to be made responsible under its provisions for the life and health of other people. One of the chief objections to legislation of this kind is that it multiplies litigation and of course increases the clientele of the lawyer. This latter would not be an objectionable feature to lawyers. But in all such legislation, where unforseen complication may arise, the application of such provisions should be made as fair and as unambiguous as possible. A close study of the existing Workmen's Compensation Acts of Great Britain, and how they have worked out, would be of great assistance in the framing of any new legislation in this direction in Ontario. We might in this way profit by other people's mistakes.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THESE ARE THE DAYS when the girl behind the counter has some difficulty to keep smiling. This facial condition is monopolized by the proprietor who is raking in the shekels.

MONA LIZA has been found. This is the second time we have reported the finding of that lady. There may be some truth in what has been said of her, that she has a very wicked face. If she causes much more talk about herself in the papers Mrs. Pankhurst will be getting jealous.

ARTHUR HAWKES had a good deal of fun in South Lanark even if his campaign did not pan out as well as he anticipated in votes. The truth is that many South Lanark Liberals were pledged to Balderson before he intervened," says The Globe.

That is rather giving the game away. There was a Liberal candidate in South Lanark after all.

HON JAMES BRYCE, late British Ambassador to Washington, has been advising the Hindu to stay at home. He is not without hope that in time the present antagonism will pass away. It would be as well for him to stay in the Orient for the Winter, at least.

IT HAS NOT so far been suggested that Mr. Arthur Hawkes bribed the seventy men of South Lanark who voted for him on Saturday. But they certainty deserve a banquet now that the fight is over. It reflects discredit upon the voters of that constituency that only seventy of them believes in "Canada first and commonsense."

"FREE WHEAT, the navy and Sir Wilfrid's latest claim for inquiry into the high cost of living," were the chief issues discussed at the refought bye-election in Macdonald. The result is a definite reply in the negative from the west to Sir Wilfrid's policy.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

Hawkes and Rogers.

Lethbridge Herald.

To Arthur Hawkes was committed the responsibility of inquiring into Canada's immigration system in Great Britain. The man who selected him for the position was Hon Robert Rogers, then Minister of the Interior. Now we find Mr. Hawkes making this observation in a speech in the South Lanark bye-election:

> "Men with a reputation to lose, and anyone who enjoys a reputation in the old country, do not tie up with Hon. Robert Rogers," said Mr. Hawkes, referring to the reports circulated that he was an emissary of the Minister of Public Works.

About R. L. S.

Westminster Gazette

Stevenson's shabby dress and unshorn hair were not an affectation in him. They were the badge of a genuine carelessness, of a genuine lack of cash—for all that he had, in those days, was always at the disposal of his friends—and of a love of adventure that they helped him to gratify. Conventional attire, certainly, never suited him. He went from Hampstead to the Royal Academy with Sir Sidney once, wearing a frock coat, but carrying his silk hat in his hand "because it chafed him." He presented himself one morning at Sir Sidney's cottage in Norwood after rambling about all night trying to find a policeman who would arrest him as a rogue and a vagabond, by way of bearing out his contention that there was one law for the ragged and another for the respectable; but he had no success in the adventure.

End of the Universe.

The Mail.

In a lecture recently on "The Heat Action of Stars" Professor Henry N. Russell, of the department of astronomy at Princeton, declared that upon their creation the stars became hot, but are gradually cooling, and that the ultimate end of the universe, therefore, is absolute frigidity in the blackness of interstellar night.

"The stars existed first as rarefied comparatively nonluminous gases," said Professor Russell. "They gradually contracted, at the same time heating enormously, and when they had reached a semi-liquid, semi-gaseous state began gradually to cool off. This process means a gradual waste of energy in the form of heat radiation. Eventually the whole system will run down.

"The ultimate end of the universe, then, although inconceivably far off, is absolute frigidity in the blackness of interstellar night."

SWINDLED COMPOSERS

Music Company Led Them to Send in Good Money

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—Poets and songwriters from far and near are under subpoena to testify in the trial, begun yesterday, of Robt. J. Kellogg, president of the Kellogg Music Co. of this city, under indictment for using the mails to defraud.

The Government charges that Kellogg inserted advertisements in many periodicals offering to publish on liberal royalties poems and songs of all sorts. In some cases, it is alleged, the Kellogg Music Co. offered to set the songs to music. The advertisements lured many songwriters to reply, it is charged, and further correspondence induced some of them to send the Kellogg firm money on its representation that the songs sent in were masterpieces and would have wide popularity. The money, it is alleged, was to have been used in pushing the sale of the songs, but this was not done.

One of the songs cited by the Government as an illustration, was written by a Louisiana lawyer, with the sinking of the Titanic as his theme, "The Ocean Severed the Tie That Bound the Two in Twain," was the title of this composition. The author was informed that it was "a whale" and bound to make a hit.

Wood Alcohol Blamed.

NEW YORK, Dec. 16.—The New York committee on the prevention of blindness sounds an alarm by the report yesterday that more than half of the cases of eye weakness among men of this city may be traced to the barber shops. It is alleged that bay rum and other face lotions used in some shops contain wood alcohol, and that the inhalation of the fumes or drops of liquid in the eyes causes serious trouble. There is already a law prohibiting the use of such lotions, but the committee on blindness has found it to be rarely enforced. The aid of the inspectors of the health department has been summoned in the crusade to be waged for enforcement of the laws.

CHAPTER VI.

A BIT OF ROMANTIC HISTORY.

KARL BREITMANN! Private secretary to Rear Admiral Killigrew, retired.

Could there be two Breitmanns by the name of Karl? Here and there, across the world, he had heard of Breitmann, but never had he seen him since that meeting in Paris. And, simply because he had proved to be an enthusiastic student of Napoleon, like himself, he had taken the man to dinner. But that was nothing. Under the same circumstances he would have done the same thing again. There had been something fascinating about the fellow, either his voice or his manner. And there could be no doubting that he had been at ebb tide; the shiny coat, the white, but ragged linen, the cracked patent leathers.

A baron, and to reach the humble grade of private secretary to an eccentric millionaire—for the admiral, with all his kindliness and common sense, was eccentric—this was a fall. Where were his newspapers? There was a dignity to foreign work, even though in Europe the pay is small. There was trouble going on here and there, petty wars and political squabbles. Yes, where were his newspapers? Had he tried New York? If not, in that case, he—Fitzgerald—could be of some solid assistance. And Cathewe knew him, or had met him. Fitzgerald had buffeted the high and low places; he seldom made mistakes in judging men offhand, an art acquired only after many initial blunders. This man Breitmann was no sham; he was a scholar, a gentleman, a fine linguist, versed in politics and war. Well, the little mystery would be brushed aside in the morning. Breitmann would certainly recognize him.

But to have forgotten the girl! To have permitted a course of events to discover her! Shameful! He jumped into bed, and pulled the coverlet close to his nose, and was soon asleep, sleep broken by fantastic dreams, in which the past and present mixed with the improbable chances of the future. He slept soundly till 8.

On the way to the dining room, he met the man. The scars were a little deeper in color and the face was thinner, but there was no shadow of doubt in Fitzgerald's mind.

"Breitmann?" he said, with a friendly hand.

"It is you Fitzgerald? And what do you here?" extending both hands.

"Come in to breakfast," Fitzgerald said, "and I'll tell you."

"My table is here; sit by the window. Who was it said that the world is small?"

Fitzgerald spread his napkin over his knees. There was only one other man breakfasting. He was a small, wiry person, white of hair, and spectacled, and was at that moment curiously employed. He had pinned to the table a small butterfly, yellow, with tiny dots on the wings. He was critically inspecting his find through a jeweler's glass.

"I am visiting friends here," began Fitzgerald. "Rear Admiral Killigrew was an old friend of my father's. I did not expect to remain, but the admiral and his daughter insisted; so I am sending to New York for my luggage, and will go up this morning." He saw no reason for giving fuller details.

"So it must have been you who brought the admiral's note. It is fate. Thanks. Some day that casual dinner may give you good interest."

The little man with the butterfly bent lower over his prize.

"Do you believe in curses?" asked Breitmann.

"Ordinary, everyday curses, yes; but not in Roman anathemas."

"Neither of those. I mean the curse that sometimes dogs a man day and night—the curse of misfortune. I was hungry that night in Paris; I have been hungry many times since. I have held honorable places; today I become a servant at $75 a month and my bread and butter. A private secretary."

"But why aren't you with some newspaper?" asked Fitzgerald, breaking his eggs.

Breitmann drew up his shoulders. "For the same reason that I am renting my brains as a private secretary. None of them will employ me."

"In New York, with your credentials?"

"Even so."

"I don't quite understand."

"It would take too long to explain."

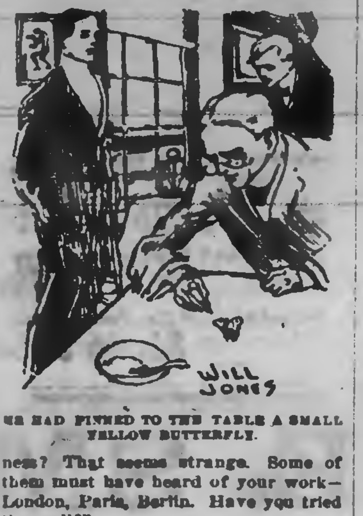
"I can give you some letters."

"Thank you. It would be useless. Secretly and subterraneously, I have had the bottom knocked out from under my feet. But no more of that. Some day I will give you my version."

The little man smiled over his butterfly, took out a wallet, something on the pattern of a fisherman's, and put the new found specimen into one of the mica compartments, in which other dead butterflies of variant beauty reposed.

"So I become a private secretary till the time offers something better." Breitmann stared at the sea.

"I am sorry. I wish I could help you. Better let me try." Fitzgerald stirred his coffee. "You are convinced that there is some cabal working against you in the newspaper business? That seems strange. Some of them must have heard of your work—London, Paris, Berlin. Have you tried them all?"



HE HAD PINNED TO THE TABLE A SMALL YELLOW BUTTERFLY.

"Yes. Nothing for me but promises as thick as yonder sands."

The little man rose and walked out of the room, smiling.

"Splendid!" he murmured. "What a specimen to add to my collection!"

"Do you know what your duties will be?" Fitzgerald inquired.

"They will consist of replying to begging letters from the needy and deserving, from crazy inventors and ministers. In the meantime I am to do translating, together with indexing a vast library devoted to pirates. Droll, isn't it?" Breitmann laughed, but this time without bitterness.

"It is a harmless hobby," rather resenting Breitmann's tone.

"More than that," quickly; "it is philanthropic, since it will employ me for some length of time."

"When do they expect you?"

"At half after 10."

"We'll go up together, then. Did you see the admiral's daughter?"

"A daughter? Has he one?" Breitmann accepted this news with an expression of disfavor.

"Yes, and charming, I can tell you. It's all very odd. In Paris that night they both sat at the next table."

"Why did you not speak to them?"

"Didn't know who they were. The admiral was one of my father's boyhood friends and I did not meet them till very recently," which was all true enough. For some unaccountable reason, Fitzgerald found that he was on guard. "I have ordered an open carriage. If you have any trunks, I can take them up for you."

"It will be good of you."

They proceeded to finish the repast, and then sought the office for their reckoning. Later they strolled toward the water front. Fitzgerald, during moments when the talk lagged, thought over the meeting. There was a false ring to it somewhere. If Breitmann had been turned down in all the offices in New York there must have been some good cause. Newspapers were not passing over men of this fellow's experience, unless he had been proved untrustworthy. Breitmann had not told him everything; he had even told him too little. Still, he would withhold his judgment till he heard from New York on the subject. Cathewe hadn't been enthusiastic over the name; but Cathewe was never inclined to enthusiasms.

Passing the angle of the freight depot brought the little harbor into full view. A fine white yacht lay tugging at her cables.

"There's a beauty," said Fitzgerald admiringly.

"She looks as if she could take care of herself. How fresh the green water line looks! She'll be fast in moderate weather; a fair thousand tons, perhaps."

"A close guess."

"I understand she belongs to my employer. I hope he takes the sea soon. I suppose you know that I have knocked about some as a sailor."

"That will help you into the good graces of the admiral."

The carriage was at the hotel when they returned. They bundled in their traps, and drove away.

The little man now dropped into the railway station and stuck his head into the ticket aperture. The agent, who was seated before the telegraph keys, looked up.

"No tickets before half past 10, sir."

"I am not wanting a ticket. I wish to know if I can send a cable from here."

"A cable? Sure. Where to?"

"Paris."

"Yes, sir. I telegraph it to the cable office in New York, and they do the rest. Here are some blanks."

To be continued.

A Preliminary Test of Skill

By MARK HAMMERTON

"I vill pig stick you!"

The words were addressed to me by a lieutenant in the German army. He was very young, his beard just sprouting, and since there had been no war between Germany and any other power since long before he was born he had had no way of letting off his surplus vim. We were in a beer garden, and he had been sitting at a table near one at which I sat with a party of American friends.

Getting up from his table, he walked past us, and, my foot being in his way, he took pains to stumble against it. Then, glaring down at me, he said in English:

"I vill pig stick you!"

"What does the fellow mean?"

"You've been challenged to fight a duel," said Washburn, an attache at the American legation. He had lived in Berlin a number of years and knew the ways of the inhabitants.

"He can send all the challenges he pleases," I said. "I'll pay no attention to them."

"In that case," Washburn replied, "you must give up the social stand you have prepared to take in Berlin. I shouldn't like to put you forward as I have promised unless you either fight young Donhoff, whom everybody knows and who is on intimate terms with the imperial family, or find some way out of the matter."

"What way out of the matter is there?"

"I'll think it over. I've helped several Americans out of such scrapes. By the bye, I think I'll try the plan by which I saved Albertson from getting a sword thrust between his ribs."

"What plan?"

"I didn't explain it till the affair was settled, nor will I tell you. Put yourself in my hands, ask no questions, and I think I can bring you out of this with honor, probably with eclat."

I assented, and he took a message from me to Donhoff. I was an American, and Americans did not fight duels. However, I was willing to fight under certain conditions, or, rather, I would prove myself more skillful than he. We would fire at a hen's egg at twenty paces. If he hit the egg oftener than I, I would stand up and permit him to shoot at me as long as he liked. If I hit the egg more times than he, he was to submit himself as a target for me.

The hot headed youngster accepted the conditions. Indeed, he was rather pleased at the novelty of the plan. Washburn arranged for a test of skill in a fencing academy and brought a basket of eggs to the place, which were to serve as targets. The affair being an unusual one, none of the safeguards common in duel preliminaries were taken. Washburn fixed the target, suspending the egg by a thread. Donhoff and I tossed for order of trial, and I won. Each principal was to deliver five shots, and the one who shattered more eggs than the other won.

The day before the test I could scarcely hit a barn door, but I practiced sufficiently to hit an egg at least once in five shots. On the trial I spattered the contents twice. Donhoff, who like all German army officers was a good marksman, looked upon my work with evident contempt. I missed the first and second shots, and as soon as I had done so he seemed to lose all interest in the contest. He had doubtless made a previous trial and discovered he could hit the egg every time.

I had been instructed by Washburn that when I beat Donhoff—and Washburn assured me that if his plan worked I would—I was immediately to renounce my right to make a target of him. Washburn hung an egg for him. He fired somewhat carelessly and missed. He was surprised especially at seeing the egg vibrating from the wind of the ball. He fired a second shot, this time aiming carefully. Again he missed, and again the egg danced. If now he hit the egg at every remaining shot he could still beat me. Though he took a long time to aim before the third shot, he missed it.

He could now only tie me. But he had become so irritated with himself that he was not capable of doing as good work as before. He missed the fourth and fifth shots, the egg at each successive shot vibrating less, indicating that his aim had grown less accurate. On missing the fifth shot he threw his pistol down with an oath.

Washburn shot me a glance, and I cried, "I renounce the right I have won!" and, hastening to Donhoff, put out my hand. He took it, muttering imprecations on himself for having been so clumsy. Then he and his party thanked me for my magnanimity and left the academy.

"By Jove!" exclaimed Washburn, sinking into a chair. "If those fellows had exercised one-tenth the care they would have taken in an ordinary duel I would have had to leave Berlin."

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"You fired at a solid egg. Donhoff at a shell from which I had drawn the contents. No ball will hit an empty eggshell. The wind will drive it aside every time."

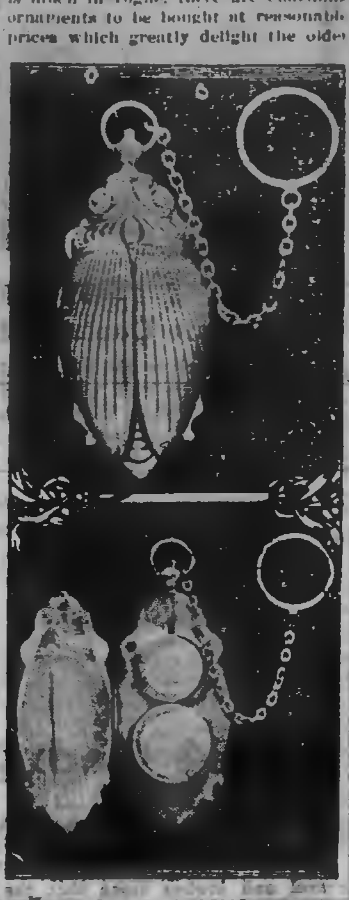
We had won by a Yankee trick, but since it was merely to avoid blood spilling our consciences did not trouble us. I entered Berlin society under Washburn's wing with great eclat. I feared that I would be called upon to maintain my championship, but was let severely alone.

The average man may have music in his soul but his voice spoils it.

Daily Christmas Hint

Suitable Jewelry Gift For Mother

Jewelry that is useful and at the same time handsome is always an acceptable gift for mother. In these days, when antique and French jewelry is much in vogue, there are charming ornaments to be bought at reasonable prices which greatly delight the older woman and add to the finish of her toilet.



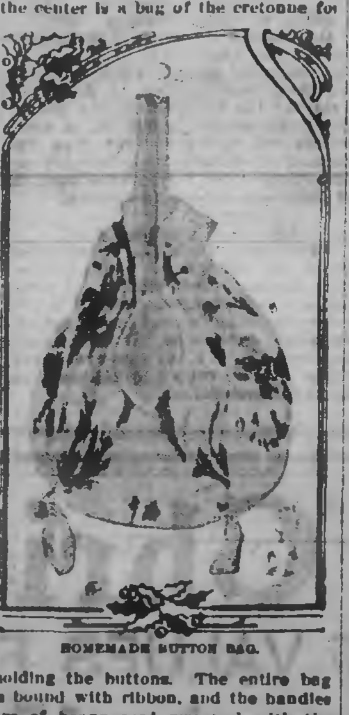
SCARAB COIN PURSE.

The purse illustrated is a very up to date addition to a woman's jewelry case. The design is an Egyptian scarab carried out in antique silver.

Inside there are two compartments for nickels and dimes, and the beetle is attached to the finger with a chain ring.

Present For the Woman Who Does the Mending

"Button, button—who's got a button?" will not be the cry if a bag like the one illustrated is given to the member of the family who does the household mending. Nothing more important in the way of materials is needed than a quarter of a yard of denim and some bright colored cretonne. The denim is used for the outside of the oblong strip and of the inside are compartments for scissors and spools of thread. In the center is a bag of the cretonne for holding the buttons. The entire bag is bound with ribbon, and the handles are of heavy cord wrapped with the ribbon.



HOMEMADE BUTTON BAG.

A yard of lawn or dimity makes a pretty remnant bag. Cut a strip eighteen inches wide and sew into shape. Sew lace about the edges and work a buttonhole at each side for the ribbon to run through, make a casing and run inch wide satin ribbon in, leaving enough to make a bow at each side. This bag is especially useful to a young mother for holding scraps of white trimming she accumulates for baby's use.

Needles of all sizes used in sewing on buttons should accompany the bag. Many of the ordinary needles are too thick to slip conveniently through the tiny eyes of small buttons. A paper of needles tested to make sure they are the proper sizes will be appreciated. So, too, will threads especially stout, but not too coarse for the needles. As a rule, linen thread is the best for this purpose.

For something a little different we now hear a great hue and cry about the high cost of holiday gifts.

Little does the average girl care who has the making of the nation's laws, so long as she knows who will buy her the most expensive presents.

They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a most terrific pain at the base of my skull. This pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to Inflammation of the Brain, but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. Birds Cut Steel Netting.

Few humans have any idea of the great power that the beaks of some birds possess, says the New York Zoological Society Bulletin. The bite of even the smaller of the order Psittaci is an unforgettable experience, and the macaws, the large gray, and many species of the green parrots inflict terrible wounds. The lower jaw is an impressive example of one of the forms of the lever and is limited in the extent of destructive ability only by the size of the bird.

When the large bird house in Bronx park was built, special cages were made for the macaws and parrots in Parrots' hall. The netting inclosing these cages was sufficiently strong to imprison securely a large monkey or even some of the smaller cats.

By steady application, the macaws cut out sections of this netting two and three feet long and from eight to twelve inches wide, affording an easy passage from one compartment to the next. To cut this netting, a workman is obliged to use heavy steel cutting pliers and considerable force. The netting was replaced with heavier material and thus far has resisted successfully all attacks upon it.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,267 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 28 years nearly 900 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

WHY LABOR HAS LEFT THE LIBERALS

Editor of The Review:

Sir,—Permit me to draw your attention to the following remarkable admission in Monday's Globe. The latter says editorially: "The British by-elections indicate that if the labor party desires to destroy the Liberal Government at the next general election, it will be able to do so, by launching a third candidate in all urban seats where the Liberals and Unionists are evenly matched." The answer to this piece of wonderment on the part of the chief Liberal organ is that labor has found that Free Trade means free trade in labor as well as in other commodities. Free trade in labor means a free labor market with all sorts and conditions of people in China, India, Africa, South America, etc., in open and free competition with the white man at home. Free trade puts the strong in possession of the weak, body and soul. Protection whilst not a perfect system by any means, preserves the home standard in all things. These are the two outstanding features of the two systems. That is why The Globe mourns over the attack of labor on Liberalism. For the very same reason the farmer is now attacking Liberalism which would sacrifice him and his work (as in England) to the rice-eating denizens of China or the naked savages of Northern Brazil or Central Africa. Protection looks to a perfect balance of the home market in food and manufactures with as high a standard of life as the people choose. In Free Trade countries the lowest grades of labor correspond precisely with their free trade rivals in the middle of the dark continent. While sometimes things go wrong even in protected countries the cause is not protection, but greed. The remedy is easily found and easily applied. Not so in the case of Free Trade.

THE $78,000 BRIDGE

Editor of The Review:

Sir,—In looking over the columns of your esteemed journal of date, December 12th, my attention was drawn to a letter signed "We Who Know" wherein the writer takes a slaps at yours humbly for being opposed to the by-law re the construction of a bridge at Dalhousie St., costing $78,000, to connect the south end of East Ward with the South Ward, where in the quotes the scripture text "to love thy neighbor." Let me say to my unknown friend that it is just because I love my neighbor that I am opposed to the bridge.

Let me point out for the benefit of "We Who Know" that there has been an agitation for some years going on re the building of a high level bridge at Hunter Street to avoid the dangers of the shunting to and from the mills of the Quaker Oats Co., and may the shunting ever increase to and from said mills.

As I was pointing out this agitation has been going on and will to my mind, continue till such times as said bridge is built and when built will be the main artery of communication between the East and West of our City. And, in the face of all this would it not become the height of folly for the citizens to vote the sum asked for to build a bridge, the terminus of which would be right in the midst of all the C. P. R. shunting to and from the Quaker Oats Mills to the freight sheds and yards of the railway, involving as it would the provision for a swing and gates at the crossing to protect the public.

Our correspondent points out what has already been advocated by The Review, that the Burnham's Point, Rink St., elevation is the place where a bridge should be placed if built.

And now sir, as this letter has grown beyond my original intention and with due apology for trespassing thus far upon your patience and the columns of your paper, I will leave the subject just here. And subscribe myself.

THE TANGO

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—We hear frequent rumors that Peterboro Society (or a certain section of it) is endeavoring to introduce the tango.

It is not the purpose of the writer to pass judgment on this much discussed craze, but call the attention of Peterboro society to places and institutions that deem it decidedly undesirable.

Press despatches indicate that the better class of English society has no place for the tango. It has been placed under the ban in both the English and German courts.

The Duchess of Connaught has set Canadian society a good example by excluding it at Rideau Hall. It is also excluded at Kingston Military College, Kingston Yacht Club and Queen's University social events. If the dance is objectionable in society circles of above standing, Peterboro society can well afford to let the craze pass or sink to its natural level.

While local attempts at its performance may have been more ludicrous than entertaining, we claim it is the first duty of society to provide the best in all classes of social intercourse.

Yours truly,
A FATHER.

GOOD ROADS

Editor, The Review:

Dear Sir,—This past summer I have been reading some things about good roads. Last June the auto fellows from your city took our councillors out for a joy ride and they talked good roads.

Our Warden when interviewed lately, talked good roads. Has Mr. Garbutt and our councillors even thought of having, say, six split log drags made and used to keep the gravel and broken stone that the autos crush off the roads, graded up to the centre, enough for summer roads.

The mail carrieds need good winter roads just as much as the auto men need good summer roads. Has our council ever thought of making a grant to the farmers to help put up wire fences where the snowdrifts block the roads in the winter? Every winter that there is much snow, there is a drift forms right at the corner of Mr. Garbutt's farm and the teams from the north can scarcely get through.

Has Mr. Garbutt ever asked Mr. Graham to take a few rails off his fence for the winter months, or better still, build a few rod of wire fence. When I write again Mr. Editor I will mention little things, such as putting on the little bridge over the House of Refuge creek, cutting brush in different parts of the township, cutting weeds on the concessions, etc. Thanking you for your valuable space, Mr. Editor,

Yours truly,
GOOD ROADS.

Hope To Make Prairies "Dry."

Stop-Over Privileges Cut.

CHICAGO, Dec. 16.—Because of the large number of country folks who become easy victims of pickpockets and confidence games in the large cities, the Central Passenger Association announced yesterday that, beginning Feb. 1, no stop-over privileges will be granted by railroads on homeseekers' tickets.

DEDICATING A CHURCH.

How Alberta's New Citizens Celebrated "Dobra" Day.

The Graphic, the popular London weekly, has an interesting article by Miriam Elston on "The Ruthenian invaders of Alberta," in a recent issue

"Dawn, dim and weird, was creeping in over the Albertan prairie," Miss Elston writes. "Only a faint, narrow rim of light, close to the eastern horizon, showed as yet on the sky. At some of the Ruthenian open air inns camp fires began to send up their tale of smoke. People who had come from very long distances and had to accept the pace of the oxen and some who had to tramp on foot for many a weary mile before the destination was reached, had covered part of the journey on the previous evening. Now they were astir and were replenishing their fires and eating their breakfast preparatory to continuing the last stage of their journey to the white church, with its one large and two small tin domes glittering in the occasional ray of sunshine that broke through the still threatening clouds.

"The people who made their way towards it felt in it the joy of possession. Many days of labor, when conditions for labor were hard, had some of them contributed towards the erection of their new church. To-day they were proud of their church, as it stood in its position of eminence on top of a hill, visible for many miles across the prairie, a mute invitation to worship. To-day it was to be dedicated to its holy uses. To participate in its ceremonies the people from far and near were gathering."

Miss Elston gives an interesting account of the subsequent ceremonies:

"I stood outside and watched the slow dispersing of the crowd. The processions, with their banners, again formed and took their separate ways home. The priest and people who had gone to the dividing of the trails with them came back singing. One by one the wagons received their human freight and rattled off across the prairie. Some still lingered to gossip. I turned to go home.

"Close beside the trail stood a sweet-faced Ruthenian maiden. She gave me smile for smile, and answered my salutation in a mixture of English and Ruthenian.

" 'It has been a big day.'

"By the aid of many gestures on my part, she grasped my meaning.

" 'It plenty much like old land. Many days and we no forget. It is dobra day.'

"I repeated the words to myself, for I had almost forgotten that I was only fifty miles from the capital city of Alberta."

J. J. HARTLEY
FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—At the earnest request of a large number of the ratepayers I have consented to be a candidate for the position of Mayor for the year 1914.

Being born and having lived all my life in Peterborough, and my whole life's savings being invested in Peterborough, I naturally have a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the City.

Should I be elected I promise you that I will guard to the very best of my ability, the interests of the ratepayers and will oppose all unnecessary expenditure. I will do my utmost to keep down the ever increasing rate of taxation consistent with needs of a growing City.

I may say that I am in favor of municipal ownership and am in favor of having all city work done by our own people instead of bringing in outsiders to do it. I will endeavor to see that the ratepayers get value for every dollar that is expended.

I have had considerable experience in municipal matters, having served ten years in the Council and fourteen years on the Board of Education, being Chairman of that Board for two years, I was also Chairman of the Board of Health for several years, so that you will see that I am not without a fair share of experience.

Should you do me the honor to elect me as Mayor of our City I will do my best to serve you to the extent of my ability.

Yours respectfully,
J. J. HARTLEY

GRAIN GROWERS OF WEST WAIT ON PREMIER TO-DAY

Demands Include a Fifty Per Cent Increase in the British Preference, Removal of Wheat Duty in Order to Secure Free Entry Into U. S., and Free Admittance of Implements.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16. — Representatives of the Western Grain Growers, together with Ontario delegates to the National Council of Agriculture, arrived yesterday and will be received to-day by the Prime Minister and the Cabinet. They are here to demand the removal of the duties upon wheat, flour and wheat products, free agricultural implements; a reduction in, or removal of the duties upon farm products, lumber and cement, and an immediate increase in the British preference.

A number of the matters to be dealt with to-day in respect of the tariff are to be found in the resolutions passed by the Western Grain Growers at Brandon last October, which declared as follows:

"1. That we urge the Parliament of Canada to increase at its first session, the British preference to at least 50 per cent., and to provide for a gradual increase from year to year until we have free trade with Great Britain in five years.

"2. That Parliament accept the offer of the United States of a free interchange of all agricultural and animal products between Canada and the United States.

"3. That all foodstuffs not provided for in the above offer of the United States be transferred to the free list.

"4. That agricultural implements, lumber and cement be transferred to the free list.

"5. That, pending the passage of legislation asked for herein, any duties now imposed under the Canadian customs tariff, which are the means of countervailing duties being imposed against any food products of the country by any foreign country, be immediately removed.

"6. That any tariff or trade concession granted to any other country be immediately extended to Great Britain."

Among the delegates are: C. E. Flatt, Tantallon, Sask.; J. A. Maharg, Moose Jaw, and F. W. Green, Moose Jaw, representing the Saskatchewan Grain Growers' Association; E. Carswell, Red Deer; Rice Sheppard, Edmonton, representing the United Farmers of Alberta; R. C. Henders, Culross; Roderick Mackenzie, Winnipeg, representing the Manitoba Grain Growers' Association; James McEwing, Drayton, and W. S. Good, [illegible], representing the Ontar[illegible]

WAS OLDEST ORANGEMAN

MILVERTON, Ont., Dec. 16.—Wm. Scott, the oldest Orangeman in the Province of Ontario, and probably in the Dominion of Canada, died at his home near here on Saturday, and his remains were interred in Greenwood Cemetery, Milverton, yesterday, under the auspices of the L.O.L. of the District of Mornington, of which he was for many years an honorary member. A large concourse of Orangemen were present, among them being Sheriff Magwood of Stratford, who took part in the service at the grave.

Mr. Scott was a native of Sligo, Ireland, and came to Canada in 1820. He is survived by his wife, but has no blood relations in America. He was in his ninety-fourth year and had been a member of the Orange Association for [illegible] seventy-four years.

IN SILHOUETTE.

Lady with the wistful eyes
  And the proud, elusive air,
Others haply criticise
  What you wear—or do not wear.
I am no fault finding churl.
  If your costume gives you glee
That's sufficient, lovely girl.
  You shall hear no wail from me.

Lady with the gauzy gown
  That the sunlight glimmers through,
Think not that I pause to frown
  Or hurl epithets at you.
It is not for me to say
  That your modesty is flown
If you wish to dress that way—
  Well, the risk is all your own

Lady with the filmy skirt
  Slashed an inch above the knee,
Do not think that I am hurt;
  You have not offended me.
But permit me, please, to add,
  Granting that you are divine,
That I am extremely glad
  You're no relative of mine.

BIG CRASH IS EXPECTED

Trade in Mexico City Peril of Breaking Down

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 16.—Business conditions here are exceedingly sluggish to-day in view of what is considered an impending crash. Merchants state that business during the holiday season will probably be less than in any month this year, leaving many concerns with a large supply of stocks on which they will be unable to realize even at a great loss. Practically all business houses to-day have posted a notice that they will not accept bills of the state banks in payment for purchases.

According to existing legislation the law does not require them to accept state bills, but it is expected that Huerta will soon issue a decree making the acceptance of state bills compulsory, as otherwise the loss would amount to many millions. The banks, except the Banco Central, which is the holding bank for the majority of state institutions, have posted a notice yesterday that they are accepting bills from the banks of Chihuahua, Guanajuato, San Luis Potosi Hidalgo, Queretaro, Cohulla and the Oriental of Puebla. It is expected that these will be followed by Sonora and Durango within the next few days. All these banks are subsidiaries of the Central, except the Oriental, Hidalgo and Sonora. The financial situation is considered extremely critical.

Tampico Is Normal.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—The following message, dated 2 p.m. yesterday, was received from Rear Admiral Fletcher: "Business resumed, and normal conditions Tampico and vicinity. Water supply renewed, and no indications of further disturbance. Cannot return refugees to Tampico until weather moderates. German steamer Cecelie leaves to-day. Logician will be delayed for present. Sumner will arrive [illegible] p.m., and Ward Liner will [illegible] Tuesday."

Antiquity of Football.

At Derby a game of football was played as early as the third century, in commemoration of a victory over the Roman legion at Chester. The first football used in the annual game, still played each Easter, is said to have been the head of a Danish invader. In the isle of Purbeck, too, says The London Chronicle, the free quarrymen from time immemorial have perpetrated their claim to a grant of land by kicking a football across it. In the 14th century the game was so popular as to call forth an edict forbidding it, on the ground that it interfered with the practice of more martial exercise. In later times Shakespeare referred contemptuously to the game, but perhaps few would be able to turn up readily the passage in King Lear describing "a base football player."

Knew His Man.

James MacNeill Whistler and Oscar Wilde did not love each other overmuch. Constantly they met in London drawing-rooms where each enjoyed a reputation as a wit, and it was not unnatural that jealousy sometimes fanned the fuel of their hate. On one occasion Whistler made a particularly apt remark that won applause even from Wilde. "By Jove, Whistler," he exclaimed, "I wish I had said that!" "Never mind," said Whistler, nonchalantly, "you will."

TWO QUAKES REPORTED

Serious Disturbance Felt in Pacific Island

NEW VOLCANOES

MELBOURNE, Australia, Dec. 16. —Despatches from Noumea, capital of the French Colony of New Caledonia, report that great destruction has been wrought by a volcanic eruption in Ambrim island, of the New Hebrides group. Six new craters were formed on the west coast Dec. 6. The following day Mount Minnie collapsed and many villages were overwhelmed by sterams of molten lava. The majority of the inhabitants sought refuge in canoes and boats, and a steamer rescued 600 of them.

No casualties are reported among the white population, whose numbers are small, but it is feared that many natives in the interior perished.

Ambrim Island is about 50 miles in circumference and is somewhat sparsely inhabited.

Violent Shock in Japan.

TOKIO, Dec. 16.—The strongest earthquake in several years occurred here yesterday and was felt over an extensive area. Houses in Tokio and Yokohama were violently rocked and the people were greatly alarmed. So far as can be learned there were no casualties, and the damage was confined to windows and bric-a-brac.

The yearly average earthquake record for Tokio is 96, according to the result of observations extending over 256 years. During the last 52 years only two severe shocks have been experienced, one in 1884 and the other ten years later.

Committed For Trial.

ST. CATHARINES, Dec. 16. — Dr. Hall, veterinary surgeon and agent of the General Animal Insurance Co. for Grimsby, and Harry Smith, of the same village, were yesterday committed for trial by Magistrate Campbell on the charge of conspiring to defraud the company out of $500 on account of a stallion named Don, valued at $1,600. No evidence was offered for the defence.

Pople Escapes Gallows.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 16.—Victor Pople, who was sentenced to hang for the murder of the infant daughter of Eva Willis, has been reprieved. His execution was to have been on Friday, but word was received in the city yesterday afternoon commuting the sentence to life imprisonment.

German Derelict Found.

EMDEN, Germany, Dec. 16. — An iron vessel floating bottom up off Schiermonnik-Cog, an island in the North Sea, is believed to be the German steamer Varvik from Lubeck. The pilot's body has been found, but there is no trace of the crew of 30.

PROVINCIAL GOVERNMENT PLANS REFORM SAYS RUMOR

Far-Reaching Proposals for Dealing With Fish Trust Are Mooted at Legislative Buildings---Licenses May be Revoked and Industry Carried on Under Direct Control of Government.

TORONTO, Dec. 16.—As a result of the speech made by Hon. W. J. Hanna last week that the Provincial Government might do some fishing on its own account, suggestion is made around the Parliament Buildings that the Government might enter the fishing business in provincial waters and sell the product at cost in municipal markets.

Inquiry in Government offices into the probable details of such a scheme elicited the information that this would be a death stroke at the operation of the fish trust in the provincial boundary waters. The most of the fish caught by Ontario fishermen are exported to U. S. markets, and it is considered that the Government has as good a right to prohibit the export of fish as the export of sawlogs. In that event the next step would be to withdraw all commercial licenses, and thus put an end to private commercial exploitation of the fish in Ontario.

This would make the Government the sole vendor of fish. With the view of organizing the service from the standpoint of science, only experienced or "legitimate" fishermen would be employed. Those who fish while the game is profitable, deplete a preserve and leave off when luck is poor, without regard to the restocking of the waters will have no part, and will be forced to give up. With this control of the fishing industry, the scheme as outlined provides for shipment to municipal distributing centres.

There is said to be no constitutional difficulty in the province prohibiting the export of fish.

While the consideration of this matter has not passed beyond a tentative stage it is probable that it will appear in some form before the Legislature when the House assembles in the New Year.

Manitoba Has Had Survey of Water Powers Made

OTTAWA, Dec. 16. — The water power branch of the Interior Department has just completed a report on the extensive water power potentialities of Manitoba based on the work of a staff of engineers who have been engaged on the investigation for the past six months and closely surveyed the streams in all parts of the province. The object of the report is to help the Government of Manitoba to decide whether it is wise for it to follow Ontario in the working out of a big public ownership hydro-electric scheme.

Mr. Justice Robson was appointed a commission to report on the whole problem, and it was at his request that the Interior Department sent out its engineers to report on the question of available water power.

Saskatchewan's Referendum.

REGINA, Sask., Dec. 16.—Provided that no fewer than fifty thousand Parliamentary electors of Saskatchewan cast ballots at a plebiscite on the second Monday in December next year on a bill for the abolition of the bar, the majority of the votes cast will ensure the enactment of the measure. Its passage will mean the closing of every bar, but will leave the wholesale dealers alone.

To Celebrate Centenary.

NIAGARA FALLS, Ont., Dec. 16.—Observance of the centenary of the Battle of Lundy's Lane on July 24, 1914, was planned by the Niagara Falls Historical Society at a meeting last night. Nothing definite was decided. Commemoration of the battle will take place on Drummond Hill, the scene of the struggle between the American and the British troops in 1814.

Currency Bill Has Majority in Test of Strength.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 16.—A victory for the Administration forces in the first test of strength on the currency reform bill marked yesterday's session of the Senate. The vote, 40 to 35, tabled a substitute offered by Senator Hitchcock, for section two of the Administration bill, proposing a system of four regional banks, with a possible increase to eight, the regional bank stock to be owned by the public.

The defeat of this amendment practically insured the adoption of the Owen plan, which provides for from eight to twelve regional banks, with the stock owned by the national banks that become members of the respective regional banks. The Democratic leaders claimed that the result of the test vote, involving one of the most important features of the fight, indicated the complete success of the Administration measure.

Chatham Ratepayers Defeat Two Money By-laws.

CHATHAM, Dec. 16.—Both the industrial site and Saginaw Match Co. bylaws were badly defeated yesterday by Chatham ratepayers. Only 272 voted for the industrial site, and opposed to it were 827. For the Match Company bylaw 549 were in favor and 550 opposed it. In order to carry the bylaws it was necessary to secure a two-thirds majority of the ratepayers voting. The industrial bylaw provided for the raising of $25,000 for the purchase of three acres in the western part of the city, and bordering on the industrial spur, for factory sites. The other was for bonusing the Sommers Bros.' Match Co. of Saginaw, Mich. The vote was comparatively small, and yet it was fair, considering that few rigs were out.

MYSTERY SHIP IS LAUNCHED

Cruiser "Tiger" Has Been Built in Greatest Secrecy.

GLASGOW, Dec. 16.—The British battle cruiser Tiger, known as the "mystery ship," was launched yesterday at the Clyde Bank shipbuilding works, where her keel plate was laid on June 20, 1912.

Details of the new vessel have been guarded most strictly by the Admiralty. It is known, however, that her engines are designed to give the hitherto unattempted horsepower of 100,000, calculated to develop a speed which will eclipse that of any naval vessel afloat.

Unofficial reports give the Tiger's dimension as: Length over all 700 feet, beam 90 feet, displacement about 30,000 tons.

Her armament is said to comprise eight 13.5 inch guns in pairs in turrets on centre line, and 12 6-inch guns in casements, with two 21-inch submerged torpedo tubes.

FIRE IN QUEBEC

QUEBEC, Dec. 16.—A fire which yesterday morning destroyed a boot and shoe factory, causing a loss of about $80,000, and throwing 450 hands out of employment, besides injuring a girl and two firemen.

Just as the employes in Tourigney & Marois' boot and shoe factory, at the corner of Arago and St. Vollier streets, were about to start work for the day, a fire was discovered in the stock room. An alarm was at once sent in, and on the arrival of the first section of the fire brigade two other alarms were given in quick succession.

Just after the fire started, Miss Cote, an employe, who was on the fourth floor, in endeavoring to reach the street, was overcome by smoke, and would certainly have lost her life had not a young man, Adolphe Duchaine, pushed his way up the stairs and brought her down safely.

Fireman O. Fortin was also overcome with smoke and had to be taken home. Fireman A. Godbout, while working on a ladder, at the second storey, fell to the ground and broke a thigh. He was sent to the Hotel Dieu Hospital.

Big Montreal Firm Fails.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16. — Brophy, Parsons & Rodden, Ltd., wholesale dry goods merchants of Victoria Square, went into liquidation yesterday. The statement of the liquidator estimates the assets at $264,000, and liabilities of $218,000.

BRANTFORD, Dec. 16.—James McKenzie, an old and highly-respected resident of this city, died at his home, 16 Read street, yesterday. He was born in Ireland 75 years ago, and had been a resident of Brantford for over fifty years.

Milkers and Springers.

Receipts of milkers and springers were moderate, and prices were very firm, ranging from $65 to $100 each. The bulk of sales ranged from $85 to $90 each.

Veal Calves.

The calf market was never stronger or prices higher. Choice veals, or, at least, the best on sale, sold at from $10 to $11.50; good at $9 to $10; medium, $7 to $8; common, $5.50 to $6.50.

Sheep and Lambs.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 15.—At the Montreal Stock Yards west end market, offerings this morning were 1600 cattle, 500 sheep and lambs, 1500 hogs and 300 calves.

This was Christmas market day, and consequently the display of cattle was quite large, but the percentage of extra choice and choice steers for this particular trade was smaller than in former years, and prices ruled much higher. The general feeling for all grades was stronger, and the advance in prices was fully 50c per 100 pounds. Two carloads of 20 head each, bought in the Toronto market at $10 per 100 pounds, or $4500 for the lot, were offered here at $10.50, for which buyers bid $10. Other sales of choice steers were made at $9 to $9.50 per 100 pounds. Good steers sold readily at $8.25 to $8.50, and fair stock ranged from $7 to $7.75 per 100 pounds. A much stronger feeling has prevailed in the market for all lines of small meats, owing to the limited supply and the keen demand for the same from both butchers and packers. Lambs advanced 50c to 75c, and sheep 25c to 50c per 100 pounds.

The tone of the market for hogs was stronger, owing to the small supply offered, and prices advanced 25c per 100 pounds.

Special Correspondence

OMEMEE, Dec. 16.—The Concert in Coronation Hall under the auspices of L.O.L. 113 on Xmas night, with such a long list of first class artists, promises to draw a record house if the weather be favorable. As there is no reserve for seats, it will be necessary to be early to have a choice.

The following Omemeeites were visitors to Peterboro on Friday:—Miss Johnston, Mrs. H. R. Murray, Mrs. John McCrea, Miss Lee, Messrs. Robert and Joseph Johnston.

The Farmers' Club met one evening last week in the Armouries. Mr. Joseph Bradley, the President, after a short address as chairman called on Mr. A. A. Knight B.S.A., of Lindsay, for an address on "Feeds and Feeding." The speaker outlined much practical and useful information on this essential qualification of mixed farming; a large audience listened to the discourse with marked attention. This being the annual meeting of the Club, officers were elected for the ensuing year as follows:

Pres.—Mr. D. H. Dick.
Vice.-Pres.—Mr. W. Burgess.
Sec.-Treas.—Mr. F. G. Sandy.
Directors—Messrs Isaac Fee and Robert Johnston.

The club bears the earmarks of a strong organization and the club promises to hold many meetings of interest during the winter season.

The meeting in the Presbyterian Church on Friday evening addressed by Rev. Mr. Eadie of Honan, China, brought out a fairly large audience who were enraptured with the intensely interesting theme of missionary life and enterprise in the Celestial Empire.

The Xmas meeting of the Omemee branch of the East Victoria Woman's Institute took place at the home of Mrs. John Sanderson on Thursday afternoon, Dec. 11th, 1913. There were 46 ladies present, many of whom were visitors and some of them became members. Mrs. Wm. Cottingham, the president, called the meeting to order, the first part being a full and lengthy report of the Provincial Convention which convened at Toronto on Nov. 20, and 21st, last. The representatives to the provincial meeting were Mrs. R. Cornwall and Mrs. Jos. Shield. There are 780 branches of the W. I. in Ontario with about 30,000 members. This society is fast becoming a recognized power in community work, child welfare, etc. During the convention telegrams of greeting were received from sister organizations in British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The report was listened to with great attention and was much appreciated by all present. Next followed a paper "Being Interested" read by Mrs. Jas. Sanderson, a visitor from the Mount Pleasant branch. Those following the advice given in this paper will never become old. Have a hobby of some kind and your heart will keep young. This paper was a real treat to everybody. Mrs. Dr. Irvine of Lindsay added to the list of good things by reading a humorous sketch from "A Spinner in the Sun." Just as the President was about to close the meeting, Miss Lila Parsons, on behalf of the members presented Mrs. Cottingham with three pretty pieces of silver, a cold meat fork, a pickle fork and a butter knife. Although Mrs. Cottingham was completely taken by surprise she thanked the members for the Xmas gift, in a few well chosen words. The meeting was brought to a close by singing the "National Anthem."

Last but not by any means the least, came the very dainty refreshments served by Mrs. Sanderson, who proved herself an ideal hostess. The members departed for their homes about 5:30 p.m. All agreeing that this had been one of the most successful in the local history of the Woman's Institute.

TO ARRANGE TREATY.

Final Attempt to Settle Fish Pact Is Under Way.

OTTAWA, Dec. 16.—What may be regarded as the final effort of Canada and the United States to reach an amicable and mutually satisfactory agreement as to the regulations for the future government of international inland fisheries, commenced here yesterday, with the arrival in Ottawa of Dr. Hugh M. Smith, chief commissioner of United States fisheries. If the present negotiations fail, then each country will just have to get along as best it can under the present friction-creating conditions.

Some three years ago the Washington authorities appointed Prof. David Starr Jordan as a commissioner to open negotiations with Ottawa, with a view to finding some satisfactory basis of agreement. A treaty was drafted but the U. S. refused to sign it without extensive alterations.

Some time ago Hon. J. D. Hazen warned the Washington authorities that unless they showed some sincere inclination to remove the difficulties which stood in the way of coming to an agreement, Canada would withdraw from the treaty altogether.

Recently President Wilson has shown evidence of a desire to reach an agreement, and the presence in Ottawa of Dr. Hugh Smith points to a speedy termination of the difficulties.

May Be Discussing "Holiday."

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Winston Spencer Churchill, First Lord of the Admiralty, will spend a three weeks' Christmas vacation in Germany, on what is described as a private visit. On the way to Germany he will spend two or three days in Paris, presumably to become acquainted with the new Ministers.

Much curiosity has been aroused as to whether Mr. Churchill's visit is connected in any way with his recent proposals for a "naval holiday."

Wife Wants Alimony.

WELLAND, Dec. 16. — Setting forth in her statement of claim that her husband, August Kleiner, forced her to do all the farm work and chores and that he greviously abused her, Mrs. Helen Kleiner of Humberstone Township, is bringing action against him for alimony. The case will be heard in high court to-day by Justice Latchford.

PICTURES UNDER GLASS.

A Scheme That is Ruining Valuable Paintings in the Louvre.

The Louvre museum has been unfortunate with its Leonardo da Vinci paintings. The "Mona Lisa" was stolen some time ago, and now a picture of St Anne by the same artist has been attacked by parasitical growths attributed to the dampness that collects between the glass and the canvass. It will be recalled that after several pictures had been slashed by maniacs the Louvre authorities decided to cover the most valuable paintings with glass. This innovation brought forth a storm of protest. An ingenious reporter stationed himself in front of one masterpiece and proceeded to shave himself and when an attendant interfered he explained that he wished to show that the pictures were still of use. The authorities, however, refused to give way and the glass has remained for almost four years.

The Louvre experts have now discovered that this innovation has been disastrous in that the glass retains the humidity and this humidity, under the effect of heat, evaporates and disintegrates the paint.

The technical service of the museum proposes to try a new method of covering the pictures with glass which will allow the air to circulate freely.

Meanwhile the glass has been removed from many of the pictures, especially those that are not within reach of visitors to the museum. The Louvre's latest acquisition, Van der Weyden's triptych, for which $100,000 was paid, is under glass, and as it is placed opposite a window, it is often impossible to see more than a reflection of the window curtains.—New York Sun.

Ouch!

"Why am I gloomy?" demanded the undesirable admirer, to whom she had given the cut direct. "Isn't it enough to make one gloomy to be cut by one he loves best?"

"The idea!" exclaimed the heartless girl. "I didn't even know that you shaved yourself."—Catholic Standard and Times.

ROMANCE OF ANTICOSTI

LATE HENRI MENIER RULED ISLAND LIKE A KING.

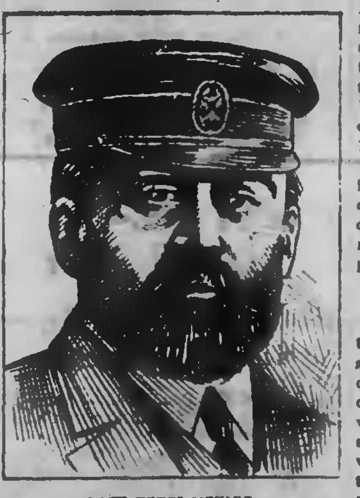
French Chocolate Magnate Bought Territory In Gulf of St. Lawrence and Fell Foul of Quebec Government by Ejecting Fishermen—He Had a Wonderful Palace In the Wilderness.

When Henri Menier, the French chocolate king, died in Paris in September, there passed away a man who was more of an absolute sovereign over a large territory than eighteen or twenty of the rulers of Europe. Yet he was never crowned as king nor elected as chief executive. He simply owned outright in the Gulf of St. Lawrence the beautiful island of Anticosti, 140 miles long and 27 miles wide.

The area of Anticostil is 3,780 square miles. Menier bought it outright in 1896 from the Island of Anticosti Co., Ltd., of London, a bankrupt concern. The company had paid a round million for it and had planned all sorts of money making things that never came to pass. Menier passed over his $160,000 and for it secured the title to the entire island, carrying with it the right to do there whatever he pleased and how and when he pleased.

Menier planned improvements on a stupendous scale. First it was to be a mammoth game preserve. The island wilderness swarmed with red deer, caribou, brown bear, and red fox. He would make it the hunter's paradise. His Parisian friends hailed his decision with delight. But later his enthusiasm waned somewhat, for he found that while a visit to Anticosti was declared to be just the right thing on the boulevards, when it came to taking the trip most of his companions balked at the eleventh hour.

The industrial possibilities then seemed to dawn upon Menier. The adjacent waters were full of cod, herring, mackerel, sea trout, and salmon.



LATE HENRI MENIER.

And the lobsters were the best in the world. And the woods were full of fur-bearing animals that would bring the highest prices. Menier would start in making more money to add to the many millions he had.

To carry on the proposed industries it was necessary to colonize. Menier induced hundreds of families to emigrate to the island direct from France. Then he added a number of French families from the Gaspe district of Quebec. Finally, he let in some English and Scotch families, although he did this reluctantly, because the supply of French colonists was not sufficient to carry on the work planned. He could not help showing his French partiality, however.

This partiality nearly brought on a hot time with the Quebec Government. Menier issued an order that no workman engaged upon the island would be permitted to use intoxicating beverages except the French. A roar of indignation went up from the English and Scotch. They called on Menier in a body.

He treated them with scorn, curtly informing them, king fashion, that it was his will the French should drink, and no others. To his associates, however, he stated the reason for exempting the French was that they of all nations, knew best how to treat alcohol. The English and Scotch workmen finally submitted, although there was a rumble and a grumble for a long time. The penalty of deportation if they drank was the strong check on them.

On the spot where the wreckers had established their lair, Menier built him a magnificent mansion of an architectural style comporting with the wild scene. It was a wilderness palace. He drew the plans himself down to the smallest detail. One oddity of his in connection with the interior work was that all parts of wood and iron should be screwed down. Not a nail or rivet was used.

Before his death the ruler of Anticosti constructed magnificent roads through the forests, that, because of their adaptation to the many scenic beauties, have been declared highway marvels. He built many houses and erected plants for the various industries he fostered that have no equal elsewhere. The lobster packing industry became one of the greatest in the world.

Menier achieved distinction in many walks of life. He was an energetic Arctic explorer and planned always to have his island a depot and fitting out place for expeditions to the frozen north. He was a photographer of rare ability and an expert and daring yachtsman. His great fortune had been made in chocolate. Distinguished as he was in many ways, and honored by his country, his most striking accomplishment was the ruling and development of his island kingdom, the wilderness of Anticosti.

Apples and asparagus are among the vegetables most easily digested.

PLAINT OF A NOISE HATER.

This Rich Man Would Like to Kill a Whole Lot of People.

As a public protest against shrieking motor horns and yelping dogs a retired Manchester merchant has canceled a bequest of £30,000 to the local hospitals. Writing to the London Mail, says:

"I have become so disgusted by the stupidity of the authorities who allow the health of the people to be ruined by fiendish noises from motorcars, yelping dogs, etc., that I have made up my mind as a protest to cancel a bequest in my will of £30,000 to Manchester hospitals. I shall divert the money to other channels, where I hope it will be put to better use than patching up people who do not appear to have sense enough to protest against these brutal and unnecessary nuisances, which are destroying the health of thousands of people, including myself.

"I am suffering from nervous irritation, and for seven years I have been seeking some place where I can be quiet. I have lived in London, Manchester, Southport and St. Anns-on-the-Sea. They are all bad. Now I am going to live in Cheltenham. The town clerk there assures me they have bylaws against yelping dogs, bawling hawkers, shrieking motorcar horns and crowing fowls. If these bylaws are not properly enforced at Cheltenham I shall go to live in the Hartz mountains under a sensible government. I have not definitely decided what I shall do with my money. I would like to spend it all on powder and shot for the people who make and encourage unnecessary noise."

No Cure For Cancer Yet.

In his annual report Dr. E. F. Bashford, general superintendent of research in the laboratories of the imperial cancer research fund, told the members of the society that during the past year there had been twelve claims to the discovery of a cure for cancer. All of these had been investigated and no justification for any one of these claims had been obtained. Dr. Bashford also said women were more liable to cancer than men. In England and Wales in 1910 the death rate from cancer was 856 per million for men and 1,070 for women.

As the London Times says editorially in commenting upon this report, "The only reasonable expectation of curing cancer still rests upon its complete removal by the surgeon at the earliest possible time after it is discovered."

New Words For China.

One of the most curious features of the awakening of China is the necessity which has arisen for the addition of new words to the language. This does not mean merely names for such western importations as motorcars, aeroplanes, cinematographs, etc., but words which have had to be invented to express ideas hitherto unknown to the Chinese mind. For instance, China had no indigenous word for "ideal." Again, "reform" had to be built up as an entirely new word, as also "to take the initiative," "protection of life" and "educate" as different from "instruct"—instances which throw a vivid light on certain aspects of the Chinese temperament.

A Prize Worth Winning.

Russia is inviting the attention of the men of letters of all countries to the fact that the most valuable literary prise ever offered is now open to competition. The subject appointed is a study of the life and work of Czar Alexander I., and the prize fund was deposited in the Bank of St. Petersburg by Alexander's minister, Araktcheef, in 1833, with directions that it should accumulate at compound interest until the year 1925. The first prize, it is computed, will then amount to about £200,000, while a further sum of nearly £100,000 will be distributed in consolation prizes.—London Mail.

Gratitude.

"I helped an intoxicated man out of the gutter several weeks ago and put him aboard a car."

"Yes?"

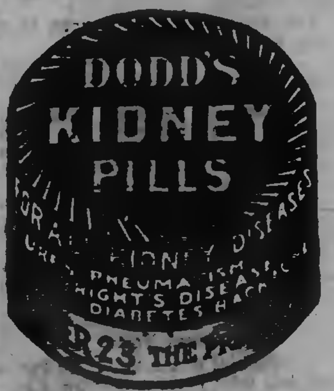
"The other day he wrote to the police asking them to find my address."

"Ah, I see. He wants to force $10,000 on you."

"No. He says be thinks I must have pinched his watch."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Advices from the national department of agriculture to "eat what you like when you feel like it" is not worth much to those who do not know where to get money enough to follow such advice.

"Love never lasts more than five years," says a lady who appears to have devoted some study to the subject. Perhaps it isn't as bad as she would have us believe it to be. She may have got her information from Nat Goodwin or De Wolf Hopper.



News that the crow is the farmer's friend excites only a languid interest in political circles.

REPORT OF SECRETARY TO W.M.S. OF ST. PAUL'S CHURCH

Years Work When Reviewed Shows Much Work Has Been Accomplished

The report of the secretary and the financial statement presented at the annual meeting of St. Paul's church W.F.M.S., were as follows:

Secretary's Report.

To the President and Members of St. Paul's W.F.M.S:

In the Providence of God another year of service has gone and in reviewing the work of this, the 37th year of our Auxiliary, your officers are pleased to report quiet steady progress, the result of faithful effort, and willing service on the part of the membership, and return thanks to God for His goodness and mercy.

The work of our Auxiliary has been conducted along practically the same lines as in former years, the meetings being held regularly throughout the year on the second Friday of the month, with the exception of August, with an average attendance of 57, being a slight decrease, which is to be regretted. We again urge all members to make an effort to be present at the monthly meetings, as faithful stewards, determined to meet the obligations we have assumed, and uphold the work for which we stand responsible.

The annual prayer meeting for missions was held on Jan 10th, in this church, and this year took the form of a union meeting of the three auxiliaries of St. Andrew's, Knox and our own church. Beginning the year's work with this meeting of prayer and consecration means a spiritual uplift to those who are privileged to attend, but we must remember our prayers for missions are real only when we do what we can to further the cause of missions.

Presbyterial Meeting.

The annual Presbyterial meeting was held in this church on the 21st and 22nd of May. The attendance was large and the statement of the year's work very satisfactory. At this meeting we were privileged to have with us Dr. MacKellar, of India, who gave a graphic word picture of the "Needs of India," and the condition under which the women of India live, and a most urgent appeal for many more workers for the foreign field.

At our last annual meeting we were fortunate in having with us Miss Robson, now working among the Chinese in Toronto, but formerly connected with the "China Inland Mission."

The North West supplies were sent to the "Cecilia Jeffery School" this year, and the response to this request was most generous, consisting of a bale of old and new clothing, and other supplies valued at $56.17 and a cash donation of $6.15 for boots.

The Literature Secretary reports the distribution of 110 "Tidings."

The Interior was again sent to our missionaries in India, and the Missionary Review taken for the use of this Auxiliary.

A Splendid Offering

The annual Thank offering meeting which is held in October, is still a special feature in the year's work and it is very gratifying to report this year the largest offering in the history of the Society, the amount being $768.60. This splendid offering is an evidence of the sympathetic co-operation of many who are unable to attend the meetings and we desire to thank all who have contributed so liberally to this fund.

The Text Book "China's New Day" has been studied throughout the year, and most instructive papers have been prepared by the members, and we regret that all of the women of the church do not attend and receive the benefit. The marvellous awakening in China today is no doubt in part the result of faithful seed-sowing, and this vast Empire shaking off its slumbers and realizing its giant strength must have the Christian ideal of life or prove a menace to the world. Dr. Grant says "Let us capture China for Christ and we will have won the world for Christ." May we all realize the meaning of this urgent appeal, and determine our attitude in regard to the work for the coming year.

Increased Membership

We are pleased to report an increase in membership of 5, the number now being 134.

This is most encouraging and we hope to be able to register a substantial increase from year to year until every woman in the congregation becomes a member.

We again mourn the loss of two faithful members, whom a loving Father has called home. Mrs. Geo. Taylor, who departed this life in June last, was an interested member of this Auxiliary, and in loving memory of her interest in the work, her usual Thank-offering was handed in by members of her family. Again this year a great sorrow has come to our Auxiliary just before our annual meeting. A few days ago Mrs. Wm. Taylor, a friend and co-worker was called to higher service. We desire to express to the sorrowing friends our warmest sympathy and deep appreciation of their faithful lives. While the year's work has been most satisfactory, and we rejoice at the progress made, we cannot afford to stand still in these progressive and stirring times, when opportunities are many at home and abroad, the doors of foreign countries are open to those who will carry the vitalizing power of the Gospel message, but perhaps the greatest need of today is trained teachers, and doctors to carry on the work in these non-Christian lands. The women of these foreign lands face a danger-line today, though the new-born ideas of liberty, they need our help for the sake of the future of these great lands, for who can estimate the power of a Christian womanhood in moulding the new India, or the new China, or the new Japan for Christ.

If the motto of our Society, "The World for Christ" is to be realized, it will be because Christian women have understood the meaning of service and are willing to serve, rather than be served.

F. Harstone
Secretary.

ROSELLE KNOTT ASKS FOR $9,940

Says She Loaned $10,000 to Her Former Husband.

The following dispatch from New York concerning Rosselle Knott, the actress and Ernest J. Shipman, will be read with interest:

With the assertion that she is afraid old age will overtake her before she can collect her money unless the courts intervene, Miss Roselle Knott, a former star, and also former wife of Ernest J. Shipman, the theatrical manager, filed suit yesterday for $9,940 against her ex-spouse.

During the happy days of their marriage life and when Shipman was a producing manager, Miss Knott declares she loaned him $10,000. This was on March 21, 1907. Her husband promised faithfully to repay the advance, it is alleged.

He has been doing it on the instalment plan, however, at the rate of $10 a year, and has paid $60 to date, the papers charge. Per this schedule Miss Knott figures out it would be—well, several more years before she collected even the first thousand, and called in Attorney Abraham C. Cohen to assist her.

The lawyer said that Shipman had dropped considerable money in his various productions, and has sunk a young fortune in trying to send the Kilties' band to Australia.

Mr. Shipman was formerly a member of the firm of Shipman Brothers, who fostered touring attractions several years ago, with Miss Knott as one of their principal stars.

FUNDS FOR "SALOME" COMPANY WERE LOW

The "Salome" Company, backed by Sheehan and Beck of Chicago, went on the rocks at Hamilton, after the performance on Saturday. Many of the players were stranded and the wires were kept busy with messages to home appealing for funds. The company has been up against it for some time, and few of the players got their full salaries, most of them having to content themselves with just enough to live on.

TO CUT THE LAW'S DELAYS

British Commission Reports on Legal Obstructions

LONDON, Dec. 16. — Sweeping changes in the administration of law are recommended by the royal commission on Delay in Law Courts whose final report was issued last night. Some of the most striking proposals are: Abolition of grand juries; long vacation to be reduced to two months; no Assize to be held unless there are three prisoners; judges in London to sit longer hours; "speedy trial list" to be formed of cases where there is no defence; judges to retire at the age of [illegible] years, or after six months' absence; judges to be allowed on to retire after ten years' service on condition that they serve if they are called upon during such a period as would make up fifteen years' service; all retired judges to be supernumerary judges; pensions after five years' service or less to be £1,500, with £200 a year extra for every extra year's service, the maximum to be £3,500 i.e., fifteen years' service. Circuit judges, when unable to sit through illness or other cause, will be relieved at once by a supernumerary judge or commissioner, no judge to be sent from London or diverted from the regular work in London.

In London the supernumerary judge will be called in if necessary in case of temporary illness. The Court of Criminal Appeal is to have power to order a new trial.

Dealing with delays in London and lengthy trials, reference is made to the growing tendency to adjourn cases for the convenience of fashionable counsel," who like to "spread themselves over a trial for weeks." There will be little disagreement with the chief proposals of the report.

Intrigue Against Churchill?

LONDON, Dec. 16.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—The Liverpool Courier, which is often well informed on inner political movements, gives prominence yesterday to a story of an intrigue against Hon. Winston Churchill which is alleged to be proceding amongst the Liberal party. The Courier points out how several most important ministerial papers have recently shown a hostile attitude towards Churchill and prophesies that he will eventually leave the Ministry to form an independent following.

Bullet Through His Chest.

WOODSTOCK, Dec. 16. — While out with two companions Scott Pettit was accidentally shot through the chest over the left lung and now lies in the General Hospital here, in a somewhat serious condition. It appears that one of his companions was carrying a revolver, and in pulling it out of his hip pocket it was discharged, the bullet striking Pettit in the chest. Unless complications set in, owing to the surgeons not being able to trace the bullet, the boy's condition is satisfactory at present.

On a Sleep Strike.

LONDON, Dec. 16.—Miss Sylvia Pankhurst, the militant suffragette agitator, since her incarceration on Dec. 10, has adopted the more drastic method of adding a "sleep strike" to her "hunger and thirst strike."

According to some of her comrades of the militant suffragette organization, she accomplishes this by continually walking, and one of her friends says she expects her release shortly as she must be on the point of collapse by this time.

POISONING NOT THE CAUSE OF MRS. GRIFFIN'S DEATH

Evidence at Inquest in Hamilton Does not Throw any New Light on Death of Former Peterboro People

HAMILTON, Dec. 17.—The inquest into the death of Mrs. Mary Alice Griffin, who died on November 16, three days after the death of her sister, both apparently from the same mysterious cause, threw no light whatever on the baffling case. The medical men of the city were greatly interested over the case, and had hoped for some enlightenment at the inquest, which was conducted by Coroner R. Y. Parry.

The verdict as handed in by the jury after ten minutes' deliberation, read as follows:

"We are unable from the evidence submitted to determine the cause of the death of Mrs. Mary Alice Griffin, who died in this city, November 16, 1913."

The letter from the analyst who examined the contents of Mrs. Griffin's stomach follows:

"I beg to report that after an exhaustive examination I am unable to detect any poisonous material in the viscera of Mrs. Griffin recently submitted to me by Detective Bleakley."

(Signed) "L. Joslyn Rogers,
"University of Toronto."

Dr. J. V. Parry, the first witness called, after explaining technically so far as he was able the cause of death said in response to a question asked him by Juror Knox: "It seems to me that it was a poison of some kind which caused death."

Dr. R. Y. Parry was then called to the stand. He said: "The case was an exceedingly obscure one. The only thing I can suggest from the symptoms was poison, perhaps from intestinal sources, perhaps from other sources."

J. H. Robinson, undertaker, was the next witness. The nurse, he said, had arranged the body before he arrived. The woman had been dead several hours when he arrived.

James Griffin, husband of the deceased, was then called to the witness box. He said that he had had the smallpox in July, and that both his wife and sister-in-law had been vaccinated by Dr. Peters at the time. Two months later he said his wife commenced complaining of gastronomical ailments. He said her limbs became numb and she was troubled with considerable reaching.

Cross-examined, Mr. Griffin stated that his wife had had no recent insurance of large amount taken out, although two weeks before death she had added five cents to a weekly fifteen cent insurance policy.

The deceased, he said, was in the habit of eating canned goods frequently.

Miss Alice Ridge, a friend of deceased, next testified. She said she was intimate with the dead woman. The latter had told her that she felt she was going to succumb to the effects either of vaccination or the disease, smallpox, itself.

She added: "It is my opinion that the disease got into her system during vaccination."

Miss Ridge, a nurse for nine years accredited death to the smallpox germs.

Mrs. Nellie Renton, the next witness, is a sister of the deceased. She stated that both her sisters had complained of the effects of vaccination.

Dr. Roberts M.H.O., was the only physician who, she said, would come into the house at the time of the smallpox illness.

George Forsythe, father of the dead woman, could throw no light upon the cause of death.

This closed the evidence.

In giving the case to the jury, Coroner Parry said that the medical men of the city were greatly mystified over the case, and that the pathologists of Toronto had been unable to ascertain the cause of death. He said that death would not have been so sudden, in his opinion, if it were caused by the vaccine.

"I think that death was caused from what evidence we have, by some unknown cause."

He placed no credence in either the theories fo canned goods or bad plumbing poison, both of which he said, would have been detected; and he also tabooed the vaccination theory.

Peterboro Company Takes Action Against a Former President

Welland, Dec. 17.—An action which will be heard to-day in the High Court, is brought by the Big Dipper Mining and Milling Company, of Peterborough, against John M. Fletcher, a former president of the company, charging him with converting some of the money he received for stock to his own purposes, and asking that the court order that this money be returned back to the company. The three amounts mentioned are $4,000, $1,000 and $250, which it is alleged to have received from different parties.

The defendant denies that he received all the money he is credited with receiving, and states that that which he did receive was turned in. His resignation as president of the company was tendered and accepted before the date of some of the deals alleged to have taken place.

HYDRO LIGHTS TONIGHT

Ald. W. J. Johnston, chairman of the Power Committee, wore a huge smile when a Review reporter accosted him this afternoon and asked for information regarding the new lights.

Ald. Johnston said all was in readiness for turning on the power tonight and that at eight o'clock, his Worship the Mayor would press the button at the corner of Charlotte and George streets.

It will be eight o'clock sharp, so citizens who wish to take part in the festivities, should be on hand on time.

At the busy corner, members of the Council will be present and short addresses will be made.

A PROPOSAL BEFORE COUNCIL

For Continuing Power Service to Otonabee Company's Customers.

MEETING TO-NIGHT

Mr. W. G. Ferguson, president of the Otonabee Power Company, said to-day in regard to the reported statement of Alderman Buller, that a meeting between the Electric Power Co. and the Hydro Electric Commission was held yesterday to arrange for providing light and power for the Otonabee customers, that no meeting regarding Otonabee matters had been held or ever contemplated as far as the Electric Power officials knew, but he stated that he had to-day been in communication with Mr. Colville, the vice-president of the Electric Power Co., and that a joint communication from the Otonabee Power Co., and the Peterborough Light and Power Co., will be placed in the hands of the Council to-night, containing a proposal that will insure continued service to the Otonabee customers until such time as the city obtained possession of the plant of the Peterborough Light and Power Co. Mr. Ferguson further stated that in his opinion the proposal was such a fair and reasonable one that he had no doubt the Council would consent to it, and the citizent using Otonabee power would therefore be caused no loss or inconvenience.

SAY PLANT IS WORTH $600,000

The expropriation case of the Peterborough Light and Power Company and the city was adjourned this afternoon indefinitely by Judge Huycke.

Affidavits produced by the company are to the effect that the estimated value of their property is worth in the neighborhood of $600,000 while the city's offer is only $95,000.

A. B. Colville of Toronto acted for the Company and City Solicitor Hall for the city.

THE TOLL OF THL GREAT LAKES

Twenty Boats and 275 Lives Were Lost This Season.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 16.—In the 1913 season of navigation on the Great Lakes now closing, 20 boats ended their existence, about 275 lives were lost and 300 or more minor accidents occurred.

In 1912, 35 lives were lost, 19 vessels were wrecked and 200 minor accidents occurred.

The most important loss of the season in 1912 was the sinking of the steamer James Gayley on Lake Superior by collision with the steamer Rennsselaer, the combined loss of ship and cargo being $300,000, while this season there were seven losses, each of which exceeded that amount.

The loss of life would have been comparatively small this year had it not been for the big storm of November 9-11 when all of the year's losses of life except seven were recorded. The seven were lost in nearly as many accidents.

An approximate estimate places the total money loss of the season of 1913 at about $7,987,000, including loss of cargoes, damage by collision and stranding.

This is undoubtedly the biggest season's loss ever recorded on the Lakes and is more remarkable that it occurred largely at one time.

The total financial loss to steamers and cargoes, aside from this storm, would hardly have exceeded $1,000,000.

CATTLE DROVER GORED BY BULL

Men With Pitchforks Saved Him From Death.

PORT HOPE. Dec. 17.—Mr. William Giddy, cattle drover, Ridout St., met with a very serious accident yesterday morning. While going along the gangway in the Montreal cattle yards, he was knocked down by an enraged bull.

The horn of the infuriated beast pierced Mr. Giddy's thigh, inflicting a long gash. Mr. Giddy also suffered painful injuries about the back and side. The timely arrival of two men with pitchforks no doubt saved him from fatal injuries. Mr. Giddy is resting quite comfortably today and his many friends hope for a speedy recovery.

NOTED PRELATE PASSES AWAY

Cardinal Mariano Rampolla Dies at Rome.

ROME, Dec. 17.—Cardinal Rampolla, former Papal Secretary of State, died last night.

Cardinal Mariano Rampolla (Count del Tindaro) was born at Polizzi, Sicily, in August, 1843. He entered the Papal service in 1870; became Counsellor of the Papal Embassy at Madrid in 1875, and Papal Nuncio at Madrid in 1882. He became Cardinal-priest and the Secretary of State in 1887.

Cardinal Rampolla was appointed Secretary of State by Pope Leo XIII., and at the conclave for the election of a successor to Pope Leo was the predominant figure until Austria exercised an old prerogative, the right to enter an objection to the election of a given candidate for the Papacy. Cardinal Rampolla led on the first and second votes.

CARDINAL RAMPOLLA.

Of late Cardinal Rampolla figured as a possible successor to Pope Pius. Since the conclave Cardinal Rampolla had lived in retirement in the Palace of St. Martha, just behind St. Peter's, and had devoted his time to the departments dealing with matters of doctrine, dogma, and internal administration of the Church, holding aloof from affairs pertaining to the foreign relations of the Holy See.

MEAT PRICES GO UP AT LINDSAY

Beef and veal prices advanced in all the local butcher shops this morning from two to three cents per pound, the direct cause being the scarcity of good beef cattle and veal. Porterhouse steak and sirloin this morning sold at 25 cents per pound with other cuts up in proportion.—Lindsay Warder.

PETITIONERS ASK FOR EXTENSIONS BY STREET RAILWAY TO THE RIVER

Want the Line Continued South, on the Monaghan Road --- Other Business Before Township Council

The regular meeting of the North Monaghan council was held on December 15th, in May's school house, at 7 p.m. All the members were present, Reeve Howden presiding.

The first business dealt with by the council was the reception of a very representative delegation composed of Mr. E. A. Dixon, who presented a largely signed petition, Mr. Alex Gordon, Mr. H. B. Rye, Mrs. Jas. O'Shea and others. Mr. E. A. Dixon presented a petition asking the municipal council to convey to the respective owners at a nominal price the reserve along the Otonabee River from the road allowance between park lots 15 and 16, in lot 15, in the 11th concession of the township, to the road allowance between the 10th and 11th concessions. The reserve has been fenced in and occupied by present owners and said reserve having been washed away in some places and in others partially washed away, and being of no value except to the owners of the said property whose property abutts on the reserve along the river.

Mr. Dixon and Mr. Rye spoke on behalf of the delegation and told of the inconveniences and trouble with trespassers under present conditions. Reeve Howden assured the delegation that careful consideration would be given to this matter.

The council was not prepared to express an opinion before looking into the question as it had not been brought up before and was entirely new.

Railway Extensions

A very largely signed petition was received from Mr. L. Minnicolo as follows:

We, the petitioners and ratepayers of this township ask your honorable body to notify the Radial Railway Co., to extend their line from the present terminal at Romaine Street and the C. P. R. crossing along Monaghan Road to the Otonabee River in accordance with the franchise granted to the company in Nov. 1911.

Moved by Mr. Forster, seconded by Mr. Dobbin that the clerk be authorised to notify the company to extend their lines on Monaghan road south, in accordance with the franchise given to the company.

Motions Rescinded

Moved by Mr. May and seconded by Mr. Morrow that the several motions recorded in the minutes of the meeting of October 29 granting money to be spent in various ways on the roads of the township be hereby rescinded and the grants withdrawn as it developed after such grants were made that the bank over-draft was exceeding the amount according to by-law which the Reeve and treasurer were authorised to borrow to carry on current expenditure.

Financial Statement

Mr. Robert Byers came before the council and complained that there was a balance due him by the town-

DR. MARSH'S LECTURE AND FAREWELL BANQUET

Instructive and Interesting Lecture on the Sun --- Beautiful Slides Depicting the Great Solar Fires--- Happy Gathering at the Savoy

The science lecture room in the Collegiate Institute was fully occupied yesterday evening by members and friends of the Peterborough Centre of the Royal Astronomical Society of Canada, to hear Rev. Dr. Marsh lecture on astronomy. Previous to the lecture some business of the Society was put through with dispatch. The minutes were taken and read and Dr. Marsh explained the finances of the Society which were in splendid condition. During the year $211 had ben received, $210 disbursed, leaving a balance of seventy-five cents in the treasury. Three and a half dozen slides were purchased for use in the lantern. Mr. H. O. Fisk audited the books, found them correct, and the report was adopted. During the afternoon Dr. Marsh had called on several members who paid up their fees until 1914, making a sum of about forty dollars and a like sum was still to be collected, so that the society will be in splendid financial standing for the near future. Mr. T. A. S. Hay, city engineer, was re-elected President; T. C. Elliot, Vice-President, and Secretary Treasurer; Mr. Fisk, Auditor and Curator, and the Council was to consist of Messrs Easton, Carvett, Logan, F. H. Dobbin and the other officers of the Society. Mr. H. Crane was librarian and Mr. Meredith was received as a member.

Presentation

At this stage the President, Mr. Hay, came forward and read the following address, when a handsome travelling bag was presented to Dr. Marsh.

The Rev. Dr. Marsh, F.R.S.C.,
Past Pres. Peterboro Centre,
Royal Astronomical Soc. of Can.

Dear Mr. Marsh:

The members of Peterboro Centre of the R.A.S. of C. desire to convey to you their regret at your departure from this Centre.

For seven years we have enjoyed your genial company, for most of which time, in connection with the study of the Science of Astronomy, in which you have been our valued instructor and friend.

At great personal inconvenience and discomfort you have so often journeyed the long road to and from Springville to fill your voluntary engagements, not only with this Centre, but with other bodies who requested your assistance, never disappointing any of them.

We feel that we have always leaned on you as a guide and friend, your enthusiasm and zeal being our main support; your departure now throws us on our own resources, but may we hope that you will still continue your connections with us in spirit, and that when opportunity comes, give us the pleasure of your company in person.

Hoping that you and Mrs. Marsh and your family will long enjoy the best of good health, happiness and prosperity in your new field of duty, we ask you to accept this bag as a slight mark of our esteem and gratitude.

On behalf of the members of Peterborough Centre of R. A. S. of C.,
T. A. S. Hay,
President.

Dr. Marsh suitably replied to this unexpected mark of appreciation and said that any discomfort that he had been put to in coming to Peterborough had been his joy. He spoke highly of Mr. H. B. Collier's work who was one of the first members of the society.

While Dr. Marsh was getting his slides in order, Judge Huycke made a neat speech of appreciation.

The Lecture

Dr. Marsh opened his address by a few words on the importance of astronomy in every-day life, saying that our time was received from the sky, that cooking and the operations of blast furnaces could not be done without the assistance of the sky. He announced that he had changed the subject of his address and would lecture on Solar Phenomena with particular reference to the sun. The sun might be studied first, as a dominating body, secondly, in relation to other bodies, or thirdly, as a typical star, for the sun is a star, because it shines by its own light and not a borrowed light as the moon and Venus. One hundred million stars have been photographed, and the new telescope that the Federal government have ordered for Ottawa, will have a capacity to photograph 1,000 million. Jupiter, seen through the telescope, is a spot or disk, but no telescope has been able to bring a star near enough to be seen as a disk—they are only spots of light—hence the importance of studying the sun.

PETERBOROUGH, WEDNESDAY, DEC. 17, 1913.

THE MEANING OF THE BYE-ELECTIONS.

HOWEVER MODERATE may be our interpretation of the meaning of these bye-elections, one thing stands out clear. They pronounce a deep condemnation upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier with his followers in the House and upon Sir George Ross with his followers in the Senate. The one by reckless and extreme tactics of obstruction, the other by feeble acceptance at their own valuation of a handful of friction mongers, degraded Canada in the eyes of both friends and foes of the Empire.

Since then they have left no stone unturned to stir up the friction that they needed in their business, the miserable business of sowing distrust between the several members of the Empire family. They have urged the electors to enter into the trade pact with the United States and to put their trust in the Pacific intention of Germany, but on no account to show as much confidence in the good intentions of England as to carry out the Borden naval policy of lending three Dreadnoughts to the navy.

Nothing less than a series of pronounced victories at the poles could have justified action such as their's, but out of the five bye-elections they have won one and the man who contested South Lanark wholely and solely on his opposition to the Borden policy received seventy votes and no money back! Sir Wilfrid remains defiant of course; but what about Sir George Ross, the one time Imperalist? The pity of it!

AGAINST LONG SCHOOL VACATIONS.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR calls attention to the drastic measures of many kinds being proposed by people who feel that Americans are not getting all that they should out of the school system. Prof. George W. Kerchwey, of the Columbia University faculty, thinks that the present age of leaving High School is too late and that more children could be given a High School education if the long vacation period could be done away with. The children not only stop study during the ten weeks of playtime, but they forget a good deal. Steady work throughout the year, with short vacations here and there, would add to the average course 120 weeks, which means that the child could be graduated from the High School two years earlier than now.

Professor Kerchwey says the plea that teachers need the vacation is based on a wrong conception. A teacher who is doing the work rightly is interested, and therefore does not feel the need of rest and change. If the teacher is not so interested that he will keep his work up the year round as people in most other occupations do he is not teaching rightly, thinks Professor Kirchwey. The artificial character of much of the school work is held accountable for the lack of interest in teachers and pupils. If the schools could be organized differently they could be carried on all the year, greatly to the benefit of the children.

Those who have the highest interests of education at heart might well consider the words of this professor. It has always been somewhat of a wonder to some of us that the school teacher should be idle for nearly a fourth part of the year at one stretch. School teaching is no doubt a tiresome business, but it is not the only one of that kind; there are others which put a greater strain upon the mind and which do not permit of even a day's rest in six-months. But the mischief is in the waste that goes on in this long summer vacation. We have known cases of intelligent children between the ages of seven and ten who seem to have lost all they learned by the end of the summer holiday. The education which is given in these days, being more in the form of packing, is easily unpacked and the most intelligent of children, when they find themselves free to wander where they will, proceed to unpack their mines of knowledge for which they have no immediate use. Many a bright child has been thought dull and has been put back on returning to school because things which took it months to learn have slipped from its memory during the months of play. All children have the blessed gift of forgetting.

As a case in point; a bright little girl, aged nine, who was in the Second Book, returned to school this year after holiday and was set to do a simple addition sum. She had for years known how to add up figures, but, by some mental lapse, she had got the process of adding reversed. She would begin adding from left to right, instead of from right to left. The consequence being that every sum was wrong and the "teacher," in her equally contrary impatience, regarded the child as a dullard and put her down into the lower book. The parents remonstrated with the "teacher," but received only scant civility, what was done, was done and the child has lost a year and must proceed to "mark time" till the end of the term.

This is only one case and it might easily be multiplied. Many other illustrations and arguments might be brought to bear upon this question of the long vacation had we space to go further into it. We would be glad to know what parents or school authorities have to say in the matter.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MR. ARTHUR HAWKES is satisfied and has assured South Lanark that he will not ask for a recount. Now, that is very magnanimous of Hawkes.

THE ORIENTAL immigration ban in British Columbia has been taken very sensibly by Japanese. So long as there is no discrimination the Japanese will not object, says a report.

THE DUKE OF SUTHERLAND, who offered a large portion of his deer forests in Scotland cheap to Mr. Lloyd George for his land scheme, has received a reply from the little Chancellor to the effect that the land was too barren and unproductive for his needs. Mr. George, no doubt, thought they were dear forests even at so low a price.

ISN'T it just possible that the increase in the cost of living since the days of market-basket shopping is partly accounted for by the fact that the market-basket has ceased to be fashionable? says the Montreal Star. There is some truth in this. When the shopman says: "Shall I send it?" he has reckoned for the cost of sending in the price of the goods.

HON. J. S. DUFF has been saying that he hopes the time will never come when butter and eggs will be any cheaper than they are to-day. "The poor woman on the farm struggled too many years to make money on fifteen cent butter and the hens of Ontario have wasted altogether too much energy in laying ten cent eggs." Hens are not wasting much energy just now on the egg-laying business and a rise in the price of eggs would not induce them to drop any more.

"THERE are some commodities which Canada might secure at a cheaper price than now were the tariff taken off, but, when farmers find it profitable to sell their produce to the United States, one could hardly hope for any material reduction in the cost of living simply by placing American foodstuffs on the free list. The staple foodstuffs we produce ourselves; and they are as cheap, if not cheaper, than across the line. To put all American foodstuffs on the free list would be giving the wealthy a free dinner largely at the expense of the poor, for the poor would be taxed proportionately to make up the loss of revenue." Says the Ottawa Journal. This is free food indeed, but for the wealthy.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

The Bye-Elections.

Mail and Empire.

The bye-elections resulted on Saturday as most people expected they would. In Macdonald the Government candidate was elected by a majority about the same as the one by which he carried the seat last year, which was quite five times that given to the Borden candidate in the general election. In South Lanark, where the successful candidate was opposed by another local Conservative of influence, the majority is about 135. By this margin Dr. Hanna won the seat against the combined strength of Col. Balderson's Conservative following and the Liberal voters in the riding.

The Disappearing Face.

Montreal Mail.

One thing is much missed. We refer to the old-fashioned face. It is disappearing. Where is the old face with its simple look of modesty and peace, of faith and humility? Where is the face like mother used to make? Where is the countenance of our grandfathers, such as these which now adorn ancestral mansions only on the walls? Gone with the whiskers are the wholesome glances of mild stupidity which served to quiet the soul-currents of friends and strangers alike in the old days. To-day, the village choir seems to have an artful look, altogether inappropriate, out of keeping with the solemn nature of its surroundings. Grandmother and grandfather get all spruced up before they face the photographer, and both seem to look as "wise" as racing touts. An "Honest John" countenance is a curiosity.

White Gloves.

British Weekly.

Is it a sign of growing prosperity or only of advancing extravagance that so many London women are wearing white kid gloves in the morning? If the sun peeps out after breakfast, the suburban resident who has planned a round of shopping in Oxford street takes a pair of white gloves from her drawer. They will look grey and soiled when she returns in the afternoon, but other pairs are ready to take their place, for the well-dressed woman seems to have an inexhaustible supply. Watch the crowd at any of the drapers' even before luncheon, and you will see that white gloves are the rule rather than the exception. In the fashion letter of a newspaper of 1887 I lately read the sentence, "For library and shopping expeditions plain woollen gloves will suffice." Perhaps owing to the unusual warmth of the season I have not noticed a single pair of woollen gloves on anybody's hands this autumn.

A Hindu's Song.

The following is a sample of the verse by the Hindu poet who recently won the Nobel Prize for literature:

Thy heart, the bird of the wilderness, has found its sky
in your eyes.
They are the cradle of the morning; they are the kingdom of the stars.
Thy songs are lost in their depths.
Let me but soar in that sky, in its lonely immensity.
Let me but cleave its clouds and spread wings in its sunshine.

Why did the lamp go out?
I shaded it with my cloak to save it from the wind; that is why the lamp went out.

Why did the flower fade?
I pressed it to my heart with anxious love; that is why the flower faded.

Why did the stream dry up?
I put a dam across it to have it for my use; that is why the stream dried up.

Why did the harpstring break?
I tried to force a note that was beyond its power; that is why the harpstring is broken.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

UTILITIES COMMISSIONER

To the Editor of The Review:

Dear Sir,—

I notice in your issue of today that Mayor Bradburn has signified his intention of entering the field for election to the office of utility commissioner. As my name has been brought before the public in a similar capacity at the earnest solicitation of many of my co-workers and others in the various walks of life, and whose many expressions of good-will and promises of valient support, I heartily appreciate, I beg to say that while I endorse the object of such a movement, that is the bringing of the ordinary consumer in his relations to public utilities into closer consideration through his representative, I have no desire on this occasion to enter into competition for the honor, conceding to him the preference over all comers, because of the progressive policy pursued during his two years' regime as our Chief Magistrate, and further his intimate knowledge of our requirements in the Hydro Electric proposition now so prominently before the council in its present incomplete condition. It is a matter to be regretted that he had not the opportunity to complete the work in his present capacity as Mayor, but by all means let us avail ourselves of his services as a Commissioner.

Yours respectfully,
Wm. HILL.

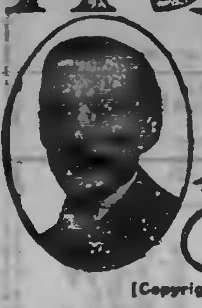
A SPLENDID HAZARD



By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

The other wrote some hieroglyphics, which made the address impossible to decipher, save that it was directed mainly to Paris. The body of the cablegram contained a single world. The writer paid the toll, and went away.

"Now, what would you think of that?" murmured the operator, scratching his head in perplexity. "Well, the company gets the money, so it's all the same to me. Butterflies, and all the rest in French. Next time it'll be bugs. All right; here goes!"

* * * * * * *

The house at the top of the hill had two names. It had once been called the Watch Tower for reasons but vaguely known by the present generation of villagers. Today it was generally styled The Pines. Yet even this had fallen into disuse save on the occupant's letter paper. When any one asked where Rear Admiral Killigrew lived he was directed to "the big white house at the top o' the hill."

The Killigrews had not been born and bred there. Its builder had been a friend of King George—that is, his sympathies had been with taxation without representation. One day he sold the manor cheap. His reasons were sufficient. It then became the property of a wealthy trader, who died in it. This was in 1809. His heirs, living and preferring to live in Philadelphia, put up a sign and, being of careful disposition, kept the place in excellent repair.

In the year 1816 it passed into the hands of a Frenchman, and during his day the villagers called the house the Watch Tower, for the Frenchman was always on the high balcony, telescope in hand, gazing seaward. No one knew his name. He dealt with the villagers through his servant, who could speak English, himself professing that he could not speak the language. He was a recluse, almost a hermit. At odd times a brig would be seen dropping anchor in the offing. She was always from across the water, from the old country, as villagers to this day insist upon calling Europe. The manor during these peaceful invasions showed signs of life. Men from the brig went up to the big white house and remained there for a week or a month. And they were lean men, battle scarred and fierce of eye, some with armless sleeves, some with stiff legs, some twisted with rheumatism. All spoke French and spat whenever they saw the perfidious flag of old England. This was not marked against them as a demerit, for the war of 1812 was yet smoking here and there along the great lakes. Suddenly they would up and away, and the manor would resume its repellent aloofness. Each time they returned their number was diminished. Old age had succeeded war as a harvester. In 1822 the mysterious old recluse surrendered the ghost. His heirs, ignored and hated by him for their affiliation with the Bourbons, sold it to the father of the admiral.

The manor wasn't haunted. The hard headed longshoremen and sailors who lived at the foot of the hill were a practical people, to whom spirits were something most generally put up in bottles and emptied on sunless, blustery days. Still they wouldn't have been human if they had not done some romancing.

There were a dozen yarns, each at variance with the other. First, the old "monseer" was a fugitive from France; everybody granted that. Second, that he had helped to cut off King Louis' head; but nobody could prove that. Third, that he was a retired pirate; but retired pirates always wound up their days in riotous living, so this theory died. Fourth, that he had been a great soldier in the Napoleonic wars, and this version had some basis, as the old man's face was slashed and cut, some of his fingers missing, and he limped. Again, he had been banished from France for a share in the Hundred Days. But, all told, nothing was proved conclusively.

But the next generation partly forgot and the present only indifferently remembered that once upon a time a French emigre had lived and died up there.

All these things Fitzgerald and his companion learned from the driver on the journey up the incline.

"Where was this Frenchman buried?" inquired Breitmann softly.

"In th' cemet'ry jest over th' hill. But nobody knows jest where he is now. Stone's gone, an' th' ground's all level that end. He was on'y a Frenchman. But th' admiral, now you're talkin'! He pays cash an' don't make no bargain rates when he wants a job done. Go wan, y' ol' nag. What y' dreamin' of?"

"There might be history in that corner of the graveyard," said Breitmann.

"Who knows? Good many strange bits of furniture found their way over here during those tremendous times. Beautiful place in the daytime, eh?" Fitzgerald added with an inclination toward the Pines.

"More like an Italian villa than an Englishman's home. Good gardeners, I should say."

"Culture and money will make a bog attractive."

"Is the admiral cultured, then?"

"I should imagine so. But I am sure the daughter is. The admiral, I believe, occupies himself with his books, his butterflies and his cruises."

"A daughter. She is cultured, you say? So long as she is not capricious and does not interfere with my work"—

"Or peace of mind," interrupted Fitzgerald, with prophetic suddenness, which was modified by laughter.

"No, my friend; no woman has ever yet stirred my heart, though many have temporarily captured my senses. A man in my position has no right to love," with a dignity which surprised his auditor.

Fitzgerald looked down at the wheels. There was something even more than dignity, an indefinable something, a superiority which Fitzgerald's present attitude of mind could not approach.

"This man," he mused, "will afford some interesting study. One would think that nothing less than a grand duke was riding in this rattling old carryall." There was silence for a time.

"How long will you be here?" asked Breitmann.

"Can't say. Three or four days perhaps. It all depends. What shall I say about you to them?"

"As little as possible."

"And that's really about all I could say," with a suggestion.

But the other failed to meet the suggestion halfway.

"You might forget about my ragged linen in Paris," acridly.

"I'll omit that," good naturedly. "Come, be cheerful. Fortune's wheel will turn, and it pulls up as well as down. Remember that."

"I must be on the ascendency, for I am at the nadir just at present." He breathed in the sweet freshness which still clung to the morning and settled his shoulders like a recruiting sergeant.

"How well the man has studied his English!" thought Fitzgerald. He rarely hesitated for a word, and his idioms were always nicely adjusted.

The admiral was alone. He received them with an easy courtliness, which is more noticeable in the old world than in the new. He directed the servants to take charge of the luggage, and to Breitmann there was never a word about work. That had all been decided by letter. He urged the new secretary to return to the library as soon as he had established himself.

Breitmann was rather grateful for Fitzgerald's presence. This occupation was not going to be menial; at least, there would be pleasant sides to it. And, then, it might not take him a week to complete his own affair. There was no misreading the admiral. He was a gentleman, affable, kindly and a good story teller, too, crisp and to the point, sailor fashion.

"Do you know butterflies, Mr. Fitzgerald?"

"Social?"

The admiral laughed. "No. The law doesn't permit you to stick pins in that kind. No; I mean that kind," indicating the cases.

Both young men admitted that this field had been left unexplored by either of them.

It was during a lull, when the talk had fallen to the desultory, that the hall door opened and Laura came in. Her cheeks glowed like the sunny side of a Persian peach; her eyes sparkled. Between her moist red lips there was a flash of firm, white teeth. The seal brown hair glinted a Venetian red, for at that moment she stood in the path of the sunshine which poured in at the window, and blown tendrils in picturesque disorder escaped from under her hat.

The three men rose hastily—the father with pride, Fitzgerald with gladness and Breitmann with doubt and wonder and fear.

CHAPTER VII.

SOME BEING IN A CEMETERY.

It might be truthfully said that the tableau lasted as long as she willed it to last. Perhaps she read in the three masculine faces turned toward her a triangular admiration, since it emanated from three given points, and took from it a modest pinch for her vanity. Vain she never was. Still she was not without a share of vanity, that vanity of the artless, needing no sacrifices, which is gratified and appeased by a smile. It pleased her to know that she was lovely, and it doubled her pleasure to realize that her loveliness pleased others. She demanded no hearts. She craved no jewels, no flattery.

She had an inherited love of the open. With almost unlimited funds under her own hand, she lived simply. She was never happy in smart society, though it was always making demands upon her. When abroad she was generally prowling through queer little shops instead of mingling with the dress parades on the grand hotel terraces. There was no great battlefield in Europe she had not trod upon.

What she did not know of naval warfare her father did. They were very companionable. There was never any jealousy on the part of the admiral. Indeed, he was always grateful when some young man evinced a deep regard for his daughter. He would have her always, married or unmarried. He was rich enough, and the son-in-law should live with him. He was so assured of her good judgment he knew that whenever this son-in-law came along there would be another man in the family. He had long ceased to bother his head about the flylike buzzing of fortune hunters. He had been father and mother and brother to the child, and with wisdom.

She smiled at her father, gave her hand to Fitzgerald, who found it warm and moist from the ride, and glanced inquiringly at Breitmann.

"My dear," said her father, "this is Mr. Breitmann, my new secretary."

That gentleman bowed stiffly, and the scars faded somewhat when he observed that her hand was extended in welcome. This unconventionality rather confused him, and as he took the hand he almost kissed it. She understood the innocence of the gesture and saved him from embarrassment by withdrawing her hand casually.

"I hope you will like it here," was the pleasant wish.

"Thank you, I shall."

To be continued.

AILING WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Doucette Tells of her Distressing Symptoms During Change of Life and How She Found Relief.

Belleville, Nova Scotia, Can.—"Three years ago I was suffering badly with what the doctors called Change of Life. I was so bad that I had to stay in bed. Some friends told me to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it helped me from the first. It is the only medicine I took that did help me and I recommend it. You don't know how thankful and grateful I am. I give you permission to publish what your good medicine has done for me."—Mrs. SIMON DOUCETTE, Belleville, Yarmouth Co., Nova Scotia, Canada.

Such warning symptoms as sense of suffocation, hot flashes, headaches, backaches, dread of impending evil, timidity, sounds in the ears, palpitation of the heart, sparks before the eyes, irregularities, constipation, variable appetite, weakness and inquietude, and dizziness, are promptly heeded by intelligent women who are approaching the period in life when woman's great change may be expected.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound invigorates and strengthens the female organism and builds up the weakened nervous system. It has carried many women safely through this crisis.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

Odd Little Last Minute Offerings

There is always a friend or two who at the last minute have not been supplied with a Christmas offering. This person does not occupy a prominent place on one's list. Still something must be provided in the shape of a present.

For a woman the little needlecase illustrated will be just the thing you can make for the hurry up gift. As you see, it is a sunbonnet affair. The hood section is separated in the middle of the front, and on the inside are leaves of white flannel for the needles. The bonnet pictured is of yellow satin dotted with black, and the puffed crown and hood are of yellow silk.

Pastor Sanctions Wedding.

KINGSTON, Dec. 17. — The first marriage to take place in Kingston between a Chinaman and a white girl was solemnized by Rev. E. Leroy Rice, pastor of the First Congregational church. The groom is F. K. Sam, proprietor of a laundry, and the bride, Ethel Salter, daughter of a well-known Kingstonian.

Sam wanted the ceremony performed over a year ago and although he had the girl's consent and also that of her parents, all the ministers in the city refused to officiate. The matter was discussed at a meeting of the Evangelical Alliance, when explanations were made and the Alliance stated that Mr. Rice would be justified in performing the ceremony.

Christmas Not a Humbug.

"Christmas a humbug, uncle?" said Scrooge's nephew. "You don't mean that, I'm sure."

"I do," said Scrooge. "Merry Christmas! Out upon Merry Christmas! What's Christmas time for you but a time for paying bills without money, a time for finding yourself a year older and not an hour richer, a time for balancing your books and having every item in 'em through a round dozen of months presented dead against you? If I could work my will every idiot who goes about with 'Merry Christmas' on his lips should be boiled with his own pudding and buried with a stake of holly through his heart. He should!"

It is many years since the conversion of old Scrooge from the error of his ways by the three ghosts of Christmas past, Christmas present and Christmas yet to come. It is many more years since the first Christmas anthem rang triumphant in the hush of an expectant midnight hour over the plains of Palestine. And yet, in spite of the years and their message to the world, there still exist those unfortunate souls who, like the wretched Ebenezer, call Christmas a humbug and lose sight of the real spirit and joy of the day.

"Christmas a humbug!" one is moved to exclaim with old Scrooge's indignant nephew. No, not a humbug, but a feast of good cheer, of kindly impulses, of generous giving, if hearts are opened and sympathies allowed free play, if cynicism is barred and pessimistic philosophy banished to the limbo of all unpleasantness. For the very essence of the spirit of Christmas is that of kindliness, of affection.

When the flame of the real spirit of Christmas is dim or altogether dead there are a dozen ways of fanning it into renewed life. So many things combine to foster the Christmas atmosphere, to make it, as Scrooge's nephew said, "a kind, forgiving, charitable, pleasant time, the only time in the long calendar of the year when men and women seem, by one consent, to open their shutup hearts freely and to think of people below them as if they really were fellow passengers to the grave and not another race of creatures bound on other journeys."

DISTRICT DAIRYMEN HOLD ANNUAL MEETING AT NORWOOD

Instructive Addresses Are Given and Mr. Ward Reads His Report

The annual District Dairy Meeting of the Eastern Ontario District Dairy Association for the County of Peterborough, was held yesterday afternoon in the Town Hall at Norwood. Mr. G. A Gillespie of this city, Director for the district, occupied the chair.

Mr. R. W. Ward also of this city, and District Dairy Instructor, presented his annual report on his work during the past year.

Mr. Henry Glendenning of Manilla ,ex-President E.O.D.A., gave a very interesting and much appreciated address on the growing of alfalfa.

Owing to the unavoidable absence of Mr. G. G. Publow, Chief Dairy Instructor for Eastern Ontario, his able assistant, Mr. F. Singleton, delivered an address. His discourse dealt with the importance of careful handling of milk. The speaker had with him five bottles, holding water, fat, sugar, albumen and ash respectively and explained very fully the action of the different bacteria in these constituents. He also showed a number of charts to explain the loss in cheese making, of milk handled in the careful, in the ordinary and in the careless way. To assist in this he cited a case of one factory this past season making a saving of one-eighth of a cent per pound by having all the milk delivered at the facory in first class condition. The experiment has been carried on by this factory, by the same patrons and by the same maker for over three years. The saving was caused by being able to manufacture more pounds of cheese out of the milk by it being in first class condition.

Owing to important work being to hand Mr. F. C. McRea of Norwood, and district representative of the Ontario Department of Agriculture, was unable to address the meeting.

Other short speeches were delivered by Mr. Charles O'Reilley, Secretary of the Farmers' Institute of East Peterboro, and Mr. Wm. Weir in charge of the Cow Testing Department of Peterboro County.

Mr. Geo. A. Gillespie was again nominated as Director for the District and will represent this district at the Dairymen's Convention to be held in Cornwall.

The meeting was airgely attended and its value cannot be over-estimated to the farmer who has the interest of his calling at heart as well as its monetary success.

The following was the report of Instructor Ward re Dairying Industry in Peterboro Section for season 1913:

Gentlemen, it is with your pleasure I now make my report of work done and some observations on season of 1913.

As you no doubt are aware, there was a change made in my section this season.

My section this season consisted of the factories lying east of City of Peterboro to Norwood and Killarney cheese factories and all factories north-east of Peterboro in Peterboro County; also all factories in Hastings County, north of Millbridge except two.

In this territory we expected 27 cheese factories and 1 creamery, but only 24 cheese factories were operated and one of these was closed at last of August.

To these 24 factories, I made 46 full day visits and 208 call visits.

I visited, met and conversed with 237 patrons.

There were 317 samples of milk tested for adulteration.

One of these was found to be deteriorated, but owing to some facts in connection with the case, the party was let off without a warning.

The average butter fat of all tests made was 3.54; average butter fat test of whey was .22; average pounds of milk per pound cheese 10.84; number new silos built, 22; no new factories built, but about $1,000.00 spent on improvements.

Owing to the change in the sections, I am not in a position to draw comparisons between this year and last, the same as in former seasons; but the nature of the work has been much the same and the success of it on the whole has been quite satisfactory.

The delivery of milk and quality of cheese made on the whole has been good, fully equal, if not better than former seasons.

The quantity has been short.

Montreal report gives it at 200,000 boxes, exactly what I heard Mr. Publow predict over three months ago.

This shortage no doubt has been brought about by a number of causes. We have had a very dry season, more milk and cream being consumed by an ever increasing population, an increase in butter making and the raising of stock.

This country is rapidly undergoing changes, that has produced these and other results.

The true principal underlying successful agriculture is the maintaining of soil fertility at the highest point possible and to my mind, there has never been a time, when it has been as necessary for owners of cheese factories, chese makers, and producers of milk to stand together and work together, to save the situation of the cheese industry, that has been such a boom to agriculture in this country for the last forty years.

My recommendations for next season's work would necessarily be much the same as in former reports, which I think every one quite understands.

But let me say to the owners and makers to be sure and have everything in perfect sanitary condition, both inside and out, with a pure water supply and mouth of wells properly protected, before the first pound of milk is delivered at the factories next season; to the producers, to be prepared to give a clean, cool milk supply, which will enhance the quantity and quality of the cheese made and make the season's operations more profitable to every one concerned.

I again thank owners, makers, officers and patrons for the kindly manner in which I was received at all times and the readily extended assistance, so generously given in carrying out the work, which has been done with the object of improving the industry and making it more profitable.

MEXICAN ESTATES ARE CONFISCATED

Thousands of Citizens Rush to Banco Central to Present State Bank Notes For Redemption.

JUAREZ, Mexico, Dec. 17. — All the property of Luis Terranzas, sr., Enrique Creel and Juan Creel, including banks, mines, vast areas of land, thousands of head of cattle, homes and personal effects, were ordered confiscated to the rebels in an official decree issued by Gen. Francisco Villa yesterday.

Mr. Terranzas, now a refugee in the United States, is one of the richest men in Mexico. His holdings of about two-thirds of the State of Chihuahua are said to place him among the most extensive land-holders of the world. The combined estate of the Terranzas and the Creel brothers, his nephews, is valued at many millions of dollars. Enrique Creel was formerly Ambassador from Mexico to the United States.

Financial Panic Begins.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 17.—Thousands of people formed lines yesterday at the doors of the Banco Central owing to the refusal of all banks except that one to redeem state bank notes. Practically every bill in the city issued by an outside bank was brought to the Central Bank for redemption.

Many of the people in the lines expressed the intention of closing their accounts because of the stories in circulation as to the Central Bank itself being unsound, although the bankers issued a vehement denial of the rumors.

The Central Bank is the pivot organization of a chain composed of most of the state banks, but already the paper of six outside banks has been refused on account of lack of funds in the Central. It is assumed that the paper of others will be refused when the deposits of outside banks have been exhausted.

Refugees Return to Tampico.

VERA CRUZ, Dec. 17.—Rear Admiral Fletcher, in command of the American warships at Tampico, reported yesterday that normal conditions prevail there, and that the weather had moderated sufficiently to permit the transfer of all the refugees from the battleships to the transport Sumner for return to Tampico.

The marines who were temporarily placed aboard the gunboat Wheeling and the scout cruiser Chester have been sent back to the battleships.

POLICE COURT

Lad Who Was Drunk is Given Some Good Advice.

The seventen-year-old boy, who was charged with being drunk at last Thursday's session of police court, was fined $2 after a week's sojourn in the jail to brighten up his senses so that he might tell who supplied him with the booze. The youth had told a story how he met a traveller and on driving him over to the G. T. R. station the man treated him and as a result he was arrested. No further evidence was offered by the police and the boy was fined, after a good heart to heart talk with Magistrate Dumble.

To Whom It May Concern:

In political events today,
We hear they do not show fair play.
The canvasser gives you a wink,
He urges you to take a drink,
Then in a moment before you think
You will go and vote their way.
If we only thought, of our forefathers' grit,
They would not vote, just for a tip,
They would say, we are going to vote our way,
And then we will see who wins the day,
We won with honest and fair play,
And now we will take a sip.

CROSS SAHARA

Flotilla of Aeroplanes Will Make Novel Journey.

Aeroplane Flotilla To Cross Sahara

PARIS, Dec. 17.—The National Aerial League has completed plan for a flight of a flotilla of aeroplanes across the Sahara, or Great Desert. The aeroplanes will start from Oran a fortified town of Algeria, and the final landing will be made at Timbuktu, in the military territory of French Soudan, a distance of approximately 1,400 miles.

If the experiment proves successful the establishment of a regular air mail service will be considered.

BIG REALTY DEAL IS COMPLETED

Fifty Million Dollars is Price Paid to the Duke of Bedford For Piece of Land in the Heart of the Metropolis.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—One of the biggest private real estate deals on record was completed yesterday in the purchase of the Duke of Bedford's block of freehold property in the centre of London for something like $50,000,000, by Harry Mallaby-Deeley, a Unionist member of the House of Commons or the Harrow division of Middlesex.

The exact figures were withheld by the agents, but experts, basing their calculations on the cost of acquiring the property for the Aldwych and Kingsway improvement, which amounted to $22,200,000, estimate the sum which changed hands yesterday at $50,000,000.

The estate covers nineteen acres, and, roughly speaking, stretches east and west from Kingsway to St. Martin's lane, near Trafalgar Square, and north and south from Long Acre to the Strand. It includes the Royal Opera, the Drury Lane, the Aldwych, the Strand and the Lyceum Theatres, several hotels, Covent Garden Market, Bow Street Police Court, the National Sporting Club and a number of great printing establishments.

The ground has been in the possession of the Bedford family since 1554, when it was granted to them by King Henry VIII., at the time of the dissolution of the Roman Catholic religions communities and the confiscation of their property.

The purchase makes the previous deals of Mr. Mallaby-Deeley pale into insignificance, although in July, when he acquired the St. George's Hospital site, opposite Hyde Park, for $2,250,000, he caused a sensation, and he had previously bought a Piccadilly hotel for $2,500,000.

This sale means that one of the great estates in London is being broken up. The metropolis is practically divided among nine peers—the Dukes of Portland, Bedford and Westminster, the Marquises of Exeter, Salisbury, Northampton and Camden, the Earl of Craven and Viscount Portman.

POWER SITES

Federal Reports Says Manitoba Has Big Industrial Future

OTTAWA, Dec. 17.—The report prepared by the water power branch of the Interior Department for Mr. Justice Robson, who is investigating the whole problem for the Manitoba Government, shows that there are eight distinct power sites on the Winnipeg river where 408,700 horsepower can be economically developed, all within 80 miles of Winnipeg and within feasible transmission distance of Portage la Prairie, Brandon and all the other commercial centres in the southern part of the province. There are three sites now under development, representing 199,000 h.p. In addition there are several important power sites on the Winnipeg and English rivers over the boundary in Ontario, but within easy transmission distance of Winnipeg. In the northern part of the province there is an enormous amount of power where development is feasible, and only a market is needed. These are at the Grand Rapids on the Saskatchewan river, and such rivers as the Churchill, Nelson, Berens and others. Such a wealth of water power, the report states, seems to ensure the industrial future of Manitoba, especially Winnipeg, Portage la Prairie and Brandon. The increasing price of good steam coal out there makes the water power all the more valuable.

DID NOT MAKE ANY PROMISE

Announcement of Winter Fair Arena Unauthorized.

TORONTO, Dec. 17.—Hon. James Duff last night denied that he had promised on behalf of the Government to build a new arena for the Guelph Winter Fair.

"Neither Mr. Hanna nor myself mentioned such a thing, and no person had any authority for making such an announcement," he said. "There is absolutely no foundation for such a statement."

Looking To Canada.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Speaking at a reception to the New Zealand battleship crew yesterday, Winston Churchill said that the gift of the ship by the Dominion of New Zealand at a time of a serious crisis, was one of the greatest acts of far-seeing imagination which any modern state could claim credit for.

The Admiralty did its best at all times to assist the dominions in giving effect to this universal desire to aid the Imperial Navy according to their means. They recognized the sacrifices Australia had made and looked forward with confidence to the assistance which Canada would bring.

Toronto Man Badly Hurt.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 17.—Antonio Luigi of Toronto, an Italian foreman of a C.P.R. section gang, was badly hurt in an early morning riot in which half a dozen Italian laborers attacked each other with shovels. Luigi has such serious wounds about the head that it is not yet known whether he will recover. The row started over a game of cards and the fight took place in a car.

Not Immune.

Mrs. Martin met an acquaintance one morning while out shopping.

"How is Mrs. Callaway, that lives near you?" asked Mrs. Martin. "Of course you know she has a child very ill with scarlet fever?"

"Oh, yes, indeed," replied the other. "I know it, but I don't dare to go and see her."

"Why not?" inquired Mrs. Martin. "There is said to be no danger of taking the fever, you know, after one is sixteen."

"Oh, but, then, you know," replied the other woman. "I'm so young in my feelings!"—Lippincott's.

ULSTER HAS A WAR SONG

Hymn Has Been Composed by Member of Parliament

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Mr. Ian Malcolm, M.P., has written a stirring "Hymn of Empire," which is intended to be sung at Unionist meetings in England and Ireland while the fate of Ulster hangs in the balance.

There are four stanzas, of which the following is one:—

God is our strength. Though man betray
Our kinsmen, comrades, blood and bone,
Though all forsake us—even they
Who share our faith, our flag, our throne—
We shall not flinch, we will not bend.
The oath that our forefathers swore
Is ours to carry to the end,
Confident in the God of War.

Harwich Farmer Loses Arm.

Mr. Jordan was running a shredder on his own farm in Harwich, when the accident happened. He was brought to the city and the arm was amputated shortly after the accident, and yesterday he was making favorable progress.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—The executive of the postal unions at a conference in London yesterday defeated a motion to ballot the men with a view to deciding whether an early strike should be declared. It was decided to postpone drastic action until an appeal had been made to Parliament to override the decision of Herbert L. Samuel, Postmaster-General, against the desired increase in pay.

The stock, which was given to Boyd as security for a loan, was sold by him for $4,500.

Dr. Morton Pardoned.

WASHINGTON, D.C., Dec. 17—Dr William J. Morton, who served a term in Atlanta penitentiary with Julian Hawthorne for complicity in mining stock selling frauds, has been pardoned by President Wilson to restore his civil rights as of Dec. 10.

Suffragettes Protested.

LIVERPOOL, Dec. 17.—Very extensive damage was done to St. Ann's Church, Liverpool, yesterday by an incendiary fire started by the militant suffragettes as a protest against the rearrest of their leader, Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst. The stalls on the south side of the church were destroyed and the splendid organ was seriously damaged. Entrance was gained to the church by the "arson squad" through a stained glass window which they smashed. The usual suffrage literature was left scattered about the place.

Cashier Held Up.

MONTREAL, Dec. 17. — Grabbing with one hand at the revolver in the coat pocket of his victim and with the other at the bag containing $500 in cash, an unknown hold-up man got away with $500 in cash in pay envelopes in The Herald building at five o'clock yesterday afternoon.

The highway man, stopped in the attempt to get away with his boodle by Wm. C. Hall, shot the latter in the leg and made good his escape.

Five Months for Bad Fighter.

CHATHAM, Dec. 17.—Robt. Stewart, who was tried in the County Court on a charge of biting the ear off his cousin, Hugh Stewart, was yesterday sentenced to five months in the county jail. Both of the parties concerned come from Orford Township, and the case attracted a great deal of attention.

SIR WILFRID IN TORONTO

He Presents Canadian Ideals to University Students.

TORONTO, Dec. 17.—"The only thing I would ask is this: Be firm in the right as God gives you the power to see it. The world is a succession of triumphs and successes. When you meet reverses, stand up again.

"The problems are there, but you are young in the race, and you shall have to do your own share for self and for country."

Such was the keynote of the address made by Sir Wilfrid Laurier last night to the students assembled at the annual dinner of the Literary Society of Toronto University.

Sir Wilfrid traced the development of the democratic ideal down through the ages from the time of early Rome and Greece, the subsequent operation of the feudal system, the uprising of the French revolution, the merging of the American Republic and the American civil war, which resulted in the abolition of slavery, to existing democratic institutions.

It was Britain's glory that she had developed a crowned democracy, the first of its kind in world history, and that her progress had given world leadership and world direction. The new democracy of the present century had tackled the greatest of all problems, the gift of hope and courage where suffering and despair had existed for centuries. But the millenium had not yet been reached, since humanity is humanity and mankind is mankind.

With earnest emphasis Sir Wilfrid then turned his attention to the Canadian problems and Canadian participation in the missions of the growing spirit of democracy. "We must not think," said he, "that because no spirit of feudalism operates in our country, because militarism is not rampant, because our evils of intemperance are of a less heart-rending character than those of the old land, we have nothing to do." Canada had as important a part as any to play in the development of the true democratic ideal.

Duke's Offer Refused.

LONDON, Dec. 17.—Mr. Lloyd George has replied to the offer of the Duke of Sutherland to sell the Government a portion of his deer forests. The text is not published, but it is understood that the reply is equal to a refusal of the offer. The duke being en route to the West Indies on a holiday trip, it is contrary to official etiquette to publish the text of the letter prior to its receipt by the person to whom it is addressed.

MAYOR FOR 1914

G. A. Gillespie

Asks your support and influence to ensure his election as

MAYOR FOR 1914

J. J. HARTLEY

FOR

MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—At the earnest request of a large number of the ratepayers I have consented to be a candidate for the position of Mayor for the year 1914.

Being born and having lived all my life in Peterborough, and my whole life's savings being invested in Peterborough, I naturally have a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the City.

Should I be elected I promise you that I will guard to the very best of my ability, the interests of the ratepayers and will oppose all unnecessary expenditure. I will do my utmost to keep down the ever increasing rate of taxation consistent with needs of a growing City.

I may say that I am in favor of municipal ownership and am in favor of having all city work done by our own people instead of bringing in outsiders to do it.

I will endeavor to see that the ratepayers get value for every dollar that is expended.

I have had considerable experience in municipal matters, having served ten years in the Council and fourteen years on the Board of Education, being Chairman of that Board for two years. I was also Chairman of the Board of Health for several years, so that you will see that I am not without a fair share of experience.

Should you do me the honor to elect me as Mayor of our City I will do my best to serve you to the extent of my ability.

Yours respectfully,

J. J. HARTLEY

OPPOSING FORCES ARGUED FOR AND AGAINST TARIFF

Premier Borden Spends a Busy Day Hearing Conflicting Views of Agriculturalists, Fruit Growers and Breeders---Prime Minister Promises Earnest Consideration of the Government.

OTTAWA, Dec. 17.—Free wheat, flour, potatoes, cement and lumber and agricultural implements were demanded from the Government yesterday morning by the grain growers of the west and representatives of the Dominion Grange from the Province of Ontario. The acceptance of the reciprocity arrangement of 1911 was also urged, together with an immediate increase in the British preference and ultimate free trade with Britain.

As soon as the deputation appeared at the East Block yesterday morning they were confronted by a deputation consisting of fruit growers and cattle men, headed by Senator F. D. Smith. It was finally agreed that the farmers should first put in their case, and that the counter deputation would be heard in the afternoon. The grain growers and the representatives of the Dominion Grange consumed between two and three hours in presenting their case.

In the course of the memorial presented by the deputation, it was stated:

"This consolidation of individual companies into combines, and combines into trusts has the further effect of centralizing capital and power in the hands of a few individuals. By an interlocking of directorates the same men control our banking institutions, our loan companies, our insurance companies, our transportations. It is stated on good authority that Canada's economic structure is in control of about 23 capital directors who are members of 90 of the 121 corporations of Canada having a capitalization of $500,000 or over.

"We ask that all foodstuffs be placed on the free list as we believe that the taxing of food is a crime against humanity. The crying need of Canada to-day is increased production of agricultural products for export and cheaper living. You cannot increase farm production without decreasing the cost of production and providing competitive routes for export and wider markets.

"Continuing to tax the people to add to the Government pay roll additional men to teach farmers how to farm and provide for other lavish expenditure of money will not do. Canada spent hundreds of millions of dollars to provide waterways and other transportation facilities, yet it costs more to bring our grain to Liverpool now than ever before."

In his reply, Premier Borden expressed pleasure at receiving the deputation, and promised every consideration of the arguments presented, and as to the statement of conditions. As to the grain sample and weighing, those matters would be considered by Hon. Mr. Foster. The question of a railway claims agent had not been made specially clear, and the question of ocean rates was not free from difficulty in the matter of control. The effective means available to Parliament naturally involved much difficulty. The matter had been taken up, and the suggestion of the mother country for an enquiry accepted.

Dealing with co-operation, Mr. Borden said it was naturally desirable, and he had been much impressed with what had been said. Then, so far as the Railway Act was concerned, it was hoped that some consolidation of the Railway Act would be made this session, and the question would then be considered.

Mr. Borden was not prepared to say he agreed with all that had been said. It was probably true that in countries the result was due to a variety of causes. Close consideration would also be given to what had been presented and said in regard to the cost of living, having regard to the interests of the whole country. The Premier was not prepared to say to what extent the Executive could deal with this question.

After the first deputation had had its hearing the second was given its turn.

Erland Lee, the president of the Ontario Grain Growers, urged that the farmers of Ontario wished to maintain their home markets by protection.

Mr. Bole of Brampton, a stock raiser, contended that the morning delegation did not represent one per cent. of the population. The cry came mainly from people who had done well under the tariff as it is. He absolutely opposed any change in the tariff and urged the maintenance of its stability.

Daniel Johnston, of Forest, spoke strongly against the tariff on fruit being reduced, arguing that it would lead to extensive dumping of the American products. Last year they had shipped 320,000 barrels of apples to the west.

That the free entry of foreign fruits would be the death knell of the fruit industry in Niagara summarized the argument of J. R. Hastings o. Winona.

The Grain Growers left last night for Toronto, where they will take part in the deliberations of the Ontario Grange to-day and to-morrow.

ROMANCE OF SIR RUFUS.

Lord Chief Justice Who Served Before the Mast.

Sir Rufus Isaacs' career has been not merely remarkable, but romantic. At the Bar he was making $100,000 a year, and he reached this point without having to go through the usual drudgery. "Isaacs is the only man I know," Lawson Walton, his former master in the law, said once, "who had not to go through the grind of quarter sessions and county courts like the rest of us." He was at school at Brussels, and report says something of a pickle. Report says further that he made at least one voyage as a member of the lower deck. Born in London in 1860, the son of a Jewish merchant he attains to a great office at the age of 53. He began life in his father's office. But of that he soon grew weary. Then he tried the Stock Exchange for a few years, but with ill success, and it was not until 1884 that he found his true vocation, and entered as a student at the Middle Temple. But at this date, after all his varied experiences, he was no older than many other entrants from the universities, for he was only 24 and was but 27 when he was called to the Bar and joined the Northern Circuit. His first big case was as a junior in the Chetwynd-Durham suit, which was heard in 1891. Then he acquired a reputation among counsel as one who knew the City and finance. He became a specialist in commercial cases. But his advocacy was found equally convincing in almost any class of trial, and by the close of the 'nineties he was universally spoken of as the coming man at the Bar, and there were the usual guesses at the fabulous income which rumor declared him to be making. Like so many other eminent barristers, Sir Rufus had an infinite capacity for work. He never spared himself, yet was always eager, alert, active, and alive. He took silk in 1898, and when Mr Justice Bigham was raised to the Bench it was to Mr. Rufus Isaacs that the reversion of his magnificent commercial practice fell. Two years later Sir Edward Carson became Solicitor-General, which meant that another series of eminently lucrative briefs were brought his way. His advocacy was of a high order. Its secret was its persuasiveness. The voice was suave, but the argument also was very sound and good. There was no torrent of eloquence, but a flow of shrewd, keen observation, in which the points were driven home with quiet insistence. Sir Rufus Isaacs, as an advocate, was always sure of his facts, and his thrusts were neat and clean. When it came to a duel with a man in the dock of the calibre of Whitaker Wright the contest was exciting and dramatic, and the advocate had the better of the encounter. With a good case to work on, the new Lord Chief was also a brilliant and dexterous counsel. With a poor one, he could be relied upon to make the best of it, and turn to profit any favorable opening that arose during the hearing. He was always master of himself, and exhibited a perfect control. He entered the British House of Commons in 1904, and became Solicitor-General in 1910, and Attorney-General in the same year, with a seat in the Cabinet, where his opinion was highly valued by the Prime Minister.

They Like Lloyd-George.

David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is the most popular man in Italy, according to Welshmen returning from the continent.

The common people of Italy, in discussing the British statesman, say that his well-known measures, such as pension for old people, insurance, etc., are greatly needed in Italy. Whenever Lloyd George speaks, in or out of Parliament, every word he says is printed in the Italian papers. Much more space is given to his speeches than to the utterances of the Prime Minister of Italy. His remarks are read avidly by workmen who can read to their friends who cannot. Britain's questions are Italy's questions. There are movements in each country in the same direction, and the Italian workingman believes that the British leader is the prophet of the new era.

AN OLD MAID'S ADVICE

By M. QUAD

Copyright, 1913, by Associated Literary Press.

Her mother named her Cynthia when she was three days old and said she hoped the little darling wouldn't grow up to fall in love and become a wife and mother.

The little darling didn't.

When she was a year old she hadn't smiled yet. When the doctor was appealed to as to what ailed her he replied:

"Her name gave her a shock and soured her disposition."

"But will she die young?" was asked.

"Not by a jugful! She is cut out for an old maid, and she will live as long as there is anything that she can meddle with and stir up trouble."

She had got to be thirty-five years old when an event happened. Up to this time they had been incidents and occurrences. This was an event to be spelled with a big "E."

Little Mrs. Larkins was the bride of a year. She had married a nice young man, and the home was a happy one. One day the husband answered her in an impatient way, and soon after he had gone to business Cynthia dropped in to find the wife in tears. The old maid licked her chops. Here was a bouquet of gossip for her. What was the matter?

"It's—it's Henry!"

"Ah-ha! I said so when you were married. What's he done?"

"I wanted just a card of hooks and eyes, and he said he couldn't be bothered with such trifles."

"Well, that's the beginning of the end. In six months there will be a separation."

"Oh, don't say that. Henry was bothered about something and gave me an impatient answer. Maybe he will even bring the hooks and eyes when he comes."

"Lucy Larkins, prepare yourself and don't be deceived! I can't stop longer today, but I will come in tomorrow and tell you what you must do. Unless you want to lose your husband, this thing must be nipped in the bud."

"Why, Cynthia, how you frighten me!" exclaimed the wife.

Mr. Larkins had loaned a sum of money to be repaid at a certain date. When the date arrived the money was not forthcoming. Therefore he was upset.

If Mr. Larkins had owned up about the money the skies would have cleared in five minutes. If Mrs. Larkins had mentioned that the old maid was seeking to make trouble there would have been an explanation. As it was when Cynthia called next day she found a victim ready for her.

"Did he bring the hooks and eyes?" she asked.

"N-no."

"Good! We will now proceed to show that young man a few things to open his eyes. We will let him understand that if he is tired of you you are ditto."

"But I can't believe he is tired of me," was protested.

There was plain talk on the one side and tears and sobs on the other, and at length the wife was won over, and the old maid left the house saying:

"Remember that if you flunk out you will lose Henry. All you have to do is to keep quiet till I give the word."

Just about that hour the money that Mr. Larkins was anxious about was paid over, and he came home an hour ahead of time to tell the good news and make his apologies.

"Oh, Lucy, dear!" he called as he entered the house.

No Lucy dear.

Then came the note left for him propped up against the clock.

"I have discovered that you no longer love me, and you will never see me again!" it read.

Mr. Larkins jumped two feet high. His heart choked him. His knees wabbled. The room whirled round and round with him. In a minute more he was out of the house calling an alarm:

"Lucy has committed suicide! Come on to the river!"

The river was at its lowest stage, and a child could have crossed it. Lucy's bedraggled body was not to be seen. There was a mud turtle or two sailing up or down, but no Lucy.

There were orchards and groves, and all night long men were searching. They found no trace of the missing wife, and the next day the ground was covered again with even more care. The result was the same.

As night came down for the second time a score of men gathered at the Larkins home to sympathize, condole and plan anew. Henry Larkins was in tears and the others on the verge when in walked Lucy. She had come downstairs from the garret, where she had been in hiding in compliance with Miss Cynthia's orders. She had agreed to stay up there at least three days, but couldn't stand the strain.

Her story was told, explanations made, and after a time of rejoicing Squire Miller rapped for order and said:

"Gentlemen, this meeting has a pleasant duty to perform. Let us perform it."

Twenty men filed out and down the street and stopped at the house where the old maid made her home. She squealed and kicked and scratched, but she was borne to the river and ducked till she did not get her breath before high noon next day. No arrests; no suits for damages. She felt that she deserved the dose.

THE INDIANS WEPT.

Death Chant Marked Funeral of Indian Storm Victims.

In matters of emotion the full-blooded Indian is said to be a stoic. It has been his creed, handed down to him from traditional ancestry, but that ancient teaching was not strong enough to withstand the emotional attack made upon the Indians of the reservation near Sarnia the other day by the Rev. Nicholas Plain.

They wept. For Nicholas Plain was preaching to them the epilogue in the lives of two of their number, George Smith and Thomas Stone, once wheelsmen of the steamer McGean, lost in the storm on the great lakes. There were a score or more of these Indians who wept, not furtively, but loudly, openly, and that is what the older citizens of Sarnia say they never saw a full-grown Indian do before.

It was an epoch of sorrow in the history of the Chippewas and the Ojibways, and the scene of strongest emotion occurred by the side of the two graves. The whole reservation was there, all but a few of the old squaws who were unable to hobble along the muddy roads. Only the very youngest of the children were missing, and the dark olive downcast features of the three hundred Indians who gathered from up and down the river were fixed at the beginning of the service, with a determination to be calm.

There were two bodies, and following the Indian custom, there were three services. One service was conducted by the Rev. Walter Rigsby, Methodist minister on the reserve, at the home of Jim Stone, over the brother, Thomas; the second being held by the local Indian minister, Nicholas Plain at the house of Thos. Jackson, over the second body.

Then the two cavalcades met in the Indian cemetery, a half-mile back from the river. It was here that custom told. Nicholas Plain took the service over the two bodies. Standing between the graves, with bared head and hands outspread, this man with the lean, aquiline face, exhorted his brothers in the Ojibway tongue. He began softly and mild at first, smooth as the treacherous water which had robbed the tribes of two of their best. What he said, the few whites, who were grouped at the back, could not know. But they did know that his voice grew louder, and that as his big hands raised higher there seemed to be a queer pleading in his tones. Punctuating this were swift, dramatic pauses. Then the Indians wept.

Shortening Atlantic Time.

Substantial progress has been made of late with the scheme which aims at establishing an express service between Great Britain and Australasia via Canada.

A strong British company is at present in treaty for the purchase of about 400,000 acres of land at Cape St. Charles on the southeast coast of Labrador. This is an ice-free port 1,680 miles from Liverpool, about half the distance from Liverpool to New York. The harbor is just outside the Belle Isle Straits and although there are considerable dangers at this part of the ocean during certain times of the year, these are not believed to be unsurmountable.

From Cape St. Charles it is proposed to construct a transcontinental railroad to the Pacific coast—a charter has already been granted for the track as far as the eastern boundary of Quebec.

It is claimed that the journey from London to Winnipeg will be performed in five days—giving only two nights at sea—with an additional 10 days to Sydney, New South Wales, and a corresponding acceleration to many centres in the west of Canada.

An integral part of the scheme provides for making Black Sod Bay, on the west coast of Ireland, the headquarters of the service on the English side of the Atlantic. Train ferries are also suggested between Ireland, England and Scotland.

THIRTY-EIGHT KILLED.

Explosion Occurs in Vulcan Colliery Near Newcastle, Colo.

NEW CASTLE, Colo., Dec. 17.—Thirty-eight men were killed in the Vulcan mine of the Rocky Mountain Fuel Co yesterday by an explosion of coal dust. Two miners were rescued after the underground workings had caught fire. All the victims were married, and all but six or eight were Americans.

Men in charge of rescue work asserted last night that it probably would be a day or two before the bodies could be recovered. Before sundown the mine had been cleared of gas and a thorough exploration of the wrecked workings was made.

Many of the bodies were frightfully mangled and burned.

Father J. P. Carrigan of Glenwood Springs, near here, hurried to Newcastle at the first news of the explosion. The priest rushed into the smoking pit among the first rescuers, in search of the dying, to whom he might administer the last rites of the church.

How many men will disagree with that wise thing that said: It is not what you earn but what your wife does not spend that counts.

It is going to be a great hardship for some men of wealth to be compelled to have their fortunes guaranteed under a pure money act.

1913 Traffic Census of Concrete Roads in Wayne County, Michigan

This census was taken on the six main thoroughfares, which are built of concrete, leading into Detroit, for seven consecutive days of 24 hours each, in August and September, 1913.

The table shows, for all kinds of vehicles, a gross total of 97,000, of which 33,835, or 35 per cent., were horse drawn, and 63,165, or 65 per cent., were power driven.

These figures indicate that the concrete road has the ability to stand up, without serious disintegration, under the terrific strain of a great amount of traffic on the Country Road, which equals, if not exceeds, the amount of traffic per foot of width, on many city streets. These figures indicate that, in proportion to population, the farmer is benefited to as great an extent as the city dweller.

Here is a paragraph taken from the Wayne County Road Commissioners' report:

"With the completion of Plymouth Road, we have abandoned every other form of construction and have adopted concrete as our standard. We feel that our experience of the past six years warrants us in arriving at this determination, based on its general satisfactoriness and its annual cost as compared with other forms of construction. In addition to the economy in hauling, the pleasure in driving and touring, and the increase in land valuation, the concrete roads of Wayne County have been the means of bringing tens of thousands of dollars to this locality."

Concrete roads will benefit any locality proportionately as they have benefited Wayne County, Michigan.

The fullest detailed information about concrete roads will be sent to anyone interested, without cost or obligation. Address

He is not eligible to play O.H.A. hockey here this winter. Fierheller, a former Toronto Canoe Club player, and Ted Whale were the other new men in uniform. KINGSTON TO HAVE STRONG SENIORS

KINGSTON, Dec. 17.—Rupert Millan, who was picked upon to play with the junior Frontenac hockey team this Winter, has accepted a position at Cobalt and will thus be unable to play for the local team.

The Frontenac seniors will in all likelihood have one of the strongest teams which has represented the city in years. The team will have the same forward line which met Eaton's senior outfit in the final game for the O.H.A. championship in 1912.

SPORTING NOTES

Bill Wright, Guelph's hard hitting outfielder, has been purchased by Manager Clymer of Buffalo, for his International league team. Bill hit for the dainty mark of .398 in these diggings last year.

• • •

A Tennessee outfielder by the name of Waustelauffer asks for a trial with the Senators. His name alone would keep him out of the box scores.

• • •

Shortstop Tesch, who was with Brantford last season, will turn out with Ottawa next season. Shaughnessy thinks Tesch will develop into the best shortstop in the league.

• • •

Umpire Billy Phyle, who was grabbed by the International League in 1912, and then sent to the Pacific Coast League, made a hit on the coast during the past season, and he will be retained.

• • •

Benny Speer, who was with London in 1912, will play for the New Haven Club, in the Eastern Association, next season.

• • •

Fred Ostermeyer, who was with Ottawa early last season, will pitch for Louis Cook's Asheville team next season. Ostermeyer tried to get back with Ottawa, but Shaughnessy didn't want him.

• • •

George Ort, who managed the Saints last year, is going to settle down in St. Thomas and open up a business there. He has practically decided to retire from baseball.

• • •

The Ottawa team will likely train in South Bend early in the spring. The Terre Haute club has already written the Senators, asking for exhibition dates.

SOVEREIGNS IN EXILE

BRITAIN HAS PROTECTED MANY AND MADE A FEW.

While European Monarchs Hurry to England When They Lose Their Thrones the Imperial Authorities Have Often Been Forced to Unseat a Savage Ruler—Colonies Have Several of Them.

The lot of a dethroned king must be dreadful, said the first Napoleon, when he had had but a brief tenure of his imperial throne, little dreaming, we may be sure, that the fate he thus described would one day be his own. And it needs but a slight acquaintance with history to prove that few men are more to be pitied than those who are flung into obscurity and poverty from the splendours of palaces and the homage of the world.

Not that poverty is, by any means, the lot of all dethroned monarchs. There have been few more pitiful objects than Louis Philippe of France and his queen when, on that bleak March morning in 1848, they landed at Newhaven in the guise of "Mr. and Mrs. Smith" to spend their days in exile. But although Louis Philippe never saw again the throne from which he had been driven with the threats and execrations of the mob in his ears, he lived to his last day a king, in the almost regal luxury of Claremont.

When King Manuel's crown was snatched from his head he found a refuge and a welcome in the sumptuous home of his uncle, the Duc d'Orleans, at Wood Norton, where he had an environment no less splendid than that he had left behind in Lisbon, with the proud symbols of majesty around him and royal chamberlains to do his bidding. And to-day he has no lack of means to play the king in exile with his private fortune and a pension of £8,000 a year.

The Empress Eugenie has spent many lonely and sorrowful years since that September day, in 1870 when as an exile she set foot on English soil at Dover; but at her palatial English home she lacks nothing of splendour and luxury that money can buy. And similarly fortunate in disaster were Queen Isabella of Spain and other dethroned sovereigns, whose exile has at least not lacked its gilding.

Within the last score of years Britain has had in her custody at least as many minor potentates who have been stripped of their regal robes. In India she has found modest homes for Yakoob Khan and Ayoub Khan, of Afghanistan, and the ex-King of Manipur. The King of Benin and Uganda; Prempeh, ruler of Ashanti; Zebeher, a chieftain of the Sudan; Lobengula's three sons—these and many more minor royalties have been placed out of harm's way and provided with small incomes on which to ruminate on life's vanities.

Prempeh, who once lorded it over Ashanti, was turned out of his kingdom in 1896, and was carried off to Sierra Leone to spend his days in unwarlike leisure. He lives, we were told not long ago, in a mud-hut at Freetown, with a "Civil List" allowance of fifty shillings a week, and a retinue of a police superintendent and seven soldiers to keep watch and ward over him.

While Englishmen are playing golf amid the ruins of his palace, Prempeh still clings tenaciously to his royal state under conditions which would surely dishearten any other man. His chief pleasure is to parade the streets dressed in his state robes and ornaments, with his wives and attendants in his wake; and whenever he worships at the local Presbyterian church he never appears without his umbrella-bearer and his stool-bearer as in the days when he made his regal progresses to his devotions in his capital.

For some years Prempeh has had a rival in discrowned dignity in Samory, once a great potentate of West Africa, whom the French sent to languish at Kayes. His ex-majesty, who began his adventurous life as a slave, and won his kingdom by an indomitable will and brute strength, now sits on a mat instead of a throne, and spends his days in the puffing of interminable cigarettes.

Behazzin, Dahomey's fallen ruler, plays the king, like Samory, on the lowly throne of a mat in the Martinique home, smoking pipe or cigar, with his three wives obsequiously in attendance. One holds his majesty's umbrella, another attends to the spittoon, while number three catches the ashes as they fall. Behazzin varies his smoking and meditating by frequent changes of attire, now decked in his royal trappings, now in a suit of linen, cut in the latest colonial fashion.

Mwanga, one-time King of Uganda, fled to German territory when the fortunes of war went against him, and there he settled down quite happily on an allowance of four pounds a week; and Kabba Regga, ex-Emperor of Kitwara, was left to sustain his royalty on a pound a week more.

The King of Benin, when he was run to earth in the bush, sixteen years ago, after his hideous massacre of a peaceable British mission, was sent to Old Calabar to repent of his enormities on a pittance of ten shillings a day. And with this change, curiously enough, he professes himself quite satisfied. "Sometimes," he once admitted to a visitor, "I miss the daily sacrifice of forty men and women to the great Ju-Ju. But really the sight got monotonous; most of the victims die so tamely. Now I am not troubled, and I live in peace."

A New President.

The new president of the Chambre de Commerce in Montreal is Mr. Adelard Fortier, who succeeds Lt.-Col. A. E. Labelle. Mr. Fortier was first vice-president of this notable body for the past year, and is president of the Montreal Dairy Co., Ltd. The new president was soon convinced that his duties are to be no merely official function. A report was presented by the meeting of which he was himself chairman, concerning the epidemic of fires in Montreal, which the committee discovered to be due to three main causes, defective construction, carelessness and incendiarism. An educational campaign is recommended for housekeepers; also that the Chambre de Commerce should interest itself practically in fire-preventive devices in new buildings, and move for the passing of a law calling for a service of fire inspection.

The wedding was performed at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Alec Murray, 153 Rubidge Street, in the presence of a number of guests.

The couple left via C. P. R. 4:33 for a short honeymoon to Toronto, and on their return will reside on Elm Street.

GOLDEN WEDDING WAS CELEBRATED

Interesting Event Observed by Former Manvers Couple.

TORONTO Dec. 17.—Mr. and Mrs. J. B. Williamson, 43 Ulster St., celebrated their golden wedding last night, when their sons, daughters and grand-children tendered them a banquet.

Mr. and Mrs. Williamson were born at Manvers, Durham county 87 and 73 years ago respectively, and were married there fifty years ago by the late Rev. Mr. Windell. The couple moved to Toronto seven years ago. Nine sons and four daughters were born to the aged couple, all of whom are alive today. The eldest son, William, resides in Brandon, Man., and the others are Heber, residing at Lindsay; Milton and Emil at Grand View, Manitoba; Louis at Pontypool; Berney at Manvers; and Elmer, Clayton and Dalton at Toronto. The daughters are: Mrs. I. Dewell and Mrs. Olive Mitchell of Manvers and Mrs. Cain and Mrs. Sanderson of Toronto. There are 44 grandchildren and two great-grandchildren, the latter living in Manitoba. Mr. and Mrs. Williamson come from Scottish Presbyterian stock and are enjoying good health.

DR. MARSH'S LECTURE AND FAREWELL

The size, mass, motions and radiation, heat and chemical constitution of the sun were large subjects of study which the speaker could only mention in the lecture. The sun moves nine miles a second towards the constellation of Hercules, drawing all its family with it.

Dr. Marsh then went into an explanation of sun spots, mentioning various theories and saying that they were caused by accumulations of cooled gases, and that very few sun spots had occurred since the Borden government went into power, hence the mild weather we are having. He showed by diagrams the size of the sun, its mottled or granular appearance, the various formations of sun spots, the great volcanic fires of the sun and its appearance during an eclipse.

Probably his most important statement was that from a study of the sun, astronomers have almost completed data for predicting the kind of season.

A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speaker.

After the lecture the members of the Centre and a few friends adjourned to Coleman's Savoy Parlor where a banquet was prepared in honor of Dr. Marsh and as an opportunity for expressions of good wishes to him upon his departure. Various members and friends gave brief addresses in appreciation of Dr. Marsh's character and ability and all regretted his removal from this district. Among those who spoke were Mr. T. A. S. Hay, Mr. R. R. Hall, Mr. F. H. Dobbin, Rev. Robert Pogue, Mr. J. L. Milligan, Mr. T. C. Elliot, also Mr. Sanderson of Springville. Dr. Marsh made a suitable reply and assured the company that although he had moved so far away he would perhaps be more willing and eager to come and visit them than they would to have him.

Dr. Marsh made special reference to Hon. J. R. Stratton who, he said, had taken a great interest in the Centre. He had visited him that afternoon and was sorry to find him so low. A vote of sympathy was passed by the company to Mr. Stratton in his sickness.

LIKES US IN OUR NEW CLOTHES

(Lindsay Warder).

Since the taking over of the Peterboro Review by Brer Whalley, there has been a marked change for the better in that paper. New typesetting machines have not only increased the number of readable articles, but added decidedly to the appearance of the paper. The Christmas number issued a few days ago was a good introduction for Brer Whalley to the people of Peterboro: The fine display of special advertisements showed energy on the part of the management, as well as confidence on the part of the merchants. The whole number was well arranged and a credit to the new management and staff.

ASSESSMENT IS CONFIRMED

Appeals Against Assessment on Romaine Street Properties Dismissed.

In the La Plante appeals against assessment on properties on Romaine Street, Judge Huycke in his judgment, says: Evidence was taken on the 4th inst, but judgment was reserved, I being informed an application was being made for the reception of new evidence or argument on both sides. This has not been done so I proceed to dispose of the appeals.

The essential matter in considering appeals from assessment is the "actual value" of the land.

On evidence taken before me and the weight of it, I must conclude the lands, the assessment of which is complained of, are assessed at less value than their "actual value" which is the absolute criterion before me. It is true that to an extent another element comes in, that is reference to the assessment, or when or what similar land in the vicinity is assessed, but in this case I do not think the evidence justifies me interfering with the Assessment Act. The various land assessments appealed against, must therefore be confirmed. The appeals are dismissed accordingly.

CITIZENS GIVE GLAD WELCOME TO INTRODUCTION OF HYDRO

An Auspicious Occasion in the History of the Electric City

Municipal ownership got away to a good start last night and citizens of this fair Electric City, rejoiced indeed. One hundred magnetite arc lamps did their prettiest when Mayor Bradburn jerked the string to the accompaniment of band music and wild hurrahs. Let the good work continue.

Not In It

Twenty-third Street, New York, hasn't got anything on George St., Peterborough, Ont. The long expected Great White Way lived up to advance notices and Hydro Bill's proposition to give the people something for their money, as carried out by the Power Committee, made a big hit with the gathering. And there was some crowd. Some said it was great display and a step in the right direction. Another added "bully for the Hydro." They all had something to say and that something was complimentary. It was a big success.

At the corner of George and Charlotte Streets where the inaugural ceremonies were billed to take place, the members of the Council arrived shortly before eight o'clock and the crowds soon gathered. Some people appeared to be somewhat disappointed because they could not see the button that Mayor Bradburn was to operate. However they forgot all about it when the light shon forth. Mayor Bradburn started the proceedings by stating the object of all the hilarity. He said the members of the Council had given much of their time to the project and now at last they were able to give the people a proper street lighting system. The Council of next year would take in hand the matter of extensions and also a lighting system for the residentiels.

Then the button was pressed, the gathering cheered and the People's candidate called for a cheer for Mayor Bradburn. The response was made in good energetic fashion.

Continuing his remarks, Mayor Bradburn motioned the gathering to glance at the Great White way, saying: "Ladies and gentlemen, there is the best lighted street in the Dominion of Canada and that's saying a good deal. In calling upon Ald. Johnston, His Worship said he wished to give Ald. Johnston credit for the work he had done.

A Grand Principle

Ald. Johnston said he was proud of having the opportunity to tell of the introduction of one of the grandest principles that had come into the greatest town in Canada. It was a principle for the benefit of the great masses of the people. He referred to the proposed continuance of the work which would complete the system in the city, and bring about a saving of dollars and cents to the people. So long as the Council remained faithful, these benefits would be procured. He believed that all the power in the province should be in the hands of the people and not in the control of monopolies.

Bands Were There

Ald. Johnston desires ot express his appreciation of the kindness and patriotism shown by the Salvation Army band, and also the Maple Leaf band, who assisted in the ceremonies, and gave a liberal supply of music. Nearly all the members of the Temple band were in their places. The Maple Leaf band made a fine showing in their new uniforms.

$25,000 Spectacle

The grand spectacle before the citizens was prepared at a cost of $25,000, that amount having been expended on the work so far accomplished.

The members of the Power Committee are Mayor Bradburn, Ald. Johnston, Chairman Ald. Buller, Ald. Duncan and Ald. Gordon.

The power for the lights is being supplied by the Peterboro Light and Power Company.

CHILD PLAYED WITH MATCHES AND WAS BURNED TO DEATH

BOBCAYGEON, Dec. 18.—A sad and distressing accident happened when little Margaret Nichols, a child of 3 years, daughter of Garner Nichols, Jr., met her death. Mrs. Nichols had just left the house, on Helen St., and ran across the road to a neighbor, leaving the child alone in the house. In some way yet unexplained one of the children got possession of some matches, and in playing with them, little Margaret's clothes caught fire. She ran into the yard screaming. Percy Nichols, living close by, ran out, tore off the clothing and put out the fire as well as he could, but she was so terribly burned that she died about six. The litle thing was spoken off as a bright cherry girl in the home. We extend our sincerest sympathies to the parents in their bereavement. The funeral will be held tomorrow.

POULTRY ASSOCIATION HAS BEEN ORGANIZED AT NORWOOD

NORWOOD, Dec. 18.—At a meeting in the Department of Agriculture's office the organization of a Norwood Poultry Association was finally completed. Steps towards the formation of the association were taken at a previous meeting held held recently. Besides the transacting of business relating to organization a talk on the White Wyandotte was taken up by Rev. Fr. Kelly. At the second meeting, the board of officers was completed and a constitution for the club was passed. The next meeting of the Association will be held on the second Monday in January, when Mr. L. O'Keefe will lead a discussion on the White Orphington. At these meetings a bird of the species under study is actually placed on exhibit and used for demonstration purposes in the course of discussion.

The following gentlemen have been elected officers of the association:

Hon. Pres.—J. A. Sexsmith, M.P., Jas. Thompson, M.P.P.,
President—Stan. Hendren.
Vice President—W. E. Pakenham.
Sec. Treas.—J. E. Roxburgh.
Directors—F. C. McRae, B.S.A., T. Rahal, H. Fry and Rev. Fr. Kelly.

WORKERS WERE ENTERTAINED

A Jolly Evening at St. George's Church Schoolroom.

Last evening a meeting of the workers and others at the Bazaar was held at St. George's Church in the school room. Nearly all the booth holders and friends who assisted at the Bazaar were present and the evening was spent in a jolly manner, with songs, recitations and addresses.

As usual on these occasions Miss Quartermain, Mr. Ward, and Mr. O'Flynn and others assisted in the program and Mr. Dickenson acted as organist.

To the great delight of the hard-working members of St. George's Church and their friends, who were present, Ald. Gordon, Ald. Gillespie, one of the candidates for Mayor, ex-Ald. Robert Hicks, one of the candidates for Water Commissioners, and J. J. Turner Jr., one of the members of the Board of Education, were present and gave addresses, which appeared to be extremely well received and acceptable to the audience.

Mr. Price and his congregation deserve great credit for the sucess they had at the Bazaar, and it was stated last evening that the whole debt of the Church had been wiped out, and all other liabilities of the Congregation had been satisfield.

It might be mentioned as an indication of the feeling of the people of the South End, that when ex-Ald. J. J. Turner mentioned that the day might not be far off when the South End and the City would join hands, there was loud applause.

A LETTER TO THE COUNCIL

P.L. and P. Company Would Buy out Otonabee Power Co.

SOME ARGUMENTS

As Put Forth by the Two Power Companies

The original of the following letter has been sent to the City Council.

December 16, 1913.

The Municipal Corporation,
Of the City of Peterborough,
Peterborough, Ont.

Gentlemen:

Owing to the fact that the Otonabee Company's franchise expires on the 1st of January, 1914, and that your Council have seen fit, not only to refuse to submit to the people a by-law for its renewal, but have also ordered that Company to remove its poles and wires from the streets of your city, which will leave over 600 of your ratepayers without light and power, we, the Otonabee Power Company, Limited, beg to make the following application to your Council:

Under By-law 1111, it is provided that no company having poles or wires on the streets of the City of Peterborough, shall sell or lease to any other Company having similar rights, its poles or wires without the consent of the City Council. We do not admit that this by-law applies to the Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited, but, without prejudice, we beg to propose the following temporary solution of the difficulty:

You claim the right to expropriate all the property of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited, in the City of Peterborough, and are proceding with that end in view. If you should purchase this property there is not the slightest doubt that you will need a great deal, if not all of the Otonabee Power Company's system, which, if torn down by us, will simply have to be rebuilt by you.

We, therefore ask you to consent to a sale, by the Otonabee Power Company, Limited, of its Distribution System and Substation, and all its property within the limits of the City of Peterborough, to the Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited, at the price of $48,000.00 which, we understand, is a reasonable value for the same, and we, the Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited, undertake that, in the event of your expropriating and paying for the whole of our system, to sell you such part of that system that has been acquired under this sale, from the Otonabee system, at the same price we paid for same.

The Peterborough Light and Power Company, Limited, will also undertake to supply all the customers of the Otonabee system, from the 1st of January, 1914, until such time as the City takes over such of its plant, at the same rates and on the same terms as the said customers are now being supplied by the Otonabee Company.

We beg to point out to you that this seems to be the fairest solution of the difficulty in which your City and ourselves are placed. If you proceed to order the Otonabee Company's poles off the streets, we will take them off, and, as we have before pointed out, will leave several hundreds of your citizens without light or power.

We also beg to inform you that if the Otonabee's system is removed off the streets that the Peterborough Company will immediately proceed under its franchise which is still intact, to erect poles and wires to serve these people, and you will have to take over these new poles and wires, which will certainly cost more than the purchasing of the Otonabee system.

If you contemplate delay or refusal to allow us to erect these poles, you will simply leave a large body of your citizens without light or power and they will be the people who will suffer most.

This proposition is made you without prejudice to any rights that the Peterborough Power Company may have, to purchase the Otonabee system without the consent of your Council.

We would be obliged if you would immediately call a special meeting of your Council to consider this matter, when we would be glad to wait before you and discuss the means of carrying it out. We will also be willing to supply you with an inventory of the plant of the Otonabee Power Company, that is to be purchased by the Peterborough Company, with our values on the same, so that you may have it checked up with your own engineers, in order to satisfy you that the price Peterborough is offering for the same, is a fair, reasonable and just one not only to ourselves and the Otonabee shareholders, but also the City, if it eventually takes it over.

Yours truly,
The Otonabee Power Co., Ltd.,
(Signed) W. G. Ferguson,
President.
The Peterborough Light & Power Company, Limited,
(Signed) A. B. Colville,
Vice-President.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP GIVES OTTAWA PROFITS OF $45,000

MEMBERS OF THE POWER COMMITTEE HAVE GIVEN MUCH TIME TO THE HYDRO PROJECT

The thanks of the ratepayers are due to the members of the Power Committee for the services they have given to the City, during their treatment of the Hydro Electric project. The work has entailed much sacrifice. All the members of the Committee have their own business interests to look after, but there have been many occasions when they allowed their own interests to give way before the City's business. They have spent days and nights in committee and with conferences with the powers that be and last night they delivered the goods. It was good goods too.

MERRY TIME AT OPENING OF THE NEW FREIGHT SHEDS

Large Attendance of Guests, Who Enjoyed the Hospitality of the Company

The grand ball given last night by the C.P.R. to celebrate the opening of their new freight sheds was a shining success in every way. Many who were present went through courtesy of the company and expected to find a floor far from suitable for dancing, but they were greatly surprised for a more ideal dance hall could not be hoped for. The main part of the building embracing a floor space of 150 feet by 50 feet, was reserved for the dancers, while those not so disposed, found entertainment at the card tables placed in the large and well-lighted office.

The large hall was beautifully decorated and streamers of small flags gave the place a very bright appearance. At each end a large Union Jack and a Stars and Stripes hung side by side. The Grand Opera House Orchestra, which is by no means foreign to local dancers, was situated on an elevated platform, about mid-way between the ends and to one side. Their platform was also decorated very artistically. At every alternate post a lemonade fount was placed and this added greatly to comfort and convenience.

—About nine o'clock floor manager Archie Moore arranged the some 250 persons present for the Grand March. Mr. E. L. Bowes and Miss Margaret Byers were the leaders. When they were in sixteens across the hall be halted them and Mr. W. S. Dodd, the local agent, in a short speech welcomed the guests and wished them an enjoyable evening. He then called on Mr. W. J. Uren, superintendent of the C.P.R., of Toronto. Mr. Uren stated that he was pleased to see such a number of citizens present and hoped the hall would supply ample accommodation both for the dance and also for the use of the city. If it was not, he gave them the assurance that one would be built that would. In conclusion he thanked them for the attendance and for the privilege of being present with them.

A feature of the dance worthy of special mention was the great convenience given the ladies. A cloak room with Mrs. Hunt in charge, was set aside for their purpose and it was fitted with a large mirror. The cloak room for the gentlemen was in the capable hands of Mr. Alex. McGregor, assisted by Messrs. J. H. Carey, C. Taber, G. Torence, and R. Cuff.

The gentlemen who were on the reception committee and who were indefatigable in the discharge of their duties as hosts were Messrs. W. S. Dodd, J.W. Byers, A.E. Edwards, W. E. Curry and W. McMillan.

Some of the Guests

Among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Uren, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Dodd, Police Chief and Mrs. Thompson, Fire Chief and Mrs. Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Sandy, Mr. and Mrs. F. Pratt, Mr. and Mrs. W. McMillan, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Byers, Mr. and Mr.s John McDonald, Mr. and Mrs. A G Edwards, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Skinner, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Hancock, Mr. and Mrs. M. Lyle, Mr. and Mrs. W. Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. George Spicer, Mr. and Mrs. N. King, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Wilson, Toronto, Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Munro, Mr. J. H. Burnham M.P. Alderman and Mrs. Buller, Mr. R. Mr. T. Hooper and his staff had charge of the refreshments and as usual they carried out their duties in a very efficient manner.

"Button holes" were supplied the members of the freight and office staffs by Jordon Bros.

WORK ON THE NEW LAKE SHORE LINE

Will Be in Operation Some Time in January.

C. P. R. superintendent W. J. Uren of Toronto, who was present at the C. P. R. ball last evening, spared a Review scribe a few moments betwen dances and acquainted him with the fact that the new lake shore road between Agincourt and Glen Tay, (a few miles this side of Smith Falls), would in all probability be in operation by the middle of January. At present there are 26 work trains out and every available means is in force to rush the work along. This line is to handle only through freight; no local will be carried. It will cater most especially to the grain and other produce west of Toronto but the main bulk of western grain will come via the main line and the Port McNichol.

In reference to the new sheds, Mr. Uren stated that it was the custom for the C. P. R. to keep ahead of the times and thus such a first-class shed was built. There had been so much construction work going on that in some places the Company fell behind a little, but this past year they have put forth an extra effort to catch up. He also intimated that if the new sheds were found to be too small this would be remedied without delay. Before he could make any definite statement along this line another cordillion was starting and he forsooke the scribe to get a partner.

FREIGHT SHEDS OPEN TO-MORROW

Freight will be received at and delivered from the new C. P. R. freight sheds commencing tomorrow morning. The International Harvester Co. will take over the old sheds, for use as a distributing point.

Sale of Debentures

The Finance Committee met yesterday afternoon and accepted tenders for the sale of Hydro debentures.

The Trades and Labor Council, last night endorsed the candidature of Mr. J. J. Hartley,

MR. HICKS HAS NOT WITHDRAWN

IMPROVEMENT AT OAK ORCHARD

Mr. Perry Alexander Makes Use of Mail Box Post

That the people in Harvey appreciate the result of Mr. Burnham's untiring efforts in obtaining the Peterborough Lakehurst Rural Mail Route is amply shown by steps taken by those benefitted.

One in particular who has added a little to this work is Mr. Perry Alexander of Oak Orchard. He has fitted his mail post with signs denoting the distance to Buckhorn, 10 miles, and to Peterborough, 16 miles. Not only does this add to the appearance of his gate, but it cannot be over-estimated as a help to autoists and tourists.

Judgment Reserved

Judgment in the case of the two local young men charged with theft of jewelry worth $100 from the store of R. C. Braund, was reserved until the 26th., by Magistrate Dumble this morning.

At their hearing a week ago both men pleaded guilty to the charge. G. N. Gordon acted for the prisoners and V. J. McElderry represented the Crown.

The theft was committed last fall when several local houses were entered and valuables taken. The prisoners also pleaded guilty to taking $2 from the store of Nelson Routley.

Air-rake Demonstration.

The air-brake practical instruction car is in Lindsay to-day. It visits this section once every three years or so and the engineers are called upon to pass a practical examination on the working of the air brakes. Among those who went to Lindsay to-day were Engineers Pilling, Clegg and Levoy and their firemen.

Reductions Are Made in Rates for Power and Commercial Lighting

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—The Municipal Electric Department will conclude this year with a net profit of $45,000.

This announcement was made by Mayor Ellis in a statement definitely declaring the promised reduction in light and power rates.

The reduced schedule of rates has been approved by the Hydro-Electric Commission and the city of Ottawa will have lower rates than any other municipality under the jurisdiction of Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

The reduction in the price of power will vary from 10 to 30 per cent., according to the quantity used, and whether it is used on or off the peak of the load.

Commercial rates will be reduced at least 10 percent. and possibly more.

One of the main features of the rates is that all flat rates will be abolished, and in future power and commercial lighting, which have heretofore been on flat rates, will be paid for on the meter, the same as house lighting.

The New Rates

The new rates to come into effect on January 1, 1914, are as follows:

Domestic Lighting—A service charge of 4c per 100 square feet, and a consumption charge of 2½c per K.W.H., with a 20 per cent. prompt payment discount.

Commercial Lighting—6c per K. W.H. for the first 30 hours use per month of the installed capacity, and 2½c per K.W.H. for all additional consumption, with a prompt payment discount of 20 per cent.

"If the average daily use in Ottawa come down to that the reduction of 10 per cent. would be very much greater. If tungsten lamps are used the consumer could get an average daily lighting of ten hours and still have his rate 10 per cent. less than the old one. Tungsten lamps are now being sold by the Municipal Electric Department at a very cheap price, which is the actual cost.

"The "Hydro-Electric Power Commission has ordered that arc lamps

PETERBOROUGH, THURSDAY, DEC. 18, 1913.

WASHINGTON AND DOWNING STREET.

IT LOOKS AS THOUGH Germany was coming into line in this matter of naval holiday. Since it has been mooted by Mr. Churchill, the idea has been favorably considered by the United States. This has had a salutory effect upon the German people, who are suffering under the excessive taxation necessary for the carrying out of the policy of excessive naval enterprize. There is at present no explanation as to what is exactly meant by a "naval holiday" any further than that there should be a halt in the building of Dreadnoughts. A navy is, of course, composed of all kinds of craft and machinery, and it would be scarcely possible to entirely suspend naval operations. The main object is to curb the foolish competition that has been going on in armaments in Europe.

A holiday would give the nations breathing space, it would demonstrate to them the fact that it is possible to carry on the government of a country without the expenditure of vast sums on armaments, for which there is no reasonable use. There is no excuse in these days for the increase in implements of war, whether on sea or land, except for defensive purposes. The British navy is so large because the Empire is worldwide; that is Britain's excuse for retaining the supremacy of the seas. The German Empire is small and does not need half the present German navy to defend it. The extra ships then must be designed for aggressive purposes or they are merely expensive play things.

There is one bright and hopeful aspect of the situation created by the acceptance by the United States of the holiday proposal,it may well be a prelude to a naval alliance of the English-speaking world. Economy and co-operation are the guiding principles of modern organization. What a vision of unity and strength there is in the possibility of a naval combine in the Anglo-Saxon world! Before such an organization the German, or any other peril would sink into insignificance. Yet we are perhaps nearer to such a consumation than we realize, and it may well be that the Senate at Washington would be more eager to co-operate with Downing Street in this matter than our own Senate at Ottawa, as it is at present constituted. It is surely a humiliating rebuke to us as one of the principle participants in the benefits of the British Empire that an independent Republic should repose more confidence in the heart of that Empire than we have displayed in the last two years.

THE VALUE OF THE STAR-GAZER.

REV. DR. MARSH, who gave his farewell lecture as president of the Peterborough Centre R. A.S., on Tuesday evening, will be greatly missed not only at Springville, but in Peterborough, and many citizens have expressed regret upon his departure. Dr. Marsh's genius is of a kind that is not fully appreciated by the man-in-the-street. That composite personage is so much taken up with the stars or meteoroids which pass to and fro in the glare of the shop-windows that he seldom lifts his eyes above the roof. To him the stars, if he ever catches a glimpse of them, are merged in the arc lights of the city, that is—where they are not entirely obliterated by these "tallow candles."

We can scarcely blame the people who have to get their living out of the earth for confining their observations for the time being to the star upon which they happen to find themselves. For after all, the most important planet of the whole system is this orb called "The Earth," and there is quite enough to engage our attention in the brief space of time allotted to us here. But how many of us realize we are on a planet at all?

How much would we know of this terrestrial orb if it were not for the men who have turned their attention to the heavens? Do we owe nothing to men like Galileo or Newton? The man-in-the-street may be ignorant of it, but he is head and ears in debt to the "star-gazer," whom he despises. He is in the same position as the Canadian who can see no other country on the map but Canada, whose vision is so confined, that he cannot take in the Empire and the great powers with which the Empire is daily contending. Dr. Marsh in his lecture showed that the whole solar system is tied up together, that one orb cannot swerve from its orbit without affecting another. That the fires of the sun enter daily into our business and domestic life. That every department of science, mechanical and even medical owes something to the astronomer.

The value of Dr. Marsh's work in Peterborough as a scientist cannot be estimated. He worked quietly, but diligently and had surrounded himself with a coterie of intellectual men who in their turn have radiated the light and influence which they received from him. So that, although he goes to another part of Ontario, his work in Peterborough is sufficiently established to insure its continuance. The R.A.S. Peterborough Centre forms a small but a very essential part of the life of the community. Indeed we can scarcely be said to be civilized unless we can raise and sustain men of the type of Dr. Marsh. The city's thanks are due to him and our good wishes will follow him into his new field. We trust that, unlike Hally's comet, he will be a frequent visitor, that Peterborough may remain in the track of his orbit. He may be assured that the faithful few will be on hand to hail his appearance.

A WELL-LIGHTED CITY.

WITH the inauguration of Hydro-electric light in Peterborough, the present year's Mayor and Board of Aldermen have done the people a real service. This was more than apparent when the new system was placed in operation last night. The streets were well lighted and the new lamps gave forth all the illumination which is charged for. We all know how the energy, not alone in Peterborough, has been expended, so that often much more power than was being used was being paid for. Under the Hydro system this is not the case, as was quite apparent at Tuesday evening's illumination. It was thought that the lights were unnecessarily elevated, but this, too, proved to be an error of judgment, for it was soon seen that they are just right, and those who have had the matter in hand are to be commended for their good judgment, and as was well said by some of the speakers, Peterborough's main thoroughfare is now among the best lighted of Ontario's progressive cities. With the further development of the Hydro system we can hope to maintain this position against all comers, and the citizens generally who are users of electric light in their homes, will share in the advance that has been made.

THE COST OF LOVING.

THE LETHBRIDGE HERALD in its reply to The Review's editorial on the high cost of living, speaks of "THE HIGH COST OF LOVING." The spelling of the last word may be a printer's error, but it nevertheless opens up a new field for investigation, which we will dare to enter upon. We say "dare" advisedly, for we venture upon this dangerous subject with our eyes open..

There is really no difference between the two words "living" and "loving," they are, to a large extent, synonymous; for to love is to live and there is no real life without love. Take love out of life and what have you? You have existence merely. The Scriptures tell us that "God is Love," and scientists tell us that God is Life, and they both mean one and the same thing.

The high cost of living then is involved in the question of what it costs to fall in love and remain in love. To fall in love was always a pretty serious business. There may be some people who make light of it, whose love is of such a quality that they can fall in and out with equal agility. Men who play with the hearts of the fair sex like they play a game of skittles, and there are doubtless many of that sex who deserve no better treatment. But with the average young man this proposition of falling in love is a stiff one in these days, for one thing it is expensive, and an extravagance.

It is the women who are responsible for this high cost of living because they have set their hearts at such a high figure. It is no exaggeration to say that it costs a man as much in these days to keep the average wife as it cost to keep a wife and ten children a generation ago. Families of ten in these days are a rarity, and we do not plead for their return, but there is more to be said for the moderately fed and clothed large family than for the extravagantly kept small one. We all want to get as much as we can out of life, but we forget that we ourselves owe all that we have and are to those who lived and loved not solely in luxury and selfishness. Our fathers and mothers got something out of life, but they put something more into it and we are reaping to-day the benefits of what they put in. No generation lives unto itself. This generation is richer for the sacrifice of the one that preceded it, and the following generation will be poorer for the selfishness and extravagance of to-day.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

THERE IS QUITE A SLUMP in candidates for the Mayoralty just now. Who will be the next? Don't all speak at once.

A FLEET of aeroplanes is to attempt to cross the Sahara Desert, a distance of 1,400 miles. If this succeeds an aero-mail service is to be considered. The camel will then lose its sole right to be called the "ship of the desert."

TWO-YEAR-OLD Phyllis Graham died at Cobalt from eating some raw dough her mother was making into Christmas pudding. Poor little Phyllis.

IT IS SAID that Jim Larkin, the Labor leader, has not paid his house-rent since last August. There are some advantages in being a labor leader. But with the dying down of the Dublin revolt will come the ordinary routine of civilization, among which will be the land-lord calling for the rent and Jim will have to pay, or quit.

IT WAS PARTICULARLY gratifying to the Conservatives at Dr. Marsh's lecture to learn that no new sun-spots had appeared on the sun since the Borden Government came into power. Old Sol must be jealous of the brilliant galaxy of stars composing the Cabinet, he is keeping his face spotless.

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

No Claims for Wounds.

Kingston Standard.

The official Canada Gazette announces that "any officer serving in the Royal Canadian navy will be entitled to a gratuity on retiring because of wounds or ill health occasioned by service." The navy consists of the Rainbow, tied up at Victoria, and the Niobe, crewless at Halifax for a year.

German Officers' Manners.

Westminister Gazette.

Nearly all German officers are highly cultivated and well-mannered men; their conduct and ideals compare very well with those of officers of anywhere else. In recent years cases of quarrels between them and individual civilians have been practically unknown. The English notion that German officers are rude to civilians whom they meet in theatres, restaurants, and other public places, is mistaken. The observation of most foreigners is that the officers are the best-mannered class in the German Empire.

AN EDITORIAL WHICH DID NOT APPEAR

Following is an editorial which will not appear from the pen of Editor Fielding in the Montreal Telegraph:

"The Telegraph is glad to learn that the Borden government intends to introduce a measure for the relief of those who lost their savings in the collapse of the Farmers' Bank. The financial ruin brought upon hundreds of thrifty farmers in Ontario through the wrecking of this bank would have been prevented had the Minister of Finance at Ottawa (Hon. W. S. Fielding) insisted upon withholding the certificate under which the bank was authorised to do business, until the requirements of the Bank Act had been complied with. The Minister had ample notice of the irregularity under which the deposit with the Government was financed. He had his own suspicions and was in receipt of warnings from men of undoubted repute. He was warned by the Canadian Bankers' Association in time to recall the certificate. He took no heed of these repeated warnings. In the face of them he sanctioned the launching of this bank on its career of financial piracy with the result that many families lost their savings of a lifetime. It is only right that the Government should come to the help of the sufferers whose money was taken from them under these circumstances.

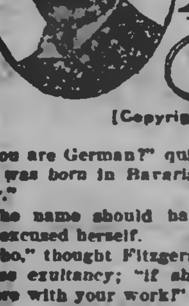
A SPLENDID HAZARD



By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

"You are German?" quickly.

"I was born in Bavaria, Miss Killigrew."

"The name should have told me." She excused herself.

"Oho," thought Fitzgerald, with malicious exultancy; "if she doesn't interfere with your work!"

But with introspection this exultancy grew suddenly dim. How about himself? Yes, here was a question that would bear some close inspection. Was it really the wish to capture a supposable burglar? He determined then and there not to prolong his visit more than three or four days, just to satisfy her that there was no ghost in the chimney. Then he would return to New York. He had no more right than Breitmann to fall in love with the daughter of a millionaire. Loving her was not impossible, but leaving at an early day would go toward lessening the probability. He was not afraid of Breitmann. He was foreigner enough to accept at once his place and to appreciate that he and this girl stood at the two ends of the world.

And Breitmann's mind, which had up to this time been deep and unruffled as a pool, became strangely disturbed.

The time moved on to luncheon. Breitmann took the part of listener and spoke only when addressed.

"I must tell you, Mr. Breitmann," said Laura, "that a ghost has returned to us."

"A ghost?" interestedly.

"Yes. My daughter," said the admiral tolerantly, "believes that she hears strange noises at night, tapping, and such like."

"Oh!" politely. Breitmann broke his bread idly. It was too bad. She had not produced upon him the impression that she was the sort of woman whose imagination embraced the belief in spirits. "Where does this ghost do its tapping?"

"In the big chimney in the library," she answered.

No one observed Breitmann's hand as it slid from the bread, some of which was scattered upon the floor. The scars, betraying emotion such as no mental effort could control, deepened, which is to say that the skin above and below them had paled.

"Might it not be some trial visit of your patron saint, Santa Claus?" he inquired, his voice well under control.

"Really, it is no jest," she affirmed. "For several nights I have heard the noise distinctly, a muffled tapping inside the chimney."

"Suppose we inspect it after luncheon?" suggested Fitzgerald.

"It has been done," said the admiral. Outwardly he was still skeptical, but a doubt was forming in his mind.

"It will do no harm to try it again," said Breitmann.

If Fitzgerald noted the subdued excitement in the man's voice he charged it to the moment.

"Take my word for it," avowed the admiral, "you will find nothing. Bring the coffee into the library," he added to the butler.

The logs were taken out of the fireplace, and as soon as the smoke cleared the young men gave the inside of the chimney a thorough going over. They could see the blue sky away up above. The opening was large, but far too small for any human being to enter down it. The mortar between the bricks seemed for the most part undisturbed. Breitmann made the first discovery of any importance. Just above his height, standing in the chimney itself, he saw a single brick projecting beyond its mates. He reached up and shook it. It was loose. He wrenched it out and came back into the light.

"See! Nothing less than a chisel could have cut the mortar that way. Miss Killigrew is right." He went back and with the aid of the tongs poked into the cavity. The wall of bricks was four deep, yet the tongs went through. This business had been done from the other side.

"Well!" exclaimed the admiral, for once at loss for a proper phrase.

"You see, father? I was right. Now, what can it mean? Who is digging out the bricks, and for what purpose? And how, with the alarms all over the house, to account for the footprints on the floor?"

"It is quite likely that something is hidden in the chimney and some one knows that it is worth hunting for. This chimney is the original, I should judge." Fitzgerald addressed this observation to the admiral.

"Never been touched during my time or my father's. But we can soon find out. I'll have a man up here. If there is anything in the chimney that ought not to be there he'll dig it out and save our midnight visitor any further trouble."

"Why not wait a little while?" Fitzgerald ventured. "With Breitmann and me in the house we might trap the man."

"A good scheme!"

"He comes from the outside somewhere; from the cellar probably. Let us try the cellar." Breitmann urged this with a gesture of his hands.

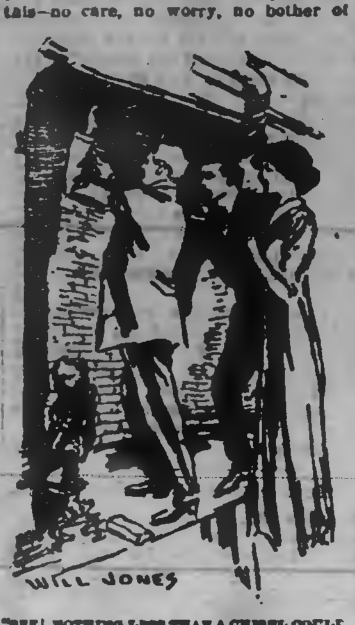
"There'll be sport," said Fitzgerald.

The coffee was cold in the cups when they returned to it. The cellar, as far as any one could learn, was free from any signs of recent invasion. It was puzzling.

"And the servants?" Breitmann intimated.

"They have been in the family for years." The admiral shook his head convincedly. "I ask your pardon, my dear. My ears are not so keen as might be. I'm an old blockhead to think that you were having an attack of ghosts. But we'll solve the riddle shortly, and then we shan't have any trouble with our alarm bells," with a significant glance at Fitzgerald. "Well, Mr. Breitmann, suppose we take a look at the work? Laura, you show Mr. Fitzgerald the gardens. The view from the terrace is excellent."

Fitzgerald stood silent, musing at the girl's side. To dwell in a haven like this—no care, no worry, no bother of grubbing about in one's pockets for overlooked coins, no flush of excitement!



"SEE! NOTHING LESS THAN A CHISEL COULD HAVE CUT THE MORTAR THAT WAY."

"You must think me an odd girl."

"Pray why?"

"By the manner in which I brought you here."

"On the contrary, you are one of the few women I ever met who know something about scoring a good joke. Didn't your friend, Mrs. Coldfield, know my mother? And wasn't your father a great friend of my father's? As for being odd, what about me? I believe I stood on the corner and tried to sell plaster casts just to win a foolish club wager."

"Men can jest that way with impunity, but a woman may not. Still, I really couldn't help acting the way I did," with a tinkle in her voice and a twinkle in her eyes.

"Convention is made up of many idiotic laws. I suppose that's why I am always happy to leave convention behind, to be sent to the middle of Africa, to Patagonia or sign an agreement to go to the north pole."

"The north pole? Have you been to the arctic?"

"No, but I expect to go up in June with an Italian explorer."

"Isn't it terribly lonely up there?"

"It can't be worse than the Sahara or our own Death Valley. One extreme is as bad as the other. Some time I hope your father will take me along on one of those treasure hunts. I should like to be in at the finding of a pirate ship. It would make a boy out of me again."

His eyes were very handsome when he smiled. Boy? she thought. He was scarce more than that now.

"Pirates' gold! What a lure it has been, is and will be! Blood money b-r-r-r! I can see no pleasure in touching it. But humanity has gone on. The pirate is no more, and the highwayman is a thing to laugh at."

"Thanks to railways and steamships. It is beautiful here."

"We are nearly always here in the summer. In the winter we cruise. But this winter we remained at home. It was splendid. The snow was deep, and often I joined the village children on their bobsleds. I made father ride down once. He grumbled about making a fool of himself. After the first slide I couldn't keep him off the hill. He wants to go to St. Moritz next winter." She laughed joyously.

"I shall take the arctic trip," he said to himself irrelevantly.

"Let us go and pick some apple blossoms. They last such a little while, and they are so pretty on the table. So you were in Napoleon's tomb that day? I have cried over the king of Rome's toys. Did Mr. Breitmann receive those scars in battle?"

"Oh, no! It was a phase of his student life in Munich. But he has been under fire. He has had some hard luck." He wanted to add, "Poor devil!"

"You fought with Greece?"

"Yes."

"How that country always rouses our sympathy! Isn't there a little too much poetry and not enough truth about it?"

"There is. I fought with the Greeks because I disliked them less than the Turks."

"And Mr. Breitmann?"

He smiled. "He fought with the Turks to chastise Greece, which he loves."

"What adventures you two must have had! To be on opposing sides like that!"

"Opposing newspapers. The two angles of vision made our copy interesting. There was really no romance about it. It was purely a business transaction. We offered our lives and our pencils for a hundred a week and our expenses. Rather sordid side to it, eh? And a fourth rate order or two"—

"You were decorated?" excitedly. "I am sure it was for bravery."

"Don't you believe it. The king of Greece and the sultan both considered the honor conferred upon us as good advertising."

"You are laughing."

"Well, war in the Balkans is generally a laughing matter. Sounds brutal, I know, but it is true."

"I know," gayly. "You are conceited and are trying to make me believe that you are modest."

"A bullseye!"

"And this Mr. Breitmann has been decorated for valor? And yet today he becomes my father's private secretary. The two do not connect."

"May I ask you to mention nothing of this to him? It would embarrass him. I had no business to bring him into it."

She grew meditative, brushing her lips with the blossoms. "He will be something of a mystery. I am not overfond of mysteries outside of book covers."

"There is really no mystery. But it is human for a man in his position to wish to bury his past greatness."

By and by the sun touched the southwest shoulder of the hill, and the two strolled back to the house.

From his window Breitmann could see them plainly.

"Curse those scars!" he murmured, striking with his fist the disfigured cheek which upon a time had been a source of pride and honor. "Curse them!"

To be continued.

Tenting

By EMERSON BURRIS

My doctor told me to go into the country and live outdoors.

To get the whole benefit of the situation I set up a tent. I built a floor with my own hands and did what I could to make my habitation attractive. In this I failed signally. It is not in a man to beautify a home. At any rate, it was not in me. The interior furnishings of mine consisted of a cat and a trunk. As for food, I was encamped on the bank of a stream in which there were plenty of fish, and when I wanted meat I could shoot game, but not near where I was. I had to go quite a distance for that and usually made an all day trip of it.

In the region near about me there were scattered houses, some of them farmhouses, some summer cottages for city persons, for the country was very beautiful and the air salubrious. The greater part of these houses were now vacant, but there were a number of them occupied. None of them were very near me, or, rather, in selecting a camping ground I got as far as possible away from all of them.

One day, on returning from a hunting trip, on entering my tent I met with a surprise. A dainty little washstand, with bowl and pitcher, stood in one corner, while above it hung a small mirror. Several colored lithographs were pinned to the tent walls. On the floor was a wicker armchair such as is used in summer on piazzas. In the center of the tent was a tiny table, with a lamp on it. I had used a candle.

That some woman had done all this was my first thought; that she had seen me and taken an interest in me was my second; that she was young, comely and otherwise attractive was my third.

These preliminaries having flashed through my mind, I looked about me to observe the cottages nearest me with a view to locating the lady who had made me comfortable. The surrounding dwellings were all on higher ground and my view of most of them unobstructed by trees. There they were, bathed in the light of the setting sun, but not one of them had a word of information for me. And yet I fancied that concealed in one of them a girl had a pair of glasses fixed on me, watching to see how I acted at the moment of my discovery of her handiwork. So I stood in front of the tent with my face toward the landscape, took off my hat and threw a kiss.

No response came to me. The cottages were as mute as before. But in fancy I heard a musical laugh ringing out on the quiet air.

Building my fire in my improvised range, a number of flat stones, I proceeded to cook my supper, a brace of quails I had shot during the day. I was thinking the while that my benefactress was watching me. And the next day I had proof that she was, for, going to the spring from which I obtained my water supply, on my return I found sticking in the ground a few yards from my tent an arrow and wrapped about it a bit of paper bearing the words:

Leave anything you wish cooked at the store and it will be attended to.

I was not slow in availing myself of the invitation—not that I needed much culinary work done, but because I hoped thereby to get a clew of the cook. But in this I was disappointed. The storekeeper was an old woman, who was very deaf, or pretended to be; at least she turned a deaf ear to my inquiries. The only reply I got was "Tomorrow." I inferred that I was to come tomorrow for the bird I left, and when I did so I received it deliciously cooked.

I will not specify the devices I employed to find out who was my benefactress. I made excuses to chat with several of the ladies of the neighborhood. Of one I begged the loan of a needle and thread, of another a little baking powder, of another some quinine. Each and every one of these persons granted my request willingly, but I gained no information from any one of them.

I discovered my girl, however, and by accident, or, rather, by taking advantage of seeing something that gave a clew. Having occasion to visit the express office at the railway station, I saw a box bearing the label of a vendor of sporting goods addressed to a Miss Clara Farnsworth. The size and shape of the box led me to believe that it contained archery goods. I straightway inquired which was the Farnsworth cottage, and my informant directed me to one no nearer and no farther than the rest, but especially well situated to get a view of my camp.

Tagging a bullet, with a note of thanks to Miss Farnsworth for her kindness to me, I fired the bullet into a large tree in the front yard of the Farnsworth place. The next day a note came to me through the post from Mrs. Farnsworth acknowledging that the family had seen my camp and could not resist a temptation to make it more comfortable. The lady also extended an invitation for me to call.

I found Mr. and Mrs. Farnsworth's family to consist of one daughter nineteen years old. Now that the secret was out she enjoyed exceedingly my description of my feelings at seeing my tent made more comfortable and at finding the note bearing arrow in my front yard. As I had suspected, she had watched me through an opera glass on both occasions. The laugh I had heard in imagination was a real one, though too far for me to hear.

HAD TO STOP WORK FROM THE PAIN

Suffered Ten Years Until "Fruit-a-tives" Cured Him

ST. THOMAS, ONT., May 22nd. 1913.

"I was troubled for ten years with the most distressing Constipation and Indigestion of the worst form.

No one could have been worse with these troubles than I was for this long time.

The pain from Indigestion was so severe that many times, I have had to stop work and lie down until the acute spasms passed away.

I took a lot of medicine—in fact, I guess I took about everything that was advertised—and gave them all a fair test—but got no relief. About a year ago, however, I was advised to try "Fruit-a-tives". I am mighty glad I did so for they seem to be made exactly for me.

They gave results in a very short time and I am now free from these diseases and enjoying perfect health.

My wife also used "Fruit-a-tives" and we both think they are the best medicine ever made."

FAMOUS FLOWER GARDENS.

Why Roses of the Rhone Valley Are Known All Over the World.

The famous rose gardens of Lyons, France, owe their excellence largely to a light soil, an abundance of sunshine and the proper amount of moisture. From time immemorial local rosarians have taken advantage of the favoring conditions until skill and interest in the industry have made the roses of the Rhone valley known throughout the parks and gardens of the world.

The ground where the roses are chiefly cultivated is on the outskirts of the city. It is flat, devoid of shade trees and protected only by high walls at the confines of the property. The rose plants are set out for commercial purposes in straight rows, sometimes a hundred feet long, the smaller plants six inches apart, with about ten inches between rows, while the larger grafted or budded varieties are inserted ten to twelve inches apart, with eighteen inches between rows.

Nearly all of the plants are out of doors. The greenhouses for a rose garden of fifteen acres do not number more than two, averaging thirty feet in length. It is only in exceptional winters that the plants have to be covered. Sometimes the tops of the older plants are rather loosely bound in straw. In every large commercial rose garden of Lyons hundreds of eglantine rose plants are kept to a single stalk for grafting. These are usually gathered by peasants in the woods or on uncultivated land and sold to the rose growers.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

BIG GROWTH REPORTED IN AUTOMOBILE BUSINESS

The growth of the automobile business in Ontario during the past year does not suggest any stringency of money. The fees from all sources for the year will aggregate approximately $100,000 for the past twelve months, against $73,255 for the previous year. The number of automobiles in use in the Province of Ontario is in round numbers 24,000, compared with 20,000 in 1912, and 1,176 in 1906. The increase in 1912 was practically 50 per cent. over the figures of 1911. In that year the fees from automobiles were $50,831 compared with $73,300 in 1912. In 1906 the receipts from motor licenses were $5,523 compared with practically $100,000 for the past twelve months.

Bigger Increases

For the past year there have been 3,000 motorcycle licenses issued and 24,000 automobile licenses, all owned in Ontario. Last year the automobiles owned in Ontario numbered 11,939, while 4,327 of the cars here were owned elsewhere. The motorcycles owned in Ontario in 1912 numbered 1,648, while 106 were owned outside of the province. This year the returns will show approximately 3,000 motors owned in Ontario. Almost 10 per cent. of the returns made under the head of motors were motorcycles and not automobiles. This year there were approximately 3,500 licenses issued to chauffeurs against 2,965 last year.

CHARGES DOWN

Express Companies' Commission on Freight Bills is Slashed.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—The Railway Commission yesterday issued an order reducing express charges for the handling of freight bills of lading and collection of moneys thereunder.

At present the express companies forward bills of lading for freight shipments, they, however, charging for the collection and return of money under the bill of lading one per cent.

By the order signed yesterday a change in the express classification has been made. Under this a new rule provides for the charge of one-eighth of one per cent. with a minimum of one per cent. on $100 on one company's line and one and one-half per cent. when carried by more than one company.

In practice, present and proposed rules will work out as follows: On $100, present $2, proposed one line $1, two line, $1.50; on $300, present $3, proposed one line $1, two line $1.50; on $500, present $5, proposed one line $1, two line $1.50; on $1,000, present $10, proposed one line $1.25, two line $1.50; on $2,000, present $20, proposed one line $2.00, two line $2.50.

Villa Says They are the Only Foreigners He Molested

HERMOSILLO, Sonora, Mexico, Dec. 18.—Gen. Francisca Villa, in a long report received here yesterday by Gen. Carranza, denied that any foreigners were molested in Chihuahua city, with the exception of the Spaniards, who were expelled. Villa suggested to the supreme leader of the revolutionists that the Chihuahua state capital be made his national provisional capital.

"The foreign consuls asked for guarantees for their countrymen, and these were given in full for all except Spanish," Gen. Villa said in his report.

"These, as you know, a most entirely have taken an undue part in the internal struggle of our country, and have put themselves always against the cause of the people, of whom we are the defenders."

Gen. Villa told of the institution of a civil government at Chihuahua city and of the enlistment of 200 Federal soldiers who were sent to Juarez on their own recognizance. In requesting Gen. Carranza to move his military headquarters to Chihuahua, Gen. Villa argued that the state was in the hands of insurgent forces, and that its central location would make the move most advantageous.

It was said here that Gen. Carranza had made no decision in the matter, but was considering it. Villa took occasion to reassure the Constitutionalist commander-in-chief of the "loyalty and constancy of your most affectionate subordinate."

Want Notes Guaranteed.

MEXICO CITY, Dec. 18.—A Presidential decree making the state bank notes legal tender throughout the republic; a guarantee fund to be subscribed by the state banks and deposited in the National Bank, and finally, a Government guarantee of the bank notes, is the program decided upon by a committee of five bankers, representing the National, the Bank of London and Mexico, and two or three other concerns, who met yesterday afternoon with the acting head of the finance department.

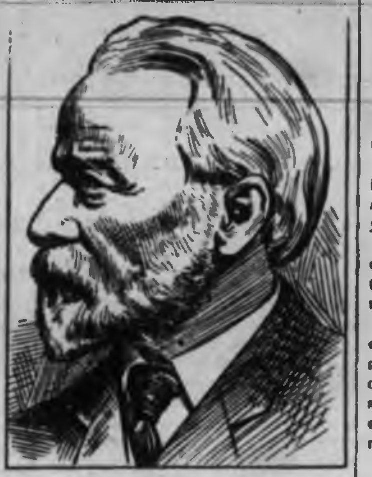
FATHER OF BOURASSA

HE IS A FRENCH-CANADIAN OF THE OLD SCHOOL.

Napoleon Bourassa Is Typical of the French Race In Canada at Its Finest—He Is a Painter, Architect and Decorator and Also a Novelist — Married Papineau's Youngest Daughter.

Thousands know Henri Bourassa, the picturesque schoolmaster of the Nationalists; tens of thousands have read his articles and heard him speak. Very few know much or anything about his father, Napoleon Bourassa. But to the select little world of art and literature in the Province of Quebec, the patriarchal old man of letters, upon whose face is written nobleness of character and loftiness of thought, holds a larger share of respect and affection than is even claimed by his brilliant offspring from the most devoted of his followers.

Napoleon Bourassa epitomizes the highest type of the cultured French-Canadian of the old school. At the age of eighty-five he can look back upon a life of noble endeavor to cultivate a taste for art and letters among his people. In this he labored not in vain, and old Quebec has many lasting monuments to his genius. When a very young man he courted and won the hand of the youngest and most talented daughter of that famous French-Canadian reformer, Papineau. She died in 1869, after twelve years of a happily married life, and Bourassa, still a young man, threw himself heart and soul into painting. He studied for some time under the late Theophile Hamel, at Quebec and Toronto, and was later for three years at Florence and Rome. During this time he was much with Overleck, the German religious painter, and followed his methods closely. In 1880 he was chosen by the Marquis of Lorne as a member of the newly-established Royal Academy of Arts, and served as its vice-president.



NAPOLEON BOURASSA.

The church of Notre Dame de Lourdes, Montreal, is an example of his powers as architect, painter and decorator, and even in recent years he has designed many fine churches in Canada and the United States.

Mr. Bourassa is not unknown to French-Canadian literature, and is the author of "Jaques et Marie," an historical romance relating to the departure of the unhappy Acadians in 1755, as well as several volumes of lectures. At the age of eighty-five he is still hale and hearty.

Milady's Mirror

Sports Help Good Looks.

The best exercises for women, says a physical director in a girls' college are those that are simply good fun and have no such special object as the winning of a match.

I would not for worlds forbid women to play games like tennis, hockey and golf, provided that they will not take them seriously.

The two essentials of any form of physical exercise are that it should be enjoyable and that it should be rhythmic. If you enjoy thoroughly your muscles may get fatigued, but your nerve force will not get exhausted, and if the exercise is rhythmic, if it goes with a swing that brings every muscle of the body into play, then the fatigue will be that glorious, glowing laxness of body.

The secret of that swing, of that rhythm, is this: The body must move the limbs and not the limbs the body. Watch a fine walker, a fine oarsman, a fine jumper. It is always the body that lifts and impels the limb. There indeed, you have the secret of grace in every action of life—you must make a gesture with your whole body, with your whole will.

A great weakness of golf, as of most other games played with a handle, is that the clubs must be swung on the right side of the body.

Instead of correcting the unwise preference we give to the right hand, such games accentuate it whereby one set of muscles (and one part of the brain) are developed at the expense of another, while the unvaried swing from right to left puts the body out of poise.

Hockey, too, has this fault (though its rhythm is more varied and continuous) and has the additional one of a low crouched attitude which cramps the organs and impedes the breathing.

Tennis is some ways finer. This more than any other ball game exercises every part of the body harmoniously. Its poses and gestures are many and varied; the player gets a quick eye, a lightning flick of the wrist, the instantaneous speed of a cat on the pounce, the power to hit with arm and body curled or far extended, and, if he will and is wise, he may hold the racket indifferently in his right hand or his left.

Unfortunately, though the rhythm is continuous, it is jerky, and, though the gestures are varied, few of them are noble—a tennis player rarely looks dignified—while, when the game is played well, the nervous tension (for women at least) is apt to be too great.

Fencing is too fine an exercise to be ignored. It gives sureness of poise, lightness of limb, grace of carriage and a quickness of eye and of wrist far greater than tennis gives. It commonly shares with golf the unwise preference for the right hand (though some are wise enough to fence with either hand), and it tends to overdevelop the muscles of the wrist and arm.

As to horse riding, there is no sport more exhilarating. There is nothing in motion more splendid than the free movement of the brave creature under you, his quick response to hand or foot, the mingled sense of hazard and security, the sense of being launched in air the flashing picture of the way and the quick whistle of the wind.

But riding may be overdone, even by strong women. The woman who rides to hounds is a fine picture on horseback, but she is not always graceful on foot.

Brushing the Teeth.

In brushing the teeth use the brush downward for the upper teeth and from the gums upward for the lower teeth. By this method the bristles go between the teeth as well as over the front and sides. The teeth always must be recognized for what they are—invaluable adjuncts to both beauty and health. Consequently no pains are too great to secure perfect cleanliness of the teeth and mouth. If there is too much acidity in the system the teeth will decay quickly and much suffering will be entailed. To counteract this an alkaline dentifrice should be used.

If the teeth are yellow or show discolored spots a little powdered pumice stone can be used. It should be slightly moistened so that it will adhere to the orange wood stick with which it is rubbed on the spots. After brushing the teeth an antiseptic mouth wash should be used.

Historic Home For Sale.

Plas Newydd, the home of that eccentric couple, "The Ladies of Llangollen," has been offered for sale. Its first sale occurred in 1832, and from the style of the announcement it would appear that the auctioneer—one Mr. George Robbins—was an aspirant to literary fame. "Upon the freehold," wrote the excellent Robbins, "is a considerable quantity of valuable timber which overhangs a deep and hollow glen. In its entangled bottom, a frothing brook leaps and clamors o'er the rough stones in its channel towards the vale of Llangollen.

TURNBULL'S

FARMERS URGE INTERCHANGE BETWEEN EAST AND WEST

Better Prices for Ontario Agriculturalists and Cheaper Produce for West Would Result Say Visitors at Grange Annual Session.

TORONTO, Dec. 18. — Education in the rural districts of Ontario was the subject of a vigorous discussion at the afternoon session of the 39th annual meeting of the Dominion Grange, held in Victoria Hall yesterday.

A report was read by the educational committee, which has studied conditions in the rural districts during the past year, and many changes were recommended, including a decrease in the grants to the public schools, an increase in the grants to the high schools, less power for rural trustees who have become buffers between the inspectors and the ratepayers, and the assumption of the educational powers of the county councils by the school trustees. It was also suggested in the report that consolidated rural schols were beneficial and should be considered as a means of reducing the present overcrowding in some districts.

James McEwing, M.P.P., was of the opinion that the Education Department set much too high a standard for rural school teachers. He stated that it cost so much now to get these qualifications that the applicants were asking high salaries, hat the people could not pay. The majority of teachers holding first-class certificates, he said, now wanted better positions than could be offered in the country schools.

J. C. Dixon supported Mr. McEwing.

E. C. Drury, Crown Hill, did not altogether side in with the views of the others, and stated that in the rural schools of Ontario yesterday over half the teachers hold no certificates whatever, and two-thirds hold only third-class certificates. Mr. Drury advocated the highest standard of education possible, and said that this could be gained only by having teachers who are most highly qualified.

The discussion is to be resumed to-day.

Several delegates from the western provinces were present and spoke briefly of the work being done there by the granges. R. C. Henders, president of the Canadian Council of Agriculture in Manitoba, believed that party politics should be entirely abandoned by the farmers if they wished for the best results in the governing of the country.

Mr. Henders hoped that all the agricultural forces in Ontario would consolidate with the Grange and link up with the western organizations. Farmers would then come into their own, and be able to enforce their demands for fair play and better conditions.

Mr. T. A. Gree, president of the Manitoba Grain Growers' Grain Company, said the direct interchange of produce between east and west would enable the consumer to buy cheaper in the west and the producer to get more in the east. A great organization of farmers from the Atlantic to the Pacific, operating on the direct interchange system, would raise one class of the community and tend to benefit the whole country by eliminating what has developed into a dictatorship under the exorbitant grasping of the middleman and the exploiter."

J. A. McHarg, Winnipeg, explained the system of elevators, owned and operated by the farmers themselves. The western people, he said, were being charged for fruit three times the amount that was being paid the producers in Ontario, and said that the west could use all the fruit that Ontario produced if handled co-operatively, between farmers' institutes in the east and west.

In his annual address the Master of the Grange, Mr. W. C. Good, urged removal of the protective tariff, tax reform, and initiative and referendum in politics.

"We must organize our industries upon a co-operative basis for mutual service, and not for profit. We need co-operative producing associations, co-operative stores, and distributive agencies, co-operative credit associations, and so forth. We have already made some progress in this direction, and I sincerely hope that our discussions at this convention may lead to further progress."

RAG-TIME AT HANGING

Oldham Mob Hooted Officials at Execution of Youth

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Kelley, a youth nineteen years of age, was executed at Manchester yesterday morning while 5,000 men, women and children, who marched from Oldham, where he had lived, waited outside the prison gates. Their unscientific view of justice was that if the doomed man hanged, his accomplice ought also to meet the same fate. Kelley and an accomplice killed a book-dealer aged eighty years. Great sympathy was aroused for Kelley owing to his age. The crowd had been induced to march to Manchester with a view to rescuing Kelley.

The police, forewarned, were prepared to deal with them. Six hundred constables gathered in the vicinity of the prison. From the crowd came such cries as "You ought to hang none or both," and "One was as bad as the other." Then came three cheers for Kelley, execrations for Home Secretary McKenna, and finally some rag-time songs. No serious attempt was made to rescue Kelley. A few made a movement towards the prison gates, whereupon the police dispersed the mob. Five constables were slightly injured. When the tolling bell announced the fact that the execution was over there was no disturbance, and in a few minutes the pilgrimage back to Oldham began.

Monster Wildcat Trapped.

GUELPH, Dec. 18.—A large wildcat was trapped in a swamp on Mrs. Robert Thompson's farm, on the 16th Concession of Maryboro Township, on Tuesday by John Bishop. The cat measured forty-nine inches from tip to tip. It is thought the big fellow was the author of considerable havoc which has been wrought in the neighborhood recently to turkey flocks and hen roosts.

F. H. Paget Promoted.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—Mr. F. H. Paget has been appointed Accountant of Indian Affairs Department of the Government, in succession to Mr. Duncan Campbell Scott, who became deputy superintendent general after the retirement of Mr. Frank Pedley.

BIG CHANGES ARE EXPECTED

Quebec Will Go Further Than Expected With Liquor Reforms.

QUEBEC, Dec. 18.—Further details of the bill to amend the liquor license law indicate that the Government will go to greater lengths than at first stated. The proposals include:

The bar shall not open until 7.30 in the morning; shall remain closed on Dominion and Labor Days, and there shall be no delivery of liquor after closing hours, that is, stores after 11 p.m. weekdays and 7 o'clock Saturdays, will be prohibited from delivering orders even if they were placed before closing hours.

Another clause provides that liquors shall not be sold c.o.d. This will, to some extent, eliminate telephone orders.

Another striking clause prohibits statements in advertisement published in periodicals of any kind which claim that the liquor advertised is "beneficial to health and mind." The same applies to illustrations.

China's "Man of the Hour."

The man whose influence has been most powerful since the revolution in initiating and guiding the policies of Yuan Shih Kai, the smiling, inscrutable Cantonese, Liang Shih Yi, still remains modestly in the background. Yet if common report is true his are the strong, supple hands which pull the leading strings at Peking, and to his music dance most of those who claim to sway the destinies of China's millions.—Peking Cor. London Times.

High Notes.

It is said that Caruso could retire from the operatic stage, safe in the knowledge that his income from the phonograph will be forthcoming as long as he lives, with every indication that the total will increase rather than decrease. In this respect it can be said that a phonograph company had to pay Louis Tetrazzini a bonus of $50,000 for her consent, while her annual royalties are said to reach between $50,000 and $80,000.

MORE "LABBY" STORIES.

The Laughing Philosopher Dearly Loved a Joke.

"Labby" was never taken seriously as a politician, but the world enjoyed him as a jester, and that the world was right in its estimate of him is proved by "The Life of Henry Labouchere," by his nephew, Mr. Algar Labouchere Thorold, which have just been published. He suffered two great disappointments in the course of his political career—Mr. Gladstone failed to include him in the 1892 Ministry, and Lord Rosebery refused to make him ambassador at Washington. We cannot wonder at either decision; but we can admire the philosophic vein in which "Labby" accepted defeat. "It should never be forgotten," says his biographer, "that Henry Labouchere was, in fact, a Frenchman. French by birth, he remained, to the day of his death, French in his method of formation of opinion, in his outlook on life, in the peculiar quality of his wit. It was this that enabled, or rather obliged, him to take that curiously detached view of English ideals which was at times so disconcerting even to those who thought that they understood him."

Here is his career in a nutshell:

Sent down from Cambridge.

Visited the principal gambling places of Europe.

Wandered for six months with Red Indians in the Wild West.

Wore pink tights in a circus, being in love with a lady performer.

Had many more adventures.

Spent ten years in the diplomatic service.

Founded "Truth."

Entered Parliament and became chief Radical wirepuller.

Writing to a friend with regard to his appointment as secretary of Legation to the Republic of Panama, he said:—"I had never heard of this Republic * * * so I remained comfortably in Italy and drew my salary like a bishop." After twelve months urgent messages reached him asking why he had not proceeded to his post. He replied: "I have spent twelve months in diligent inquiries respecting the whereabouts of the Republic of Panama, hitherto without success. If your lordship will inform me where it is I need hardly say I will hasten there."

His drolleries were innumerable; he was rarely in a serious mood for long. At his house in Old Palace Yard he kept a playbill of an American circus in which he figured (when he was attache at Washington) as "Bounding Buck of Babylon," a jumper. There was a lady in the troupe, of course. "I wore pink tights," "Labby" related, "with a fillet round my head. My adorable one said I looked a dear." As an attache at Stockholm he went to convey Queen Victoria's congratulations and inquiries on the birth of a royal baby. The solemn gentleman who received him replied that "His Royal Highness is suffering a little internally, and it is thought that this is due to the milk of the wet nurse having been slightly sour yesterday evening." Labouchere telegraphed this to the Foreign Office.

How young "Labby" concealed a piece of truantry by denying his identity to his own father in London and slipping back to Cambridge in time to anticipate parental suspicions is well known. The boy who tricked his parent was the man in after years who could play the wit upon his father's memory. The identities of his father and uncle, Lord Taunton, were confused one day by a gentleman to whom Henry was introduced for the first time. "The stranger opened the conversation by remarking, 'I have just heard your father make a remarkable speech in the House of Lords.' 'The House of Lords!' replied Mr. Labouchere, assuming an air of intense interest, 'well, I always have wondered where my father went to when he died.'"

He Was No Scot.

On one occasion Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman and Taylor, the golf champion, were at Biarritz together. A Scotch relative of Sir Henry's earnestly contended that Taylor was of Scotch birth, a claim which Sir Henry was inclined to support. One of the guests then intervened: "Well, all I know about Taylor is that he is a very nice man; my golf club engaged him to play an exhibition match at a fixed fee. Taylor duly came, but the weather was so wet that no golf could be played, and when we offered him payment he refused firmly, only taking his bare traveling expenses." Whereupon Sir Henry turned to a compatriot and said, "I'm afraid such a fact is quite fatal to our contention!"

Champagne Scarce.

A shortage of champagne, which seems probable in view of poor results shown by the 1913 vintage, will be felt more in England now than it would have been fifty years back. Sir Algernon West relates that in his early days "two bottles of champagne was the allowance for a dinner party. These were handed round after the second course, and drunk in homeopathic doses out of small tubes of glass, which contained little but froth. Lord Alvanley was the first who had the courage to protest against this meagre allowance, exclaiming one evening: 'You might as well expect us to drink out of thermometers.'"

Prince Loses Bequest.

Prince Arthur of Connaught sacrifices $125,000 by his marriage to the Duchess of Fife, for the late King Edward directed in his will that $125,000 should be paid out of his estate to Prince Arthur if he married a girl with less than $250,000 dowry. As the Duchess of Fife has an immediate fortune of $1,250,000, the late King's bequest will revert to Princess Mary on her twenty-first birthday. Prince Arthur actually inherited $50,000 from King Edward.

MUNICIPAL OWNERSHIP

used in stores be discounted as much better light can be secured from tungsten lamps.

"The present house lighting rate is 4c per 100 square feet of area lighted and 3c per K.W.H. for current consumed less 10 per cent. discount. The electric department at present supplies carbon lamps for house lighting free. It is proposed that the new rate shall be 4c per 100 square feet of area lighted, and 2½c per K.W.H. for current.

"The Ottawa Municipal Electric Department's business for 1913 has shown a considerable increase. Its books and accounts are checked and audited by officials from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, who visit Ottawa periodically. A monthly return is made to that commission showing exactly all the business done. These monthly returns indicate that the net profit for the whole year of 1913 will be about $45,000, after paying all interest and sinking fund. After making a proper allowance for depreciation, there will remain a considerable balance of profit. In addition to this the new contract for power means a considerable saving to the city."

Power Rates

Service Charge.—$1.00 per month per horse power of connected load or maximum demand, where the consumer installs a suitable maximum demand meter.

Consumption Charge.—1.8c per K.W.H. for the first 50 hours monthly use of load.

1.2c per K.W.H. for the second 50 hours monthly use of load, and 0.15c per K.W.H. for all additional consumption.

These base power rates shall be subject to the following class discounts:

Class A. Power.—24 hours unrestricted service—no discount.

Class B. Power.—24 hour restricted service-power not in use during the peak load hours during the winter months when the lighting load overlaps the unrestricted power load, 10 per cent. discount.

Class C. Power.—10 hour unrestricted use of power during ordinary hours, i.e., from 7 a.m. to 6 p.m.—10 per cent. discount.

Class D. Power—10 hour restricted use—the use of power between daylight and dusk during the winter peak—33 1-3 per cent. discount.

Monthly bills shall also be subject to a prompt payment discount of 25 per cent.

In speaking of the revised schedule, Mayor Ellis today said:

"The commercial lighting rates would in future be on somewhat the same basis as the house lighting has been for a long time. These rates are reduced 10 per cent., based upon an average daily use of five hours all the year round. If the lights are used for a shorter period than five hours per day in the summer they could of course, be used for a corresponding longer period in the winter without any increase in the bill. The average daily use of commercial lights in Toronto is three hours.

Still at Loggerheads.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Sir Edward Grey, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, addressing the constituents in Northumberland yesterday, acknowledged that no progress had been made as yet in the direction of achieving a settlement of the Home Rule question by consent.

The Government, he said, actuated by a spirit of conciliation, has opened the door, but, instead of entering in and discussing terms, the Opposition persisted in staying outside and shouting in things at the window. Still, the door would continue to be open, and it would not be the fault of the Liberal party if a peaceful settlement was not reached.

Oyster Men Organize.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., Dec. 18.—The Co-operative Oystermen's Association of Prince Edward Island was organized yesterday with W. H. Aitkin of Charlottetown president, the object being to secure a larger measure of co-operation in fishing, growing and selling interests, also to conserve and develop the industry so as to make it more profitable to all interested.

JUDGE BARHORST
DOES HIS DUTY TO RHEUMATIC SUFFERERS

If you suffer from Rheumatism and don't read this advice, then the terrible disease must have robbed you of your power to be fair to yourself. Read it:

"I, John Barhorst, Justice of the Peace of McLean Township, Ft. Loramie, Ohio, do certify that after treatment by three doctors without result, I have been cured of a very bad case of Rheumatism by using two bottles of RHEUMA. It is now two years since I used the remedy, and I am still as well as ever. Previous to using RHEUMA I was a cripple, walking with crutches, and I feel it my duty to let other sufferers from Rheumatism know what it will do. The result seems almost miraculous to me. I have advised RHEUMA to at least a dozen persons, and each one speaks as highly of it as I. I will advise any one suffering from the disease if a two-cent stamp is enclosed."—May 31, 1912.

You can secure a bottle of RHEUMA for only 50 cents at the Warne Drug Co., and they say, if not as advertised, money back. It's just as good for Gout, Arthritis, Lumbago and Sciatica.

TO THE RATEPAYERS
— OF — Centre Ward

Ladies and Gentlemen:

May I put before you the fact of my candidature for election as Alderman for Centre Ward. In so doing I venture to hope that I may receive your support.

I make this request proffering to you a thorough acquaintance with the needs of the City in the immediate future, and such as are likely to come before your Council for consideration and action.

I believe I can be thoroughly useful to you, as a ratepayer and to the City at large, and should be very glad indeed to have your support in my behalf.

Yours very respectfully,
FRANK H. DOBBIN.

J. J. HARTLEY
FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—At the earnest request of a large number of the ratepayers I have consented to be a candidate for the position of Mayor for the year 1914.

Being born and having lived all my life in Peterborough, and my whole life's savings being invested in Peterborough, I naturally have a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the City.

Should I be elected I promise you that I will guard to the very best of my ability, the interests of the ratepayers and will oppose all unnecessary expenditure. I will do my utmost to keep down the ever increasing rate of taxation consistent with needs of a growing City.

I may say that I am in favor of municipal ownership and am in favor of having all city work done by our own people instead of bringing in outsiders to do it.

I will endeavor to see that the ratepayers get value for every dollar that is expended.

I have had considerable experience in municipal matters, having served ten years in the Council and fourteen years on the Board of Education, being Chairman of that Board for two years, I was also Chairman of the Board of Health for several years, so that you will see that I am not without a fair share of experience.

Should you do me the honor to elect me as Mayor of our City I will do my best to serve you to the extent of my ability.

Yours respectfully,
J. J. HARTLEY

DEPUTY WARDEN AND PRISON DOCTOR DENY THE CHARGES

Messrs. O'Leary and Phelan Appear Before Prison Commission at Kingston---Former Replies to Convicts' and Guards' Allegations of Favoritism and Injustice.

KINGSTON, Dec. 18. — Deputy Warden O'Leary and Dr. Phelan appeared before the Prison Commission yesterday and entered sweeping denials of the charges made against them during the present probe into the affairs of Kingston Penitentiary.

Deputy Warden O'Leary denied having persecuted guards. He also denied making statements as alleged by convicts, with regard to seeing one of them "in a box," or that he would kill another before he got out of the prison. Neither was there any truth, he said, in the statement, that he had shown favoritism by giving some guards easy posts.

The deputy said there were about 500 convicts in the penitentiary and about 50 per cent. were free from reports against them.

"How many troublers have you in the prison?" asked Mr. Whiting.

"From 35 to 40." Incorrigibles had been 'boxed' and among these were Boxner,, Jones, Kelly and Buckley."

Daniel Phelan gave a most emphatic denial to charges made by convicts that men in the hospital had been neglected or that death resulted from his neglect. He further denied the charge by convicts that they had been refused medicine. "I never refused to give a man medicine when he needed it," said Phelan.

After O'Leary's testimony a storm broke loose.

The chairman of the commission wanted to know just where the commission stood, and as to whether there would be any additional evidence offered against the deputy.

Mr. Downey said Dr. Edwards had stated that the charges arose out of information he had been given by Inspector Hughes.

Dr. Edwards asked to make an explanation of the matter and immediately the chairman repeated his declaration that Dr. Edwards should not do more than put his questions through counsel.

Dr. Edwards charged that the commission was trying to bluff him out of evidence. He had made certain charges and had been restricted by the chairman in securing evidence.

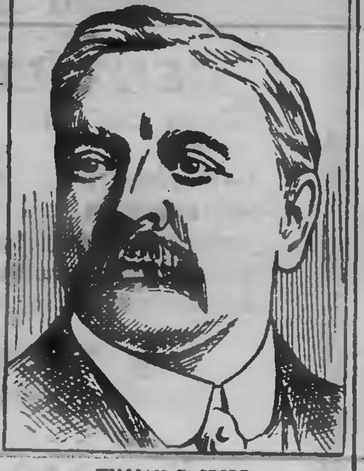
GREW WITH THE CITY

WILLIAM SHORT HAS WATCHED EDMONTON EXPAND.

Mayor of Alberta's Capital Was Chief Executive of Town In 1902 and Retired Later, But Single Tax Issue Has Drawn Him Back Into the Melee—Was Born In Elora, Ont.

William Short, K.C., Mayor of Edmonton, will be remembered a very long while as the man who, in 1902, became for three successive years mayor of what was then a fur town, and in 1912, because he had taken a very live bull by the horns and successfully got him cornered, was reelected chief magistrate of a city. In the eight years that William Short was a private citizen Edmonton changed from a clattering furpost town to an energizing young city of modern ideas and progressive business. But it didn't succeed in outgrowing W. B. Short. He was born in Elora, studied law in Ontario, and in 1894 was admitted to the Alberta Bar—which was then about as serious as the bottom bar in a fence-gap. Mere legality never made W. B. Short the character he is to-day. It was the country and the town. Short was always a public citizen. He took a keen interest in the civic and religious and educational affairs. He was chairman of the Edmonton School Board in the last few years of the 19th century. He was Clerk of Sessions or some such dignitary in the Presbyterian Church. He was senior partner of the firm, Short and Cross, long before Charlie Cross dreamed of being Attorney-General of Alberta. He drove a good horse and was a splendid driver. In a day when after-dinner speakers were supposed to take their cue from Frank Oliver, he stuck to his own facile and effective style of delivery and got away with it.



WILLIAM B. SHORT.

And in 1902, when he became Mayor of Edmonton, when there was nothing but a switchback railway on the flats and a cable ferry to connect Edmonton to the civilized world, beginning at Strathcona. Short was far-sighted enough to recognize a very large bull on the edge of the field which he expected to tackle some day, or somebody else would. The bull was taxation. The thing that W. B. Short more than any other one man was responsible for inaugurating in that part of the world was a form of single tax which remains to this day as a partial leveller in Edmonton and has been an example to other cities in the West.

They Called Him Vanus.

It is curious how inconsistent are the prejudices of people in regard to the use of heathen names. Mr. Payn, in his "Gleams of Memory," tells an amusing story of Dean Burgon, who objected to the name of the goddess of beauty, but found no fault with that of the god of the woods.

An infant was brought to the church for christening, and the name proposed for it was Vanus. "Vanus?" repeated the dean. "I suppose you mean Venus. Do you imagine I am going to call a Christian child by that name, and least of all a male child?"

The father of the infant urged that he only wished to name it after his grandfather. "Your grandfather!" cried the dean. "I don't believe it. Where is your grandfather?" He was produced—a poor old soul of eighty or so, bent double and certainly not looking in the least like the goddess in question. "Do you mean to tell me, sir, that any clergyman ever christened you 'Vanus,' as you call it?"

"Well, no, sir, I was christened Sylvanus, but they always calls me 'Vanus'."

Ideal Length For Sermon.

What is the ideal length for a sermon? The question is raised by Dean Hole in his "Memories." By the way of illustration, he tells a story of a sheriff's chaplain who had once asked a judge what was the proper length of a sermon. "Well, twenty minutes," was the answer, "with a leaning to the side of mercy." That is good advice—and, by the way, it is advice which Queen Victoria would have heartily approved. In 1867 the Queen presented a pulpit glass to the Chapel Royal, Savoy, and it was timed for exactly eighteen minutes. There was no mistaking the hint. If you wanted to please the Queen you stopped preaching at eighteen minutes.

Long Distance Power.

The greatest long-distance power transmission in Southern Asia is in the native State of Mysore, power being transmitted from the Cauvery Falls to the Kolar gold fields, ninety-two miles away, and to the cities of Mysore and Bangalore, about forty and eighty-six miles away, respectively, for electric lighting and power purposes.

PRACTICAL HEALTH HINT.

Throat Scalds.

Burns or scalds affecting the throat become dangerous on account of the swelling produced, this latter result of the injury tending to excite symptoms of suffocation. Such accidents are not uncommon where children left to themselves have attempted to suck the vapor or steam issuing from the spout of a boiling kettle. Where suffocation is feared sponges wrung out of hot water should be applied to the throat and the doctor instantly sent for in view of the possibility that an operation for opening the windpipe may be required. Small quantities of cod liver oil or olive oil may be given at frequent intervals by means of a spoon by way of acting as a soothing agent.

LITTLE BRIGHTEYES

She Came Into Her Rightful Place at Last.

By LOUISE NURRIFIELD.

That was what Davis had nicknamed her at the first rehearsal of "Flimflam." She was the scrawniest, homeliest girl in the chorus when the girls lined up for first inspection and happened to land in the middle at the line up. Davis spotted her and called out before everybody in the pleasant, merry little way he had:

"That will do for yours, Little Brighteyes. Never mind about taking the center. We'll save the spot light when you're around. The back row for yours."

Everybody turned to take a good look at Little Brighteyes before the back row swallowed her forever. She was about thirty, a slim little woman with big gray eyes and dark hair. It was a point of beauty in its own way, that hair, soft and brown and straight as Minnehaha's ever was, but she had tried to marcel it into shape with a home applied curling iron to make her look professional, and it was a sight. But she took her medicine bravely, and even Davis recognized the grit in her.

It was her best asset in the after days, that grit. It carried her through all the Davis major and minor tantrums and the teasing from the other girls. She said little and worked hard, but the nickname that Davis had given her that first day stuck fast. Even Jennie Reynolds, the wardrobe woman, caught it, and when she was handing out the costumes to the girls she tossed a bunch across the room and called out cheerfully:

"Here you go, Brighteyes!"

And Little Brighteyes just laughed good naturedly, although she had drawn the least artistic clothes in the lot. It didn't matter when one was only the fourth girl in the last row back. She did as Davis had told her and kept out of the spot light.

"That girl's an old timer," Davis remarked to Vida Dorne as the two stood in the first entrance the opening night and watched the girls take a big encore on the "Rattlebang" song. There were sixteen picked out from the little ones in the crowd, and Brighteyes was one of them. It was a jolly, swinging, drummer boy chorus and took the minute it hit the house. The girls were all in scarlet and black, with snare drums and Little Brighteyes was beating hers for sure, no make believe. The rouge helped her lots, and so did the red and black costume. Her head was held high, just a bit a-tilt, and her lips were parted in a smile.

Marshall—Nick Marshall that was—the manager, was beside Vida. He watched the skinny little figure on the end thoughtfully as the girls went off.

"She's all right," he said. "Put her on to lead tomorrow night in that chorus, Davis, and see how she goes. She's on to the ropes all right."

Vida leaned forward to get a better look.

"I've seen that girl somewhere, Nick," she said. "Look at her now with that drum. And the way she steps! Who is she?"

"Little Brighteyes," laughed Davis shortly. "That's all she is now anyway, but she's an old timer all right."

Vida laughed, too, as Marshall walked around with her to the big white automobile in which she made her first entrance. The first act showed a mountain scene in a country anywhere between Italy and China. The beautiful American heiress was doing the touring stunt all over Europe, and the prince of the country was in love with her. He had followed the lead of the white automobile all over the map and finally had induced the girl to pay a visit to his own land. She feared possible banditti. He assured her the red and black drummer boys and the army behind them could protect her. And all the time, of course, he merely wanted to get her over the border, abduct her, shut her up in the castled steep fortress (act 2) and starve her into marrying him and filling his stingy little treasury with oodles of American coin. It was a rehash, but it went with a bang. Even before Vida's entrance the thing was a sure success, and Marshall was solidly joyous.

"Be careful and don't lose your head when you take that run," he said as he stood beside the auto while Vida was helped in. It was a good trick, that first entrance of the American girl. They had a mechanical arrangement for the auto to scorch down the mountain pass, and it looked as though it was going straight over the footlights. There were four turns to the run, and then it brought up short right in the center of the stage in a self locking frog and made a mighty effective picture.

"There isn't a bit of danger," answered Vida, drawing on her white gauntlets. "I'm just as cool as can be. Not a bit rattled. Let her go."

There was the second's pause in the orchestra, then the crash of entrance music, and they released the machine. It took the incline like a boy's coaster—smooth and swift and easy. Davis was white, but Marshall stroked his vandyke and frowned ever so slightly as he watched the car and its occupant. It was a dangerous trick, but it brought down the house.

Marshall stared at Vida. Under the rouge her face was dead white, and he knew she was scared. When she came off the stage she sent for him.

"Nick, I won't go through that again not if the whole show goes to pieces. I simply can't. It is terrible. Why, it would be like dying every night. I won't ride in that thing again."

Davis suggested a dummy, but Marshall wouldn't stand for any fake. The girl in the machine must be alive, and suddenly Davis suggested Little Brighteyes.

"She's got the same air and build as Miss Lorne, and you can hide the face with a veil. Change the scene so as to carry off the auto long enough for the two to change places after the run, and there you are. And she's the only girl I know who has the grit to do it."

She had the grit. It meant a doubling of her salary, and she made the run night after night, with never a tremor of fear. No one knew the difference. The two women were the same size and the same carriage, and Vida was delighted.

"It's lots of fun," she told Marshall. "It's like hiring some one to die for you, don't you know."

The laughing words flashed across Marshall one night when "Flimflam" was on its third month. He happened to be standing at the foot of the stairs leading up to the platform where the machine stood. As she came by to take her place in it Little Brighteyes had to pass him, and for the first time their eyes met. Marshall never moved when she had gone up the stairs. He had forgotten "Flimflam" and New York. Somewhere, some time, so long ago that he didn't like to remember it or have other people either, one Nick Marshall had run a little one ring circus through the country towns—about thirteen years back—and there had been a girl, a pretty, piquant girl, who rode a horse in the parade and drove a chariot in the funny, shabby little grand entry, and after a couple of years of the one ring circus Nick Marshall had decided his talent lay in New York and had left the circus and the little country towns and other handicaps behind him.

The burst of applause from the front of the house recalled him. The machine was released, and the American heiress incog. was doing her nightly "stunt." And suddenly there was a dull, strange crash, and the music stopped. Marshall spoke over his shoulder as he made for the stage, and they rang down the curtain and started up the music again, for the public must not see unpleasant things when it takes its gayety, and there was a most unpleasant thing lying under the automobile that had turned turtle.

"She isn't dead," said Davis as he and Vida bent over the slim figure in the white suede cloak. "Get her to the hospital and she will pull through. It's only the shoulder smashed."

Marshall pushed the two to one side and lifted the figure in his arms. As he did so Little Brighteyes opened her eyes and smiled up at him.

"Hello, boy," she said faintly. Marshall bent his head and kissed her before the whole crowd.

"Never mind the hospital, Davis," he said quietly. "I'll take Mrs. Marshall home myself."

And the rest watched him as he strode across the stage with his burden out to where a carriage waited at the side door to the theater. Then Vida looked up at Davis and laughed as the stage was cleared for the curtain raising.

"I've known it for weeks," she said. "I tried and tried to think where I had seen her before, and then all at once it came to me. Nick married her back in the circus days and then left her out west in some dead and alive hole while he came on to New York to try to make good. He made good, but forgot all about any responsibility out west, and she was too proud to hunt him up when she thought he didn't want her. I saw her in comic opera out in Frisco eight or nine years ago. She made a big success in 'Fatinitza.' I remembered her all at once watching her play that drum. But it was her own affair, and I didn't tell. Nick played fair at the climax, didn't he?"

Davis nodded. But as he watched the laughing, pretty face beside him, white to the lips, as when she had taken that first ride down the run, he knew that one other besides Nick had played fair, too—fair to Little Brighteyes.

New York's Great Channel.

Army engineers have reported that the deepening and widening of Ambrose channel leading into New York harbor is finished, except for a few minor details, and no further appropriations for construction will be needed. This great artificial channel is seven miles long, 2,000 feet wide and forty feet deep at mean low tide. At night it is so brilliantly lighted by buoys that the largest ocean steamers can enter with perfect safety. The work was begun in 1901.

Eighteen-Minute Sermons.

Queen Victoria preferred a sermon of eighteen minutes. King Edward declared for greater brevity. In the original arrangements for his coronation the sermon by the Bishop of London was allotted five minutes, and when the King's illness necessitated the alteration of the ceremony the sermon was cut out altogether. Napoleon III. strictly limited preachers before him to a quarter of an hour, and if they exceeded it an officer of the Imperial household stepped to the pulpit and ended the discourse. But Charles II. of England once slept so soundly under the ministrations of Kenn that on awakening greatly refreshed he exclaimed, "Odds fish! This man must have a bishopric," and gave him one.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,643 in-patients, 25,507 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 427 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 36 years nearly 800 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

"This is the season when the small boy remembers that he forgot to answer the long letter he got from him uncle last February.'

"Time approaches when the cautious young man quits making calls until the gladsome Yuletide is past."

THE SPORTING WORLD

ST. MICHAEL'S WERE BETTER CONDITIONED AND WON 12-1

Hobe Armstrong Made Good Showing With Midland Team.

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—The hockey season was ushered in last night at the Arena, and for the first ten minutes it was ushered in with a vengeance, as both St. Michaels and Midland went at it hammer and tongs, and as they gave bump for bump, the large number of spectators were given plenty of excitement. The pace couldn't last, though, and with St. Michael's in much superior condition they soon forged into the lead, being ahead at half time by 4 to 0, and at the finish by 12 to 1.

Midland lined up with only four of last year's team, while St. Michael's were intact, with the exception of Bricker in goal. Therefore with the forward line intact, St. Michael's furnished more team play than the visitors, the latter resorting to individual work all through. Their defence was also easily drawn out, and this so displeased Scott in goal that he gave a very weird exhibition in the last ten minutes, allowing the winners to score three or four very easy counters.

While Midland were snowed under last night, they have the material for a great team. In Hobe Armstrong the former Trenton defence man, and Drummond, the former T. C. S. and McGill player, they have two good men. Armstrong showed a flash of his real form last night, but Drummond had his skates on yesterday for the first time, and therefore failed to show what he was capable of, although in several instances he flashed some inside stuff that showed he had been through the mill.

St. Michael's, with four practices under their belt, and two week's work in the gym., displayed good stamia, with the exception of Rankin, who retired at half time. Laflamme and Dissette were the chief disturbers in the Midland ranks, and their frequent excursions also resulted in trouble. Towards the end of the game the shooting of the outside wings—Mathew and Richardson—improved, while the whole forward line played their positions and checked back, two things that were lacking with the visitors.

With the exception of the last ten minutes, when Scott, the Midland goalkeeper got the sulks, the game was interesting, although enough excitement was furnished in the initial ten minutes to please the most rabid fan. Roughness also crept up in the second half at several stages, and the spectators were given plenty of sport. Armstrong and Drummond both used their bodies well for the visitors, and thereby created several spills, while it would not be a St. Michael team if they couldn't come back also.

Both sides made several changes throughout the game, Midland using both Simple and P. Beatty at left wing, while McCamus and Chartrand were also in the game for St. Michael's. Chartrand's first chance was at right wing, but, being a left hand shot, he was out of his element. He was tried at centre in the last five minutes, when he relieved Laflamme, but even then didn't show enough to warrant him replacing any of the regulars.

Addison, in goal for St. Michael's, had a comparatively easy night, the majority of his shots being from outside the defence. The teams:

St. Michaels. — Goal, Addison, right defence, Murphy; left defence, Dissette; rover, Rankin; centre, Laflamme; right, Mathews; left, Richardson.

Midland—Goal, Scott; right defence, Drummond; left defence, Lavigne; rover, Armstrong; centre, Chase; right, Beatty; left, Simple.

Referee, J. B. McArthur.

RULE GOVERNING PLAYERS IN MERCANTILE LEAGUE

The Mercantile Hockey League met in a regular business meeting last evening in the Y. M. C. A. President Nelson was in the chair. After considerable and somewhat stormy discussion, the following motions were passed.

On a motion of Messrs. Corkery and Giroux a vote was taken in regard to the membership of the league. The representatives unanimously voted for the eight-team league. It was then decided on a motion of Messrs. Giroux and Spratt to interview the rink management and arrange for rink hours.

After a warm discussion as to the playing of O.H.A. men in the league, the motion was put to a vote and resulted in a tie. The President however decided the matter by casting his vote in favor of the O.H.A. players being barred.

No player will be called an O. H. A. player until he has played two O. H. A. games

The C. G. E. teams are at liberty to pick a man from any department. The entrance fees are to be paid before the first game. A meeting will be called on Saturday night.

DOESN'T LIKE BASEBALL AS PLAYED IN AMERICAN CITIES

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 18.—Baseball as played in America is severely criticized by a member of the Australian cricket team, which recently toured the United States and Canada. A Sydney paper containing an interview with the cricketer on the return of the team to Australia, has just been received here.

"Candidly," the Australian athlete is quoted, "I don't like baseball as played in America. Baseball in Australia is a fine game, played in the spirit of our cricket. But that spirit is not known in American baseball, which is a professional game and associated with bluffing of a character foreign to the Australian and English ideas of sport. There is, of course, big money in there, but if baseball is ever to become a big game here, it will need to be divorced from the spirit which prevades its American atmosphere."

JUNIOR CITY HOCKEY LEAGUE

Executive Members Were Elected Last Night.

The City Junior Hockey League met in a business meeting last night in Oak Hall. President Maher presided.

The election of members for the executive resulted in W. Wryder, Boston Exploit, Walter Flowers, Y. M.C.A., Elmer Galvin, Alerts and H. T. Stewart Wanderers, being elected. The President and other officers will also form the executive.

It was decided to inform the rink management that the rink will be required on Thursday evenings.

"HEFF" SCORED THE FIRST GOAL

But Detroit Finished Strong and Tied the Game.

ART HALL PLAYED.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 18.—Just about the time the Toronto Rugby and Athletic Association hockey team was getting ready to congratulate itself on an easy victory over the Detroit Arena seven last night, the home boys pulled a rally that spilled the beans. Instead of a victory, the Toronto lads were compelled to be satisfield with a tie, which they seemed well enough pleased to get. The goal which made the final score 5 to 5 was scored by Meyers on a pass from Black within half a minute of the end of the game.

It was a peculiar contest in many respects. Neither side was able to make a point in the entire first half, but it fairly rained goals throughout the second. The Toronto people were the first to get going. Within a couple of minutes after the closing period began, Heffernan got the first goal for the visitors. Toronto continued to batter the home cage until four goals had been scored and it looked very much as though the locals were hopelessly outclassed. But the locals are stout finishers, and two well-aimed shots in quick succession gave the home crowd a life and there were hope of a tie. Toronto somewhat dimmed this enthusiasm by scoring a fifth goal, and led by the margin of three, with only five minutes to play. With only four minutes to go, the lights at one end of the rink went out, and a delay was necessary.

The rest benefited Detroit immensely, and when play was resumed Detroit scored their fourth goal, just as the timer was getting ready to end things. Meyers pushed the puck past Smith with the tieing goal.

Heffernan and Stevenson were the stars for Toronto, both players showing a lot of speed, and great control over the puck. The teams

Toronto—Smith, goal; McLean, point; Stevenson, cover point; Meeking, centre; Heffernan, rover, Thornton, left wing; Brown, right wing.

Summary:—Goals — Meyers, 2; Black, Skelly, Hall, Heffernan, 4; Meeking. Penalties—Skelly, Brown, Black, Meeking, one minute. Referee, Muir of Windsor. Goal umpires—Billings and Campbell, Detroit.

A BEAR STORY.

Camp Clerk Spent an Unhappy Time in a Tree.

A real live wolf story was brought into Ottawa recently by Mr. George Spargo, of Three Rivers, who was staying there for a few days. It involves a chapter of misadventure which provoked many thrills on the part of the victims, but resulted eventually in the loss of nothing more than several ordinarily reliable tempers.

Back of beyond, somewhere in Chesley Township, near the Soo, is the Eddy & Glynn camp, where several hundred men work in the woods. The foreman of the camp is Mr. Leach, and his clerk, the hero of this story, is Fred Snyder, formerly of Ottawa.

One day there was a nice fall of snow and Mr. Snyder hankered for some sport. He took his best rifle and started out on a bear-hunting expedition. Mr. Snyder's proper route lay due south, but in a fit of absentmindedness he headed due north. After a few hours he was surprised that he had found no bears and lost his way. About the same time it started to get dark, and Mr. Snyder heard the unwelcome music of a pack of wolves set on his trail.

He instinctively fingered his trusty rifle only to find that it was frozen, and so jammed it would not work. The sun was going down and the wolves were coming up. Mr. Snyder took one choice between discretion and valor, discretion won. He picked out the tallest tree in the neighborhood and shinned up it to the most likely looking branch, where he rested.

After shivering for over an hour, a bear came by in a great hurry. A few moments later a pack, which Mr. Snyder computed at least fifty wolves, followed in full cry. It was a thrilling sight, especially to Mr. Snyder, who knew that the wolves were looking for supper. An hour or so after the hunting party had passed Mr. Snyder climbed down and took the trail. He did not know where he was going, but after going for a while he struck another trail, and then realized that he had gone wrong. Murmuring a few suitable remarks he started back to the camp, which he reached late the next morning.

In the meantime Foreman Leach had become alarmed at his clerk's staying out so late at night, for he knew there was nothing in the neighborhood but wolves and bears. He organized a searching party and started out, picking Mr. Snyder's trail in the moonlight. About the time Snyder was beating it back to camp, the rescue party discovered the tree in which he had spent part of the night and then followed his circuit.

It was a hard night for everybody, and a worse morning. For none of them was it so hard, however, as for the foreman, when after his weary night's tramping he got back to camp and discovered his pale, but hungry clerk, busily engaged punishing three rations of pork and beans. The camp cook reports that the conversation which ensued was one of the most animated ever heard back of the Soo, and that the display of adjectives would have done credit to an experienced half-breed getting away with the last of his season's wages.

To Train Boys.

A plan is being arranged with the approval of the Albertan Minister of Agriculture and Premier Sifton whereby the Alberta schools of agriculture are to be used for training boys from the old country who are desirious of immigrating to Canada for the purpose of taking up farming, but who have no knowledge of farming or of western conditions.

A different course from that adopted for the sons of Alberta farmers will be necessary. The regular courses will run during the winter, and in summer when the farmers' sons are at work on the farm classes from the old country will be instructed in the principles of agriculture and will have an opportunity of watching the progress of the work on demonstration farms.

The plan has been suggested by John A. Reid, agent-general for Alberta in London, who states that he finds many old countrymen of means who are willing to give their sons a start in life and would like to see them take up farming in Canada.

For something a little different we now hear a great hue and cry about the high cost of holiday gifts.

A SILVER MUG

By BENJAMIN CARTER

One morning my chief received a telephone message that a wealthy gentleman named Toothaker was found dead in his bed. He had gone to bed the evening before in perfect health. On the discovery of the body a physician had been summoned and had declined to make an investigation as to the cause of death without some one being present to represent the police. The doctor had on one occasion unintentionally destroyed evidence in a murder case, and this had made him careful. I was sent out on the case.

I found the doctor awaiting me in the library, and he told me all he knew about the deceased. He lived alone with a niece, a girl of twenty, who, it was supposed, would inherit the property. There were also servants in the house. I went with the doctor to the death chamber without having seen any one of the household. The corpse lay on the bed, beside which was a small stand and on the stand an empty bottle, the label of which indicated that it had contained ale. I noticed that there was no glass or mug from which the liquor had been drunk.

Having concluded our observation of the room, we went downstairs, and the doctor, leaving the matter in my hands, departed. I asked to see Miss Alice Toothaker, and she sent word to me to say that she was unnerved by her uncle's death and wouldn't her maid do as well. I asked the maid who had carried the ale to her master She replied that she had done so about 10 o'clock the night before. Mr. Toothaker frequently drank something at that hour, and she had placed the ale on the stand beside the table. I asked her from what he had drunk, and she said he always took ale from a silver mug. What had become of the mug she did not know.

Investigation showed that the only person interested in Mr. Toothaker's death was his niece, who would inherit a fortune from him. He was a widower, but had recently been paying attention to a woman much younger than himself. My theory was that Miss Toothaker was the guilty person.

There was one link that I could not find. I felt sure that the silver mug from which the deceased had taken the ale was the key to the situation. I believed that Alice Toothaker had removed it. But none of the servants could tell what had become of it, and Miss Toothaker claimed that she did not know who had taken it away. Nevertheless I was convinced from her looks and the stammering way she answered my questions that she had taken it herself.

I wove a chain of circumstantial evidence against her that, I felt confident, if it did not convict her would strongly point to her guilt. Feeling sure that she knew all about the removal of the silver mug, I relied on her being forced by the prosecuting attorney's searching examination to reveal the mystery of its disappearance. There was one feature of the case that puzzled me. Though I was sure she was prevaricating about the mug, she did not bear herself like a person guilty of a great crime. True, she appeared anxious, for she knew she was suspected, but she showed an occasional confidence in the outcome.

When she was arrested she showed no surprise. She had evidently nerved herself to bear what was in store for her and only begged for a speedy trial. Fortunately for her, the case was brought on a few days after her arrest. Her attorney was evidently convinced of her innocence and seemed to me to be confident of procuring her acquittal. He listened attentively to the statement made by the state attorney as to what he proposed to prove, occasionally giving his client a reassuring look. She needed it, for so ingeniously was the evidence to be brought out woven together that it looked very bad for her.

When the statement had been made and the evidence against the prisoner was all in her counsel, without referring to any part of it, called the maid who had carried the ale to Mr. Toothaker. Having brought out the fact that she had done so, he asked her if one of her duties was not to polish the silver. She answered "Yes." He then drew from her that she had polished the mug from which the deceased drank the ale on the afternoon previous to his death, and, to the best of her knowledge and belief, no one had touched any part of it except the handle.

The attorney then called the butler of the Toothaker household, who brought in a glass clock cover, under which was a silver mug.

I knew now that I had been outwitted. The attorney showed each juryman, using a glass, the imprint of a hand on the body of the mug with the forefinger missing. He then told his client to hold up her hands, and all her fingers were present. Then, stating that some one had been in the room with a maimed hand, he rested his case, and the judge instructed the jury to bring in a verdict for the prisoner.

It turned out that Alice Toothaker had been the discoverer of her uncle's murderer. She had examined everything about the bed and discovered the hand print on the cup. Foreseeing that she would be suspected of the crime, she had taken away the mug to make sure that it would not be tampered with.

The real murderer was in time traced and convicted by a missing forefinger.

A rich young widow and her weeds are soon parted.

Veal Calves

There were few calves that could be classed as good, let alone choice. Prices were as strong as ever, ranging from $5.50 to $11 per cwt.

Sheep and Lambs

Prices for sheep and lambs were firm. Ewes sold at $5.50 to $6.25; culls and rams, $3.50 to $4.50; lambs, $8.50 to $8.90.

Hogs

Selects fed and watered sold at $8.75, and $9 weighed off cars.

MONTREAL LIVE STOCK.

MONTREAL, Dec. 16.—The trade in cattle at the C.P.R. live stock market today was active, but prices were slightly under those paid on Monday, owing to the fact that butchers had practically filled their requirements. Some sales were made at $9, but the bulk of the trading was done in choice stock at $8 to $8.50, while good steers sold at $7.25 to $7.75; fair at $6 to $7, and common at $5 per 100 pounds. The offerings of butchers' cows were only of fair quality, and the top price realized for the best was $6.50.

The tone of the market for sheep and lambs was very firm at the advance in prices noted on Monday. The demand was good, but the offerings were small. The quality of the calves offered was only medium.

The tone of the market for hogs was stronger.

CHICAGO LIVE STOCK.

CHICAGO, Dec. 17.—Cattle—Receipts, 4000; market, steady; beeves, $6.80 to $9.50; Texas steers, $6.60 to $7.65; stockers and feeders, $4.90 to $7.25; cows and heifers, $3.30 to $8.40; calves, $7 to $11.

Hogs—Receipts, 50,000; market, slow; light, $7.25 to $7.40; mixed, $7.35 to $7.75; heavy, $7.40 to $7.75; rough, $7.40 to $7.50; pigs, $6.25 to $7.00; bulk of sales, $7.50 to $7.70.

Sheep — Receipts, 27,000; market, active; native, $4.40 to $5.75; yearlings, $5.50 to $6.85; lambs, native, $6.40 to $7.90.

Mrs. Pankhurst Released Again.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—Mrs. Emmeline Pankhurst, the militant suffragette leader, was again released from Holloway Jail yesterday at noon. She had been imprisoned on this occasion only since Saturday, when she was arrested while on her way from Paris to London.

Mrs. Pankhurst was in a state of collapse as a result of a "hunger and thirst strike," and was taken in an ambulance to the headquarters of the militant suffragettes, where a doctor was in waiting. As soon as she is able to do so, the leader of the militants will go to Switzerland to recuperate.

Major Leonard May Be Knighted.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—It is reported in official circles here that Major Leonard of the Transcontinental Commission will be knighted by King George at New Year's.

Major Leonard will then be known as Sir Reuben Leonard. The honor, it is said, will be in recognition of Major Leonard's work in constructing the Transcontinental Railway and his recent generous donation of a half million dollars for military training in the universities.

High Art in Dress.

WASHINGTON, Pa., Dec. 18.—Slashed trousers, purple socks and red neckties—especially on depressing days—will be proper schoolroom attire for male professors and instructors in the near future, if they listen to the advice given the Washington County Teachers' Institute yesterday by Miss Harriette Cook of Washington, Indiana.

VALUE OF VISIONS.

Dreams of the Thinkers Are What Lead the Way to Progress.

There is a certain little Scripture that is not noticed much. It is this, "Where there is no vision the people perish." That would be true even if it were not in the Bible. It is true of an individual as well as a people. There must be a hope, an aim, an upward look, a realization of better things ahead to awaken aspiration and quicken endeavor. So many people don't have this. They live from hand to mouth and never look out from where they are standing. That's the animals' way. They don't dream. They have no visions.

There are communities sometimes that have no inspiring outlook. They settle down to amusements, prisons, politics, sports and the passing show, but never unfold the future and see in it the nobler life. They have nothing to live for but today. There is no inspiration in tomorrow. They buy and sell and talk and laugh and eat and drink and go to bed, and tomorrow is the same. There is no vision, no high mark to press forward to, no heavenly vision, as St. Paul expresses it.

Now, there is something in a vision, or the Bible would not say the lack of it would destroy a people. This lack constitutes the dry rot we hear of—no incentive, no life, no hope. And when an individual gets that way and sees no visions he is a dead duck.—Ohio State Journal.

Be sure you're right before telling the other fellow he is wrong.

Commencing Monday, Dec. 22nd, The Ernie Marks' Stock Company, supporting Ernie and Miss Kittie Marks, will open a week's engagement at the Grand Opera House in an entirely new play entitled "The Canadian Gentleman." The Company need no introduction to local theatregoers, as like all Marks Brothers Companys, the Ernie Marks Company always pleases. The same high class vaudeville will be given between acts, and these comprise many new features which are alone worth the prices of admission. The usual matinee will be held on Saturday, December 27th, with a special Christmas Day matinee on Thursday, Dec. 25th. The seat sale will open Friday morning, Dec. 19th, at 9 a.m.

Miss May Taylor, of Brickley, has returned home after a week's visit with her sister, Miss Tresa Taylor.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Labelle of Edmonton, formerly to this city, are guests at the Oriental.

T. B. Collins, of Millbrook, was a visitor in the city today.

Settlement Reached

A settlement in which the action was dismissed without costs, was reached in the High Court Case in Welland, yesterday, in the Big Dipper Mining and Milling Company of this city, against John Fletcher, a former president of the company. Fletcher was charged with misappropriating some of the money, it was alleged he received for stock, to his own purposes.

Mr. F. D. Kerr of the firm of Peck, Kerr and McElderry acted for the Company.

TO RESTRICT INVASION

Influx From U.S. This Winter Will be Checked

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—In order to protect the interests of the workingmen of this country from undue competition during the winter months, so far as Government regulations can do so, the very strictest regulations regarding the immigration of laborers into Canada have been put in force.

Labor condition in the United States are much worse than in the Dominion, with the result that there is an exceptionally large number of United States workingmen at every port of entry trying to get into Canada. Were they allowed into the country wholesale, the labor market would be flooded worse than it is at present, and much misery and privation would ensue.

The most stringent regulations, therefore, have been put into force to keep them out. They must possess cash to the amount at least of $50, and prove to the immigration officials that they are capable of sustaining themselves during the trying winter months. The sum which non-agricultural immigrants must possess under usual conditions is $25. To-day, therefore, the immigrants may fairly be said to be handpicked as never before for the usual regulations apply not only to every port of entry along the United States border, but to ocean ports as well.

Sports' Committee

A meeting of the officers of the sports' committee and sergeants, will be held at the sergeants' mess on Saturday at 9 p.m. to arrange the sports program for New Year's Day. Every sergeant is requested to be present.

The Profit In Songs.

It is not always the composer, unfortunately, who reaps the golden harvest of a song's popularity. For the evergreen "Come Into the Garden, Maud," Balfe received no more than $500, for "Kathleen Mavourneen" its composer was rewarded with $25, and the immensely popular "Cheer, Boys, Cheer!" was sold by Henry Russell for 60 shillings. In recent years "Some Day," credited with having yielded well over $50,000, was parted with by its creator for 10 guineas.—London Chronicle

MAY NOW AVOID EXAMINATION

New Rule Will Give Nervous Candidates a Chance.

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—The sting has been taken out of the entrance examination. Amendments just published which have been made in the Ontario regulations governing admission to high school courses give the principals of public schools the power to declare pupils fitted for high school work. The possession of such a recommendation will admit the pupil to a collegiate or high school without a departmental examination.

Under the old rules injustice often resulted when a pupil whose work during the year had been of a high standard failed on the departmental examination through nervousness or indisposition.

The "clever" boy will no longer deceive the school principal as to the amount of his knowledge as easily as he did when he merely passed a departmental examination; while the "plodder" will get more credit than he has in the past.

COLD STORAGE

Geo. H. Bradbury, M. P., Will Bring in Measure This Session.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—George H. Bradbury, Conservative member of Selkirk, Man., will introduce a bill into Parliament at the very earliest opportunity when the House opens in January, which is designed to put in operation a system of cold storage inspection. It will probably be amalgamated with the Government's cold storage measure.

Mr. Bradbury says his bill is based largely on legislation which has gone into effect in the United States, as well as other bills which are before other state legislatures. He has picked from each what he considers the best.

The feature of the bill will be the clause which absolutely prohibits the placing of fish in cold storage. Fish should not be frozen, says Mr Bradbury. When it is frozen it is apt to be poisonous.

All Saints' Choir

All Saints' Choir will practice tonight at 8 o'clock. Choristers are requested to bring their Messiah copies.

FAKED PAINTINGS.

Imitations and Forgeries of the Works of Old Masters.

SHARP TRICKS OF THE TRADE.

Specialists Who Are Real Artists in Showing Antique Effects—The Split Panel Deception and an Ingenious Swindling Scheme That Failed.

In addition to a considerable mass of historical information concerning methods employed in producing pictorial works of art, M. Moreau-Vauthier's "Technique of Painting" presents much new and interesting matter concerning devices of imitation picture faking—"truquage," as the French art world calls it—and systematic, deliberate, skillful forgery that have in recent years rendered extra hazardous the purchase of any picture by a recognized master who has joined the great majority.

Many of these tricks require great skill and knowledge—enough, in all seeming, to enable the forgers to become recognized artists of the first class.

If an old canvas can be found—and there are many thousands in Europe—the production of a Titian or Correggio or Veronese is easy. The worthless picture is painted over or cleared off or—the latest fashion—provided with a new canvas face on which a fine forgery has been painted.

Varnish tinted with bitumen gives appearance of age; licorice juice, ashes steeped in water and lampblack are used to imitate the dirt of time. There are specialists in fly stains, clumsy retouching designed to emphasize age by contrast, and in signatures—a select class, these latter, who call themselves monogramists.

They know the manner of each great painter, the way he signed his pictures and the place and color used. Sometimes the name is cunningly concealed under a layer of dirt or paint, so that the buyer of this particular "old master" may have the pleasure of discovering it for himself.

The author gives the names of several painters who find a ready road to wealth in multiplying for foreign markets the Rousseaus, Diazs, Corots Daubigneys and Courbets and the like without which no home of luxury is deemed complete.

Unfinished studies by famous artists sold after death at some official vendue bear the regular sale stamp, a priceless token of authenticity, wherefore the clever forger makes the dimly suggested picture a finished composition which carries on its back an indisputable certificate of genuineness.

Still more adroit is the trick played after the Fromentin sale, where one of these art harpies bought the painter's "Arab Falconer," painted on a wooden panel. The panel was sawed through edgeways, giving the forger a genuine Fromentin without the sale stamp and a black panel bearing the sale stamp. Result, two "genuine" Arab Falconers sold far apart, with no way at hand to disprove the imitation.

Sometimes, it is pointed out, the novelty of the trick employed works its own defeat, as in the case of a Florentine dealer who sold a rare old painting to a French collector. He offered to send it to the buyer's hotel and asked him to write his name and address on the back of the panel in order to remove all doubt. This was done but then the collector changed his mind and carried the picture off despite the dealer's protestations.

When the traveler got home he took the picture out of its frame to clean it. He found that he had brought away two pictures. The first, which he had bought, concealed a copy, on the back of which he had signed his name.

This was almost perfect rascality. If the collector had had the picture sent to his hotel he would have received the copy. If he had protested that it was not the picture he bought he would have been shown his own signature on the back of the panel.

The Italian government prohibits the exportation of native art works except by permission that is very hard to get. But the collectors and the owners of old family pictures find no difficulty in evading this. They order copies, put them in place of the originals and secretly send the latter out of the country. Thus a genuine old Italian master is one of the easiest things to acquire in the realm of high priced art.

Advertising Pays 100 Per Cent.

A Kansas man lost a five dollar bill and advertised for it. In a day or two a man appeared in his office, saying that he had seen the advertisement, and handed him the bill. In a few days the Kansas man was going through his "other" clothes and found the original bill which he thought he had lost. Notwithstanding the fact that the events in this story may sound suspicious, the lesson is obvious.—Kansas City Star.

Lava Covered Hospital.

PARIS, Dec. 18.—The configuration of the coast of the Island of Ambrim, in New Hebrides group, was changed on the Dip Point or western side by the volcanic upheavals on Dec. 6, according to cablegrams received by the French Colonial Office from the Governor of New Caledonia.

Previous reports are confirmed relative to the formation of new craters in the island, which is volcanic in origin. Vast streams of lava overwhelmed the Presbyterian Hospital, which is controlled by the Presbyterian Churches of Canada and Australasia, while French and English business houses and native cocoa plantations were destroyed.

WINDSOR WINS POINT.

By Agreement With Tunnel Co. It Gets $32,000 a Year in Taxes.

WINDSOR, Dec. 18.—The long standing litigation between the city of Windsor and the Detroit River Tunnel Co. was terminated yesterday when the company entered into an agreement which settles the question of the tunnel assessment for some years to come. The new agreement provides that the tunnel be assessed at one million dollars for fifteen years and the lands of the Michigan Central Railway Co., comprising forty-five acres, at $450,000 for fifteen years.

This agreement will be submitted to the Legislature for ratification.

Under the agreement of 1912 the city secured only a $10,000 assessment for two years. Later the Ontario Railway Board held that the tunnel was non-assessable.

By the present agreement the city of Windsor will get $32,000 a year taxes, at the rate of 22 1-2 mills.

Mayor Clay expresses himself as entirely satisfied with the result. "I believe the settlement to be in the best interests of Windsor," he said yesterday. "The city has achieved the victory by unity among the citizens. The Board of Trade and Council have acted together and have succeeded, as in the case of the London street level crossing. When the people stand together nothing is strong enough to defeat them."

Early Egyptian Graves.

The graves of the early Egyptians the very earliest in the prehistoric era of King Mena, 6,000 years ago were described by Prof. Petrie in a lecture in London recently.

They are curious things, consisting, in addition to the graves themselves, of small antechambers, where gifts of pottery and alabaster vases were lodged beside the bodies.

They resemble the foundations of a house as they might be laid down by a modern child at play. First, there is an opening about eighteen inches wide in the stacks marking the side of the antechamber, which represents the door through which the offerings were brought. The ante-chamber and grave are connected by two small slits.

These graves, between 600 and 800 in all are spread over a mile of desert near Tarkhan. The presence of so large a cemetery, Prof. Flinders Petrie explained, shows that there must have been a large town here in the premenite period.

Kingston to Have Commission

KINGSTON, Dec. 18.—By a majority of 23 votes yesterday it was decided to place civic utilities under a commission of three members. The vote was as follows: For commission, 180; against, 157. This was a very small vote in view of the fact that there are about four thousand qualified voters for the election.

The commissioners will be selected at the municipal election.

Naturalization Settled.

LONDON, Dec. 18.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Speaking at a British Empire League meeting yesterday Postmaster-General Samuel said that long consultations on the subject of uniform naturalization for all British subjects had proceeded between the Home and Dominion Governments, and a bill embodying the principles arrived at would come before Parliament at its next session.

MONTREAL, Dec. 18.—The management of the Novelty Theatre, where the French piece, Baptiste on Tour, which contained a caricature of King George and the Prince of Wales, was played, has agreed to eliminate the scenes in which reference is made to His Majesty and His Royal Highness, and have substituted the King of Zanzibar as the monarch who entertained the Mayor of St. Scholastique, his wife and daughter, in his pyjamas.

Judgment in the McBain vs. Cavan Township Action Heard Here.

Mr. Justice Middleton has given the following judgment at Toronto inthe McBain vs. Township of Cavan action, heard before him at the fall assizes:—

I. F. Hellmuth, K.C., and J. E. L. Goodwill, Peterboro; for the plaintiff; R. Ruddy, K.C., for defendant. Action for damages for breach of agreement between the parties that council would open channel and protect it by gates on outlet, plaintiff to close said gates in proper time to protect channel from filling up by spring freshets, council to keep channel open. Judgment: — Plaintiff could have cleared out the ditch himself in 1912 for $10, and in 1913, if it had again filled up, for a like sum. This, I think, fixes his damages at $20. The defence as to validity of contract has no more foundation in law than in morals. Plaintiff seeks a mandatory order directing the municipality to comply with its contract and keep the water course clear in the future. I do not think he is entitled to this. I think his remedy is to himself perform the work contracted for, and to sue for its cost as damages sustained upon each succeeding breach. Judgment for $20, with costs fixed at $100, as this litigation has in effect determined the wider question raised by the defendants, the validity of the contract.

In the above action the plaintiff claimed $300.00 damages and also for a mandatory order against the Township directing repair to the water-course on the plaintiff's property for all time and full costs of the action.

A TRAGIC TALE FROM FLOOD ZONE

Mr. R. M. Waddell Sends the Review a Copy of the Houston Chronicle

The Review has received a copy of the Houston Chronicle from Mr. R. M. Waddell, who with Mrs. Waddell, is spending some time in Houston, Texas. Hundreds of people have been drowned and hundreds of thousands of dollars have been lost by the destruction of property as a result of the floods in Texas. The Chronicle gives a number of photographs of different situations in the flood zone and among the tragic tales told by special writers is the following:

BRYAN, Texas,—Three bodies were lying side by side last night in a dark undertaker's shop. They had been in life the very flower of Bryan's young manhood. Down in the dark waters of the hungry Bhazos are still more bodies. They had been the finest specimens of Bryan's mature manhood.

Everyone of them had died trying to alleviate the sufferings of others and to save life. Howard R. Cavitt, 30 years old, was a prosperous and progressive automobile dealer. He leaves a wife and baby. The baby a month old, and an aged mother, who has long been ill, father and other relatives.

Died for Others

With a party of three other young men he was carrying two boat loads of bread to a hundred or more Italians marooned in a gin house. One boat sunk and all climbed into the other. With Cavitt were A. J. Robbins, employed in a jewelry store; Clifton Ellsey, a machinist, in the employ of Cavitt and Tom Evans. The only one alive today is Evans, and his story is one of almost unparalleled fortitude. They left to cross the river Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. A few minutes later the current swamped the first boat, when the other went under. The four lodged in a tree.

Saturday night Robbins, used to inside work, died of exposure in the freezing cold in Evans' arms. Evans lashed the dead boy's body to the tree.

At noon Sunday Ellsey died.

Evans held him as he died and lashed his body to the tree. He was also assisted by Cavitt in the tying, the men using belts and strings from their boots and leggins.

Finally, after more long hours of freezing cold, Cavitt weakened and began to moan and add figures in delirium. When he died at sunrise Monday morning Evans, with numbed fingers, stripped his body of his coat and put it on for warmth. Hours later a negro passing by in a boat saw the four bodies in the tree top. He stopped to investigate Evans was unconscious.

The negro took him into the boat and managed to get him to shore. He was unconscious when taken in hand by physicians, but afterward recovered enough to tell of the tragedy. Cavitt and Robbins were graduates of Agricultural and mechanical College.

GOOD SPEAKERS ARE ASSURED

For the Farmers' Banquet to be Held To-morrow.

Two men, well known from one end of Canada to the other through their connection with the farmers' movement in Western Canada, will be the speakers at the Farmers' banquet to be held in the Oriental hotel at 1 p.m. tomorrow. One of these men, Mr. Creasor, was largely instrumental in organising and bringing to its present standing the Grain Growers' Grain Company. This farmers' organization started in 1907 with small capital and few members and that year declared profits of $790. This year the company has declared a profit of $170,000, their paid-up capital is $645,000, the volume of business transacted totalled over $50,000,000 and this farmers' company is now the greatest grain handling company in the world. The second speaker is Mr. W. F. Chipman, editor of The Grain Growers' Guide, the official organ of the Grain Growers' Company.

In Toronto yesterday these two men gave addresses that thrilled a large and representative gathering of Ontario farmers. They told of the organization of this company, of its fight for life, first with the railroad companies, then with the Winnipeg Grain Exchange, and of how they triumphed over all difficulties. These men will urge Ontario farmers to organize into a similar company in order that the two may trade back and forth, the western company supplying eastern farmers with flour, feed oats, bran and so forth and buying from eastern farmers apples beef and dairy products. For instance were the farmers of Peterboro county to join in such a company, the western company might agree to buy the entire product of the cheese factories of the county.

AN ORDER TO CLEAN UP

Yards in the Business Section Not What They Should be Says Inspector

That some radical changes will be asked for during the coming year, in regard to sanitation, was the information imparted to The Review this morning by, the Sanitary Inspector.

Stringent methods will be adopted to have the merchants in the business section of the city provide proper sanitary yards by keeping them free from any nuisance which may form there, through carelessness. At present, according to Mr. Spence, some of the yards are in a very filthy condition, which might easily result in an epidemic of some sort.

Mr. Spence is also of the opinion that some of the rooming apartments in the business section may also experience considerable change in regard to proper sanitation methods.

Besides these, a number of other changes are being mapped out by the Health Association and will be brought before the public next season.

A meeting of the Board will be called before the end of the year at which Sanitary Inspector Spence and Medical Health Officer Dr. McPherson will present their annual report.

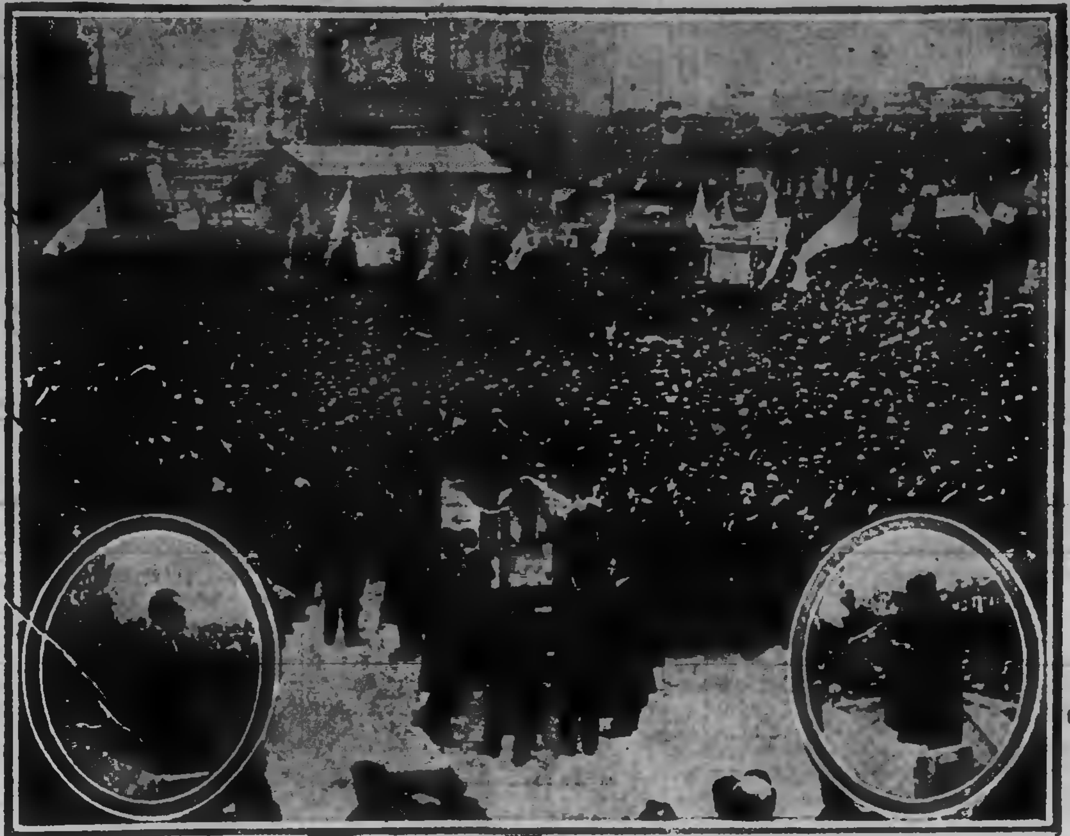
THE STRUGGLE BETWEEN "I LANCOS" AND "COLORADOS."



THE FIGHT OVER DISESTABLISHMENT IN SOUTH AMERICA, A MEETING IN BUENOS AYRES

All through South America a vigorous and unceasing struggle is being carried on between the Blancos, or "Whites" (supporters of the Catholic Church), and the Colorados, or "Reds" (anti-clericals). In Uruguay, where the Colorados are in power under the socialistic President Batlle, Church and State have been already separated. Now the same demand is being made in the Argentine Republic, and the illustrations represent the big Catholic demonstration in Buenos Ayres in favor of the Church. The demonstrators are singing the Argentine national hymn. On the left we see Dr. Mario Goroftar speaking and on the right Dr. O'Farrell.

FIREMEN AND THER FAMILIES GATHER AT THE FESTIVE BOARD

A Splendid Meal and Some Happy Speeches --- Gift for the Newly Weds and a Chemical Engine for the Chief

The good will of the Christmas tide was very prominent last night at the Fire Hall, for it was the occasion of the Firemen's banquet and Christmas tree. The firefighters are on duty on Christmas day the same as any other day in the year, and since they are deprived of the pleasure of holding Christmas at their homes, the annual banquet and Christmas tree were as it were invented by Fire Chief Howard to be the firemen's Christmas celebration.

As hosts the firemen are not equalled and the very clever manner in which they executed their duties, was much to be admired. The large dormitory on the second flat was decorated with flags, streamers and evergreens in a very artistic way. It was in this room the celebration took place. On the side opposite the door that every popular sign was inscribed in large white letters, on a dark background, "P. F. D. wish you a Merry Merry Christmas."

The banquet which the firemen arranged themselves, was of the first class order, the cooking, especially the various cakes, was supplied by the wives of the members of the department. Adjutant McElheney, the Fire Hall chaplain, opened the festivities with prayer.

After the banquet was o'er and as Magistrate Dumble remarked "full" and thank "ful", Chief Howard welcomed the guests and explained the reason for the banquet and by whom it was got up. He reviewed the work of the firemen during the past year and in conclusion, wished them a merry, merry Christmas and a happy and prosperous New Year. A part of their program was then rendered which was punctuated here and there by speeches by some of the prominent citizens present. The most striking of these speeches was the one delivered by Magistrate Dumble. That gentleman's love for the children is by no means unknown to the many citizens who know him intimately. He appeared to enjoy a great deal having the children around and related the joys with which his heart was filled on a Christmas morn when he had his own children with him.

During intermission the tree was stripped of its burden and many were the titters of laughter when the youngsters received their much expected and greatly longed for, favorite toys. The elderly persons present had a chance to titter also when the box addressed to Chief Howard was undone. It proved to be a toy chemical engine. Mr. and Mrs. Herb Johnston were not forgotten and their wedding present from the brigade was a set of beautiful knives and forks.

After the toys were distributed the rest of the program was rendered, after which the national anthem brought the event to a close.

Those taking part in the program were: Mr. Joseph Clancy, solo; Mr. J. John, recitation; Ald. Gillespie, speech; J. J. Turner Sr., song; Mr. Dumble, speech; Mr. R. J. Soden, reading; Ald. J. J. Duffus, speech; Col. Miller, recitation; Dr. Greer, speech; Chief Thompson, speech; Mr. F. Skitch, solo; Ald. Anderson, speech; Ald. Green, speech; Mr. F. Skitch, solo; Col. Miller, recitation; Adj. McElheney, speech; Mr. J. J. Turner Sr., song; Ald. Langford, speech; Mr. J. John, recitation.

The accompanists of the evening were Miss L. Clancy and Mr. C. Ackerman. The wives of the Aldermen were present. Ald. Buller was called away before the speeches began.

AS TO OUR CANDIDATES

The Kingston Whig says:—"Peterboro elects Utilities' Commissioners in January, and some of the candidates are among the best men in the community. The commission is always attractive."

The Packet says:—"F. H. Dobbin, the veteran newspaper man, is a candidate for the office of alderman in Peterboro. Mr. Dobbin ought to be in Parliament." Of course he ought—and he may be yet.

Yet another candidate for Alderman in the person of Dr. W. T. Holloway. Mr. F. H. Dobbin and the doctor are next-door neighbors, and the newspaper man is hoping that they will both get in together so that he will have someone to see him home at night—Holloway home.

NOT A CANDIDATE FOR MAYORALTY

To the Editor of The Review:
Peterborough, Ont.

Dear Sir,—

A report has been spread broadcast through the city during the last few days that, on nomination day, I will be a candidate for Mayor. I admit it is an enviable position for any man to have the honor of being Mayor of the City of Peterborough, of which we are all so proud, yet I beg to state that this report is absolutely untrue and at no time did I have any intention of aspiring for such a high position. It is my sincere desire that this office should be left in the hands of more capable and experienced men.

I wish to state, however, that if it is the expressed desire of the ratepayers of the West Ward, and the citizens of Peterborough generally, I will again be a candidate as Alderman in the City Council of 1914.

Very sincerely yours,
Jos. J. Duffus.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTORS MUST PAY UNION WAGES

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—Hon. T. W. Crothers, Minister of Labor, has notified the business agents of the local carpenters' union that, although the rate of 40 cents per hour was mentioned as the rate of wages to be paid by contractors tendering for work on Toronto harbor improvements, the contractors would be required to pay the current rate of wages whether it was 42 or 45 cents per hour. The Minister intimated he was taking the matter up with the Minister of Public Works, and the labor men might rest assured their interests would be adequately protected by the government.

LOCAL WOMEN'S COUNCIL ASK FOR POLICE WOMAN

Petition Now in Circulation Will be Presented to the Police Commissioners

Through their representative body, the Women's Council stand for morality and health, and maintain that the safe-guarding of the moral life of our boys and girls has FIRST CLAIM upon public funds. They maintain that, since about one-half of our population consists of women and girls, many of whom are now a part of the working world, and new and permanent social conditions are thereby created, they are legitimately entitled to the kind of police protection which women believe will be most effective. Having at hand convincing proof of the success of this means in other cities they are therefore agitating for the appointment of a police-woman here and are circulating the following petition for signatures:

To the Police Commissioners,
Of the City of Peterborough.
Gentlemen,—

WHEREAS in the judgment of many, the time has come when a considerable addition should be made to the police force of the city,

WHEREAS since about one-half of the population consists of women and girls, many of whom are now a part of the working world, and new and permanent social conditions are thereby created, they are legitimately entitled to the kind of police protection which women feel will be most effective,

WHEREAS the very presence of a policewoman would protect women and children leaving factories, stores, theatres, and picture shows, from being accosted, and also prove a safeguard in parks, stations and the local courts, where loafers congregate,

WHEREAS except in hardened cases, women and girls who are involved in questionable and guilty conduct, will naturally tell their story much more readily to a policewoman than to a policeman.

WHEREAS mothers who are anxious about wayward daughters, would more readily call in a policewoman than a policeman, for consultation and advice, and a woman in authority could more easily bring pressure to bear to secure proper conduct,

WHEREAS in the testimony of police inspectors who have had the services of a policewoman, that:

"None can deal so well with women; they can always get the desired information from women that a man cannot, in many cases."—Staff Inspector Robt. Gregory, Toronto.

"Our opinion is that they will be of a very great service in detecting and preventing breaches of the law that would otherwise escape the notice of the men on the force. . . . And in saving young people from entering upon a career of crime."—Chairman Police Commissioners, Ottawa.

THEREFORE we the undersigned voters of the city of Peterboro would pray your Honorable Body to have a woman with full police powers, appointed to the police force of Peterborough.

PETERBOROUGH, FRIDAY, DEC. 19, 1913.

ALL GOOD WIVES SHOP EARLY.

THERE SEEMS TO BE a general cry urging the public to "shop early." How many people will listen and obey the call? Not many, if any. The average shopper likes to please himself or herself and does not care to be dictated to. The object is, of course, to relieve the crowding of the stores on the last days before Christmas, and also to lighten the labors and worries of the beseiged shop-keeper and his staff.

But part of the enjoyment of shopping at Christmas is in elbowing your way through a shopful of eager shoppers and swearing that you will never shop on Christmas eve again. A contemporary argues that one of the advantages of shopping early is that if you buy an article as a gift and afterwards reconsider your choice you can get it changed for something else. This would hardly relieve the shop-keeper and it is to be feared that, despite his civility, he would bless you under his breath for troubling him twice over one purchase.

There are advantages in shopping late. When you realize that you have only a few hours to wait, and have much to do, you can make up your mind more readily. If you are a married man you can make a good excuse for not buying an expensive present for your wife, for no reasonable woman would expect more than a box of handkerchiefs on Christmas eve when the shop is so full, and indeed a diplomatic husband could easily get off with a box of chocolates and a promise of something really good for a birthday present.

But this advice only holds good in the case of the men, who, of course, cannot very well do their Christmas buying till the last miunte. The good wives should by all means, see that they get through their Christmas shopping a full week in advance. Especially is this advisable in buying presents, and more particularly if the presents be for their better-halves. Men have been known to receive gifts of boxes of cigars on Christmas eve, when it was impossible for them to protest or to exchange them for another brand by paying an additional amount for putting them into the same box. This is apt to spoil a man's Christmas, for his wife invariably insists upon him smoking them in her presence. We would counsel every wife not to encourage her husband in smoking by presenting him with cigars, it is most injurious to the liver and a man cannot be sweet-tempered when his liver is out of order Besides, many a man has been shunned by his friends for a whole twelve-months after distributing a box of Christmas gift cigars among them. Therefore, ye good wives who love your husbands, shop early.

SHOULD WE EAT OUR OWN FISH?

AMONG THE MANY things that a Britisher misses, on coming to a Canadian city, is the fish-shop. It would be impossible to find in any city in Ontario a store given solely to the sale of fish. Yet this is a common sight in English cities, fish-shops are as plentiful as butchers. for fish is an indispensible item in the diet of a Britisher. Of course we can buy fish in Peterborough, but could one dealer make a living solely out of the sale of fish in this city? No one has yet tried the experiment and what fish is sold is kept as a side-line for the sake of occasional customers.

Of course, at certain seasons we can get all the fish we want by going and catching it. But it might be stated as a fact that we are not a fish-eating people as compared with other countries, even with the States. One of the chief reasons for this is that we have no fish markets. There is plenty of fish caught in our great lakes and there is big money made out of it every year. But most of it is shipped to the States, while we are shipping fish in from other countries. It is not generally known that the fisheries in Canadian waters are entirely in the hands of aliens. These people are licensed to catch our fish and they refuse to sell their catch to the nation from which they have secured the license. This may seem incredible, but the Hon. W. J. Hanna declares that the Provincial Government could not buy enough fish from the fish trust to supply its own provincial institutions. These institutions require three tons of fish a week and the trust will only supply them with one ton. The Government is therefore, going to fish on its own and is to establish a small fishing and freezing plant near one of the institutions.

There is one characteristic of the Canadian, as a commercial man, which is very peculiar and that is, that he has no pity for his own market. He thinks it is his duty to supply everybody else but a Canadian with food. He will sell his cheese and butter to other countries at a cheaper rate than he will sell to his next door neighbor. He will supply England with goods at 15 cents per pound and buy the same kind of goods from New Zealand for 17 cents.

This insane method of doing business would be fostered by Sir Wilfrid Laurier's free-food policy. The idea being to keep up our exports of goods that we can use ourselves and buy other people's goods for our own consumption. This may be good for the shipper and the trader may be content, but is it good economy? is it not suicidal?

Charity begins at home, and when we have any surplus produce then we can afford to give it away, or sell at a low price to get it off our hands. No wonder the cost of living is high, when everything that this fair land produces and even the fish of our great waters are exploited by selfish traders who would sooner deal with the outsider than give the benefit of a bargain to the country that gives him his living..

BONUS INDUSTRIES.

THE QUESTION of removing the powers of municipalities to bonus industries is now before the Legislature of Saskatchewan, those municipalities in the Province which believe in the system are awaiting the result with interest. Some of them are already taking action. The Board of Trade of North Battleford has forwarded a resolution saying: "As we understand that legislation is at the present time proposed, whereby the powers of cities to extend bonuses for the encouragement of industrial development are to be taken away, be it resolved that the Board of Trade of North Battleford places itself on record as being sincerely opposed to such drastic and unwarrantable action."

Industrial Canada says that while some industries which have received bonuses have been successful, the system, in a general way, cannot be recommended. A manufacturing concern which has the necessary capital, ability and experience does not depend on the size of bonuses in selecting a site. It will consider shipping facilities, labor supply, accessibility to raw materials and other economic questions. Experience has shown that, as a rule, the bonus system does not attract to municipalities the most desirable and reliable manufacturing concerns.

It may well be that a too rapid growth in this direction will bring rather a burden than a blessing upon a city. Industries attract large numbers of working men and their families to one centre, and if those industries are not substantial and of sufficient importance as to be sustained by a constant demand for the goods they turn out, then there will be periods of slackness which will be sufficient to cripple a city. Population is a good thing, but an idle population is a bad thing even if it be but in the winter months. Manufacturing concerns ought to see to it that they do their duty by their workmen in the winter time when they most need the work and when they can work at their best. Every fall certain firms habitually discharge batches of men and many of these are thrown upon the community in the shape of "the unemployed."

It may be that a little more foresight and a steadier pace in the summer would solve the problem of unemployment in the Winter. Some may talk of the demands of the market, but has the worker no demands? Every industrial concern that opens up business and attracts labor to a city is morally responsible for the keeping of those laborers in bread and butter the year round. If it is making large profits out of its employees' labor in the summer and in the winter casts those workmen upon the rates of the city it is robbing the rate-payers and thriving at their expense. Cities can sometimes pay too dearly for the title of being an industrial centre.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

BEGGING FOR CHURCHES

Editor, Review:

Dear Sir,—

Will you allow me space for a few words of disapproved as well as of admonition.

I have again been grieved at finding at my door two innocent children begging a nickle. For what purpose? To help a Sunday School of a wealthy congregation, whose barns are so overcrowded that they have to build greater. This, to my sense, is too low a thought to teach children or to even encourage them in, even in the name of self-denial, as the little ones express it.

The cause of Christ does not need beggars. It is in need of those who hear the Word and do it. When Jesus recognized the hungry multitude he told his desciples to feed them. When Jesus and Peter required the tax money, Jesus told Peter to do something, not to beg; when Peter caught the fish, in that was the needed money. As I understand it, when Peter gained the substance or understanding of Spirit, this met the human need. Jesus said: "Seek first the kingdom of God and all these things, (human needs) shall be added."

Now that our worthy Ministerial Association has denounced beggars, bun feeds, and entertainments in Church work, I sincerely hope their next step will be to eliminate this child begging.

If necessary to have a week of self denial, would it not be better to teach the child to deny itself part of its luxuries and to give of its own rather than beg of its neighbors.

Jesus' command was to preach that "the kingdom of Heaven is at hand." John, describing his vision of this kingdom, pictured it as a state of wealth, as well as of purity, beauty and glory, consequently no need for begging, but a rejoicing in the abundance of infinite supply.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor,
Sincerely yours,
R. J. Todd.

REGIMENTAL MARCHES.

Most of the British Army's Tunes Go Back Into History.

Each regiment of the British army claims one particular refrain as its "regimental march."

Most of these tunes are linked up in some way with the history of the regiments to which they belong.

For instance, the renowned "Ca ira" of the West Yorkshire Regiment was adopted during a campaign in France, when the regiment was known as the 14th Foot. During the siege of Tournay the defenders frequently played the "Ca ira."

Later, with a touch of dramatic irony, the besiegers marched to possess the city to the strains of the same tune.

These regimental marches are used especially on review days, and on several other occasions, such as leaving or entering camp or barracks. When most regimental bands give concerts the "regimental march" and the National Anthem close the program.

Perhaps one of the most famous of all "regimental marches" is "The British Grenadiers." This belongs to the Grenadier Guards, Royal Engineers, and the Royal Artillery. "Hearts of Oak" is the property of the Royal Marine Light Infantry, while "A Life on the Ocean Wave" belongs to the Naval Brigade.

The Scots Greys march to the strains of "The Garb of Old Gaul," the Scots Guards and many other kilted regiments to "Highland Laddie," the Royal Scots to the famous "Dumbarton's Drums," the Scottish Borders Regiment to "Blue Bonnets O'er the Border," and the Scottish Rifles to the well-known lilt of "Within a Mile o' Edinboro' Toon." The "regimental march" of the King's Royal Rifles is "The Huntsman's Chorus," and of the East Surreys "A Southerly Wind and Cloudy Sky."

The Welsh Fusiliers and the South Wales Borderers use the spirited "Men of Harlech" as their "regimental march."

Many of the famous Irish national airs have been taken by the Irish regiments. The Connaught Rangers appropriate the music of "St. Patrick's Day," while the Royal Irish Regiment uses "Garry Owen."

"God Bless the Prince of Wales" belongs to several regiments, including the 3rd Dragoon Guards and 12th Lancers.

The Suffolks march to the music of "Speed the Plough," and the Derbyshire Regiment to the "Young May Moon."

Ottawa Collegians Wanted Game for Next Tuesday Night

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—Rev. Father Stanton has announced that the Ottawa College hockeyists will leave on Tuesday morning for their annual tour of the American cities where hockey is booming.

The following players will make the trip: L. Derocher, Angus Duford, Jim Burnett, O. Leary, Behan P. Dennison, Davis, Braithwaite, Madden, Mulvihill, Brien.

Several of the student hockeyists who figured prominently on the College line-up last season are unable to accompany the team in the invasion of the United States, as study claims their attention.

The opening game will be played in Cleveland on Christmas day. Two other games will be played in Cleveland, after which the College boys go to New York, where they will try conclusions with the Princeton septet. Two games will then be played against Harvard in Syracuse, after which they play in the Intercollegiate series with Varsity and McGill in New York.

The entire trip will cover a period of two weeks, and Father Stanton's team are confident of giving a good account of themselves while on tour.

No regular practice has been held as yet, though several of the players have done a little work on the rink in the college yard, and a regular practice will be held at the Rideau rink no Saturday morning.

Automobile Runs.

One-tenth of the automobiles of this country are owned in New York.

In Washington an automobile cannot pass a street car headed in the same direction while passengers are getting on or off. It must stop.

Automobile tires that are filled with puncture repairing solutions have been provided by an inventor with a quick repair boot for preventing loss of the solution through large cuts.

PUCKERINGS FROM PUCK

Secretary Bond was communicated with yesterday, by the Ottawa team, but no arrangements could be made for Tuesday, the date asked for by the Collegians.

There will be a meeting of the Mercantile League to-morrow evening at eight o'clock. The executive and one representative from the following teams are asked to be present:—C. and P., Tool Room, Bankers, Test, Wm. Hamilton Co., De Laval, Plumbers and Printers.

Jerry Coughlin is home from Ingersoll for the Christmas holidays.

Flooding operations will be commenced at the rink tonight.

A scout of a club in the Cobalt Hockey League arrived in Toronto and was offering inducements to to local players to play up north this winter in the "amateur" league. Jobs calling for $54 and $60 a week are being offered to several senior O.H.A. players, but so far none of them have accepted. The residence rule is Jan. 1. It was stated last night that both Macey and Laverceaux, of Midland, would go to the northern country to play hockey this winter.

The St. Michael's Hockey Club have forwarded to W. E. ("Brick") Gordon at Calgary, a diamond ring as a token of good will and appreciation of the services rendered to the "Irish" on the ice.

"Reg." Bloomfield has been transferred by the Dominion Bank branch at Marmora to one of the Toronto offices.

S. Gifford has been appointed manager of the Port Hope Junior O.H.A. team.

The Greatest Happiness

Comes To Ourselves When We Make Others Happy With Our Gifts

The value of a gift consists, not in costliness or variety, but in the feelings of affection, or regard, or sympathy, or honor, which it is supposed to carry. It is time that both giver and receiver realized this. Too often the spirit of Christmas is utterly sacrificed in the contest between the desire to spend and the duty of refraining. For a gift to be worth the giving, no sacrifice of duty must be entered into it. A tiny flower given in love and simplicity is better than a rare and costly gem procured with worry and doubt. When you give something to wear, you exhibit good sense, good taste and good judgment.

PAYS $90 FOR HORSE THAT WINS PURSE AMOUNTING TO $6500

DETROIT, Dec. 19.—It is not often that a $90 horse is able to go forth and battle with the very best of the grand circuit brigade, and it is not customary for a country merchant to campaign the fastest pacer in the 2:05 class. The records for the racing season just closed, however, prove that to the lot of a cheap horse and a country owner have come the honor of heading the list of money winners in the 2:05 class, and the big stables are now casting a longing eye in the direction of Converse, Ind., and wondering how it happened.

When William Maple, a cheese merchant and huckster, of Converse, Ind., bid $90 for a tall, long-legged and rather coarse black colt at the last sale of the Daugherty Brothers in Wabash, three years ago, he builded better than he knew. Few men about the sale ring considered the colt worth a season's training, but Mr. Maple did not regret his purchase when the following spring the colt, under the name of Walter Cochato, took a record of 2:17 1-4 as a 3-year-old over the half mile track at Russiaville.

Now the name of Walter Cochato is known from one end of the grand circuit to the other, from Kalamazoo, Mich., to Rockingham Park at Salem, New Hampshire, and from Buffalo to Lexington. Opposite the name stands a record of 2:03 1-4, and the statistics show that Walter Cochato won for his huckster owner the princely sum of $6500, the largest amount credited to any pacer in the 2:05 class.

GEORGE ROSS WITH ORILLIA INTERMEDIATES

ORILLIA, Dec. 19.—Mr. Herb. Caswell has ben appointed manager of the Orillia Intermediate Hockey team. Herb, besides being one of Orillia's most popular young men, is an old experienced hockey player, and possessed the necessary ability and qualities for a first class manager. He has a lot of good material for an intermediate seven, including "Dodger" Johnston, Norman Harvie, George Ross, Love Jupp, Halward, Styles, McDonald, Morley Carter, Geo. Whiting, Gordon Perriman, Howard Jebb, besides a number of others. Of the above several have played intermediate hockey with other teams, Ross with Peterboro, McDonald with Galt, Stiles with Gravenhurst, and Halward with the Toronto Simcoes. With this material in condition, Orillia should have an intermediate team that will give a good account of itself during the coming season. There are some strong teams in this group, including Collingwood, last year's champions, Midland and Gravenhurst, but Orillia expects to be near the top when February first comes around.

WHY SHE KEPT THE CHAIR.

Because She Wasn't Responsible For Clever Salesmen's Mistakes.

"Look here, young man," said a customer who had returned to the store with the light of battle in her eye, "you remember that rocking chair you sold me the other day?"

"Perfectly, ma'am," he replied, "and a rare bargain it was."

"So you said," she resumed, "and on the strength of your say so I paid $4 for it and had it sent home."

"I trust you were pleased with it."

"Pleased with it! Say, young fellow, you swindled me. Why, that rocker is imperfect. The legs on one side are an inch shorter than on the other side and when any one sits in it it goes traveling all around the room."

Just then the young salesman had a sudden inspiration. He saw a way to save the sale and the customer. He led the way to where the stock of chairs was kept.

"By gracious," he exclaimed, putting on an air of consternation. "I made a mistake! That chair I sold you should have been marked $10. It was a patent chair, designed not to wear out the carpet by always rocking in the same place. Madam, I apologize. If you'll send the chair right back I'll be greatly obliged. I'll give you another in its place."

"Send it back! I guess not. I'm not responsible for your mistakes, young man. It should teach you to be more careful in the future."

And she swept majestically out of the store.—San Francisco Call.

Why the Train Was Late.

An express train leaving Madrid the other day in which Count Romanones, the Spanish premier, had taken a reserved saloon was three-quarters of an hour late in starting. Indignant passengers made fruitless demands to the station master that the train should leave at once. The official replied that he was unable to order the departure of the train for a reason that he would not state. Eventually a breathless messenger arrived from the premier's house, carrying a cardboard box which, to the obvious relief of Count Romanones, was installed in the reserved saloon. The station master then explained to the passengers that the premier had forgotten his top hat and had refused to allow the train to start without it.—London Mail.

UP THE AMAZON.

English Explorer Tells of a Voyage Up the Ria Ynirida.

Some very strange tribal customs and picturesque experiences are related by Dr. Hamilton Rice, the explorer, who recently returned from a trip extending over seventeen months along the upper reaches of the great Amazon river. Speaking of his ascent of the Ria Ynirida, he says:

We reached a beautiful waterfall, over 100 feet high, which is a break between high precipitous hills running in a northeasterly and southwesterly direction. It took two days to convey our big canoe around this fall, and five days more were spent in the hardest kind of work, smashing our way through to the sources of the Ynirida.

Three days later we began to descend to the river. The country on both sides teems with jaguars, tapirs, and anacondas, and the river is filled with rayas. The tapirs were so tame that they swam around our canoe—curious and absolutely fearless. Some stood on the shore whistling at us. I shot a magnificent specimen of jaguar, and found inside of it a whole tapir.

For fifty days we descended the Ynirida without seeing a sign of a human being. We camped on shore at night, and jaguars and tapirs would come up and nose us at will. They showed no fear of men. In this journey we passed three great randales or rapids.

The first encampment we saw was a fishing village on the beach. These Indians had had no contact with whites; they do not belong to the great Tupi-Guarani family, which extends the whole length and breadth of the Amazon valley, but probably as members of the great Carib family, which embraces all the Indians of Venezuela, Guainja, and the central, northern and northeastern portions of Brazil.

A curious feature of this region was that the Indians for the most part not only lived back from the main streams, but in the villages were found a great predominance of women, who, from all we could make out, were permanent inhabitants of their respective settlements, while the males were transients.

This brings to one's mind the question whether this may not be the district whence come the reports so well known on the Amazon for two centuries of the existence of a race of women living alone, except at stated periods. Concerning these legends both Alfred Russel Wallace and Richard Free, the eminent English traveler and scientist of more than three generations ago, have written.

By a Guainia Indian I was taken to a settlement of Indians living back several hours' distance from the Papanaua, where I found a very intelligent native who spoke the Tupi-Guarani language, which would make it seem that there had been a dividing line between the nation of that name and the Caribs.

The Papanaua Indians travel from their river to the upper Icana, and have a well-made path nine miles in length, which crosses elevated land flanked on the east and west by enormous impassable swamps and lagoons. By doing a lot of medical work I got this old Indian's good will, and he entered my service.

At this point the Columbians I had, who had become mutinous through exposure and hard work, were sent back. The old Indian had promised to get me natives for my party, but they did not turn up, so I had to compel him to take us down the river. The first village we reached contained one man and fifteen women. In the next we found a settlement of two men, some twenty women of all ages, and any number of children. They had little or no food, but gave us smoked monkey to eat.

A Misapprehension.

To do just one thing at a time has led many a harassed soul into quietness and order and rest.

SPIRIT OF THE AIR.

It Permeates the Entire Being of the Flying Bird.

The bird is little more than a drift of the air brought into form by plumes. The air is in all its quills. It breathes through its whole frame and flesh and glows with air in its flying, like brown flames. It rests upon the air, subdues it, surpasses it, outraces it—is the air, conscious of itself, conquering itself, ruling itself. Also in the throat of the bird is given the voice of the air. All that in the mind itself is weak, wild, useless in sweetness, is knit together in its song.

As we may imagine the wild form of the cloud closed into the perfect form of the bird's wings, so the wild voice of the cloud into its ordered and commanded voice, unwearied, rippling through the clear heaven in its gladness, interpreting all intense passion through the soft spring nights, bursting into acclaim and rapture of choir at daybreak or lisping and twittering among the boughs and hedges, through the heat of day, like little winds that only make the cowslip bells shake and ruffle the petals of the wild rose.

Also upon the plumes of the bird are put the colors of the air; on these the gold of the cloud that cannot be gathered by any covetousness; the rubies of the cloud, that are not the pride of Athena, but are Athena; the vermilion of the cloud bar, and the flame of the cloud crest, and the snow of the cloud and its shadow, and the melted blue of the deep wells of the sky—all these, seized by the creating spirit and woven by Athena herself into films and threads of plume, with wave upon wave following and fading along breast and throat and opened wings, infinite as the dividing of the foam and the sifting of the sea sand, even the white down of the cloud seeming to flutter up between the stronger plumes—seen, but too soft for touch.

And so the spirit of the air is put into and upon this created form, and it becomes through twenty centuries the symbol of divine help, descending as the fire to speak, but as the dove to bless.—From John Ruskin's "The Queen of the Air."

REMBRANDT AN EASY MARK.

The Great Painter Was a Victim of Reckless Speculation.

German art students who have been investigating the reason why Rembrandt died hopelessly bankrupt have discovered that he was an incorrigible speculator. It had hitherto been popularly supposed that he was compelled to remain poor because of his extravagant love of jewels.

Unfortunate speculations turn out to have been the cause of his financial ruin. Documents have been disinterred showing that he officially informed the municipality of Amsterdam that he had suffered heavy losses in business transactions as well as through damages and losses on the high seas.

It was at a time, 1640-60, when all Europe was engaged in feverish money making in connection with Holland's meteoric commercial prosperity. Speculation took place on a reckless scale. Immense fortunes were sunk in shipping, banking and colonial enterprises.

Rembrandt, whose highly artistic nature was sadly devoid of even elementary business sense, fell an easy victim to the scheming speculators of that era of frenzied finance, and he lost his entire fortune. Many of his pictures were seized for debt by the legal authorities before the canvases were half finished. Bankruptcy finally overtook him and compelled him to sell all his properties, his home and priceless works of art under the hammer at sacrifice prices.—Philadelphia Ledger.

Origin of Iron Duke.

The Iron Duke, of course, was Wellington, but he came by the nickname in a roundabout way. He was never so called until long after Waterloo. An iron steamship, a novelty at the time, was built in the Mersey and named the Duke of Wellington, and so the vessel came to be known as the Iron Duke. The transition being easy and obvious it was the duke's union of resolution and physical energy which made the popular name for the [illegible] built seemingly to fit him like a perfect cap. Such, at least, is the explanation of his biographer, Sir Herbert Maxwell.—London Chronicle.

Power of Desire.

It has been said of Abraham Lincoln that as a boy he read less than a half dozen books and that they were such books as "Pilgrim's Progress," Weems' "Life of Washington" and a popular history of the United States written in almost primary language. Yet Lincoln was able to express himself more clearly than almost any public or literary man of his time. Such is the power of desire.

Getting a Verdict.

"We could have settled our difficulties by tossing a coin. Instead we spent a lot of money in going to law."

"Well?"

"I understand the jury settled the whole matter by tossing a coin."—Kansas City Journal.

TO PROTEST EMBARGO.

Representatives of Canada and Ireland Reach Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 18.—G. F. O'Halloran, Deputy Minister of Agriculture of Canada, arrived here yesterday to be present at a hearing today at the Department of Agriculture on the question of modifying the Department's embargo on potatoes from Canada and certain European countries. T. P. Gill, Secretary of Agriculture of Ireland, also will be present, and some other countries will have representatives.

The question to be considered is whether the plant quarantine board shall allow the importation of potatoes, as it does of trees and shrubs, provided they have been examined abroad by experts and declared to be free from infection.

Laborer Takes Paris Green.

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 19.—Thomas Kelly, aged 40, laborer, in a furniture factory, is in such a critical condition as a result of taking Paris green with suicidal intent at his home that he cannot recover. Kelly's wife believes he took the poison while temporarily insane.

GUARDS WHO TRAFFICKED IN TOBACCO ARE WARNED

Chairman of Prison Enquiry Commission Says Men Who Infringed Rules and if They Admit Offence They Will be Dismissed

KINGSTON, Dec. 19.—The probe of the Prison Reform Commission will not be through working this year. An adjournment is looked for to-day, when the enquiry will stand until Jan. 6. On this date the evidence of Inspectors Hughes and Stewart will be taken.

That the commission had evidence, which it was believed would be sufficient to convict guards in trafficking in tobacco, was the statement of Chairman Macdonell, and it caused a big sensation among the guards. The chairman, speaking on this matter, said:

"We have the authority of the Minister of Justice to say to these men, that if they confess their crime they will not be prosecuted under the section of the Penitentiary Act which provides the penalty of imprisonment for such offences. They will be liable to dismissal from office, and if no confession is made the prosecution will go through."

At the morning session, Dr. Phelan stated that he did not know of any convict in the insane word being "tubbed." He thought that it was in 1902 he gave an order that there should be no more "tubbing" of convicts.

"What caused you to issue that order?" asked Mr. Downey.

"It was intimated to me that there was a system of 'tubbing' being practiced." As a medical man he would not approve of "tubbing." He would not say it was dangerous, but he did not think it would be advisable to employ it unless under the charge of a careful, competent person.

Dr. Phelan, questioned by the commission, said he had collected fees for the examination of men making application for positions as guards. He stated that he did so, as it had been the custom of men in this position before him.

Questioned further, witness said he had stopped collecting fees. He did not know just when. He stopped because he did not think it was worth while.

Convict to Work In Camp.

KINGSTON, Dec. 19.—A nineteen-year-old convict has just been released from the penitentiary on parole, and sent to a northern lumber camp as an experiment. If he turns out well it is said that probably fifty convicts in prison for minor offences may be released in the spring and also be sent to lumber camps. They will be under the supervision of the Lumber Camp Mission.

THE COST OF LIVING PROBE

Dominion Government Appoints Commission of Experts

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—The Government has appointed a departmental commission to enquire into the causes underlying the high cost of living.

The personnel of the commission is as follows: John A. McDougal, C.M.G., chief commissioner of customs; C. C. James, chief advisor on all agricultural matters to Hon. Martin Burrell, and R. H. Coats, chief statistician of the Labor Department. Although the commission is a departmental one it is given the widest possible scope.

Mr. McDougal is perhaps the greatest authority in the Dominion on the tariff, and its relation to prices. C. C. James will bring to bear a ripe experience in all matters pertaining to agriculture and has already made an exhaustive study of the causes underlying the movement from the land, the falling off in the production of foodstuffs and other matters which are supposed to contribute to a dear dinner table.

Mr. Coats is Canada's foremost expert on the cost of living and as chief statistician of the Department of Labor he has been enquiring into high prices for years and has written much upon the subject that has been widely quoted in economic journals in England and the United States.

The commission will get down to work immediately as the Government is desirous of having a report placed in its hands as soon as possible.

BABY GIRL ESCAPED

Runaway Horses Passed on Both Sides of Tot

HAMILTON, Dec. 19.—Traffic on East Barton street was demoralized for a few seconds yesterday afternoon while a runaway team dragged one of Ewing's bread wagons from Ottawa street to Leeming street at breakneck speed. Several narrow escapes were recorded as a result, the closest being that of a little tot at the corner of Lottridge street. An eye-witness saw the maddened horses race, one on either side of the baby girl, all unconscious of her danger. Her escape was nothing short of miraculous. The horses were stopped in an exhausted condition at Leeming street without injury to themselves or the people whose lives were jeopardised.

To clarify fat which has become dark, put it in an enameled saucepan with water and half a teaspoonful of carbonate of soda. Boil for 25 minutes, cool and drain off the water.

SKY CLEARING

Mexican Situation is More Favorable, Say Officials.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19.—State Department officials expressed the opinion that conditions in Mexico to-day were "more favorable." No intimation was given as to the nature of changes in the situation regarded as indicating improvement. Much interest is manifested here in the cyclonic disturbances in the finances of Mexico, involving the failure of banks and the issue of currency without security regarded as substantial.

The opinion was expressed in some quarters that the Huerta Government might receive financial support from the large land and mine owners in northern Mexico, who have heretofore been supposed to occupy an attitude of neutrality as between the contending factions, but who may now adopt allegiance to the Huerta cause as a result of the confiscation of their properties of Gen. Villa, the rebel leader.

U. S. Warships Only Left.

VERA CRUZ, Dec. 19.—The British flagship Suffolk and the German cruiser Bremen returned yesterday from Tampico, leaving only American warships at Tampico.

BOATS FOR ALL.

International Committee Decides On That as Basic Principle for Liners.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The committee on life-saving appliances appointed by the international congress on safety at sea have agreed on their recommendations, which will be submitted to the congress early in January. The principle of "boats for all" has been accepted, subject to the proviso proposed by the British delegates, that where the fullest use is made of the space available for the fittings of davits, pontoon rafts may be provided for 25 per cent. of those aboard, and lifeboats of a recognized type for the remainder. The lifeboats may include a limited number of motor-boats.

Another Clue Found.

BRIDGETON, Maine, Dec. 19.—Mrs. Cecil F. Lavell, whose husband, a professor of history at the Ohio State University, disappeared on Nov 26, received information while searching for him yesterday that a man answering his description was seen recently on the campus of the University of Maine at Orono.

Prof. A. L. Leonard of Bates College, where Prof. Lavell formerly taught, telephoned Mrs. Lavell that the man told a University of Maine student with whom he talked that he was from Ohio University.

Export Tax on Foxes.

REGINA, Dec. 19.—To discourage exportation from Saskatchewan of foxes, provision is made in a bill, introduced in the Legislature by Hon. W. R. Motherwell, for the imposition of a tax of $100 for every animal that is shipped from the province.

During the past few years many thousands of dollars' worth of black foxes and the rare silver foxes have been sent out of Saskatchewan to breeding farms in the east.

KARLUK'S CREW IN PERIL?

Northerners Think Arctic Exploration Craft Is Too Frail for Ice.

SEATTLE, Wash., Dec. 19.—Captain Louis Lane of the power schooner Polar Bear, which is frozen in the Arctic Ocean near Flaxman Island, arrived from Valdes by steamer yesterday, accompanied by Eben Draper of Boston, son of ex-Governor Draper of Massachusetts; Dunbar Lockwood also of Boston, and William T. Hudson, a newspaper photographer.

The men walked from the Arctic shore to Circle City, Fairbanks and Valdes.

George Silby and John Heard, sportsmen, of Boston, and Samuel Mixter, W. Sprague Brooks and Joe Dickson, scientific collectors, remained on the vessel. The hunters and scientists have had a wonderful season for big game. They might have come out with the Lane party, but preferred to remain and obtain polar bear and musk ox.

Captain Pederson, captain of the schooner Elvira, which was crushed by the Arctic ice, and who walked from the Arctic Ocean to Valdez, also arrived from the north yesterday.

The travelers had no further news of Stefansson's ship Karluk later than that cabled by Stefansson himself, who is ashore and making his way to Herschel Island. The prevailing opinion in the north, according to Captain Lane and Pederson, is that Captain Bartlet and the men on the Karluk are in grave peril because of the fragile construction of their ship which at last accounts was drifting in the ice pack.

Shoots Nine Days' Bride.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., Dec. 19.—John F. Conrad, aged 31, a salesman for a local fish company, shot and fatally wounded Mrs. Catherine Conard, 19 years old, his bride of nine days at their apartment.

After the shooting, Conrad sat at a writing desk and wrote to his mother, who lives in Toledo, O., the story of the crime while waiting for the police.

Conrad told the police he shot his wife because she had threatened to leave him.

United Hatters Lose.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—The United States Court of Appeals yesterday decided the famous Danbury Hatters case in favor of D. E. Loewe & Co. the plaintiffs and against the United Hatters of North America. The court affirmed a judgment in favor of Mr. Lowe and against the hatters organization for $252,250. With interest and costs the judgment now amounts to $272,000. At the first trial, held in 1909, the plaintiffs obtained a judgment for $222,240.

Cardinal's Last Testament.

ROME, Dec. 19.—The coffin containing the body of Cardinal Rampolla was closed yesterday with the solemn ceremonial of the Sacred College. A testament was found dated 1889, but intimates of the late cardinal profess to know of the existence of a will dated some years later. In fact, the cardinal left a small key with a label on which was written, "This opens the black case containing my last will." The case, however, has not been found.

Wilson Examines New Project.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 19. — Postmaster-General Burleson's declaration for the principle of Government ownership of telegraphs and telephones, as outlined in his annual report just made public, undoubtedly will be followed by a Democratic caucus in the House in January which will decide how far the project is to be made an administration policy in Congress.

President Wilson is giving the project careful study, and administration supporters say has not pressed it upon Congress at this time because of the enormous expense involved. A preliminary move will be congressional authorization to the Postmaster-General to make a report on the feasibility of acquiring the lines for a Government monopoly.

Carried Too Much Light.

NEW YORK, Dec. 19.—Many motorists have been fined here for failure to provide their cars with lights, but the first penalty for carrying too much light was imposed by a police magistrate yesterday. Clifford Schaufel, the owner of the car, was fined $10 under a new law, which forbids motorists to show lights bright enough to dazzle traffic. To determine whether Schaufel's lamps violated the law the magistrate held court Wednesday night on a street corner and had the defendant drive past.

Bedford Sells More Land.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—The Duke of Bedford, whose Covent Garden estate was disposed of recently, has sold another site, on Gower street, Bloomsbury. The national committee, which has in charge the erection of the Shakespeare Memorial Theatre, is the purchaser. The price paid was $200,000.

MASQUERADED AS TWO YOUTHS

English Girls Passed as Telegraph Messengers.

OTTAWA, Dec. 19.—Elsie Whitman and Margaret Johnson, known until arrested Wednesday night as "Jack" Whitmar and "Roy" Johnson, respectively, who had for about a month masqueraded as C.P.R. telegraph boys, and who for some weeks prior to that worked in J. R. Booth's mills, yesterday told the story of their escapades. One of the girls was detected by a Dominion policeman while delivering a telegram and confessed the scheme. The arrest of the other followed at the C.P.A. telegraph office later.

Their case is one of the strangest ever experienced in Canadian police circles, the remarkable fact being that they have passed as boys in the business centre of Ottawa since Oct. 28, when they came from Montreal. They are both English girls, aged respectively 27 and 24.

An Adventurous Life.

That remarkable novelist, Mr. Joseph Conrad, who now receives a well-deserved pension from the English Civil List, is a Pole by birth. He was born in 1857, his father being a well-known poet and critic and the proprietor of a review in Warsaw. As the elder Conrad was an ardent patriot, he came under the notice of the Russian Government and was arrested just before the Polish rising of 1861. Various members of the Conrad family were concerned in this rising, and the novelist's mother was banished to Siberia.

Mr. Joseph Conrad was educated in Cracow, and in his youth followed the sea. His first voyage was made on an English trading vessel and in this manner he acquired a knowledge of the English language. He stuck to the sea for many years and qualified as a master in 1884 becoming at the same time a naturalized British subject. About ten years later he wrote his first novel, "Almayer's Folly," and though it did not secure many readers, the literary critics were kind, and Mr. Conrad resolved to adopt writings as a profession.

Mr. Conrad writes English with a rare sense of style and beauty, so that it is a surprise to many of his admiring readers to learn that he is employing a language which he did not acquire until after boyhood.

TWO RAILWAYS COMPLY.

C.P.R. and G.T.R. Will Acceed to Demands of Merchants.

MONTREAL, Dec. 19.—An official statement issued by Vice-President Bosworth of the C.P.R. yesterday, in connection with the railway cartage question here, states that "in view of the urgent demands of merchants in different sections of the country, and their voluntary offer through Boards of Trade to pay the exact cost of cartage, the Canadian Pacific Railway has decided to continue the present cartage arrangements until further notice."

A similar statement was given by Vice-President Dalrymple of the Grand Trunk. Mr. Dalrymple stated that the representations of the merchants had been urgent, and that in view of their willingness to pay the costs the railway had been able to see its way clear to continue the service.

It is expected that the Canadian Northern and the Intercolonial will fall in line, though in the absence of Guy Thomas and R. E. Perry, general freight agents of the C.N.R. and the I.C.R., respectively, statements from them could not be obtained beyond the fact that those lines are considering the matter.

Killed at American Soo.

CORNWALL, Dec. 19.—News has been received of the death of Edwin Myers of Sault Ste. Marie, Mich. He was engaged on the railway, and, owing to a dense fog, was caught between two cars and instantly killed. Mr. Myers was a son of the late Wm. Myers of Eamer's Corners, and was 46 years of age. He left here for Michigan 22 years ago. A widow and three small children survive.

Portland Choked With Grain.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 18.—More than 3,000,000 bushels of grain is held for shipment from this port. The greater portion of it will be sent to Europe within two weeks. One railroad is said to have refused to accept any more grain from lake ports until part of the amount now here has been exported.

Rate War Imminent.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—According to The Liverpool Journal of Commerce, a severe Atlantic rate war is imminent. All the British and continental lines are preparing to meet the Hamburg-American's cut in rates, and there is a prospect that the pooling agreement will not be renewed in January.

PRISON WALL BLOWN UP

Suffragettes Use Bombs in Attempt to Free Colleague.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—An attempt, attributed to suffragettes, was made last night to blow up part of the southeast wall of Holloway Jail by the explosion of two bombs. These are believed to have been secreted in the garden of a house adjoining the jail. The part of the wall attacked was near the cells in which suffragettes are usually confined.

Miss Rachel Peace, who is undergoing a term of eighteen months' imprisonment for arson, is the only suffragette at present in the jail. It is alleged that she has been subjected to forcible feeding, and at recent militant meetings angry references were made to her treatment, coupled with threats of revenge.

The explosion did no damage to the jail, but the surrounding high wall where it abuts on the garden at No. 12 Dalmeny avenue was so badly damaged that it will need rebuilding.

No arrests have been made, and apparently there are no clues to the culprits, but it is said that the house had been occupied recently by a Mrs Patey, an ardent militant, and has been utilized as a rendezvous for suffragettes to signal to the inmates of the prison.

The force of the explosion shattered some of the windows in the neighborhood.

New Judicial District Asked.

COCHRANE, Dec. 19.—The Ontario Government will be asked by the Board of Trade to divide the present Timiskaming judicial district and create a new one, to be known as the northern judicial district. There is a population of 15,000 between Cochrane and Swastika, and there are another 15,000 east and west along the Transcontinental Railway. The population along the T.C.R., it was anticipated, would increase to 20,000 in the course of a year.

All British Exhibition Endorsed.

LONDON, Dec. 19.—A large representative gathering, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, yesterday cordially endorsed Lord Strathcona's proposal for a huge all-British exhibition at the Crystal Palace in 1915.

Speakers supporting the proposal included the president of the London Chamber of Commerce and several agents-general for the other Dominions.

SAFEGUARD THE PUBLIC

Otonabee Council Ask for an Overhead Bridge

At the meeting this week of the Otonabee township council, the Reeve and clerk were authorized to sign a lease from the Township to the trustees of Stewart Memorial Church, leasing for a term of twenty years, part of the road allowance for a horse shed site.

Miss Annie Sinclair was granted $5 per quarter on condition that the Foley Estate pay $10 per quarter.

Messrs. Anderson and Deyell were authorised to have a railing erected on the dangerous part of the approach to the Wallace Point bridge. Mr. John Laing was present and stated that he had been corresponding with the Board of Railway Commissioners, to take steps to have the G. T. R. safeguard the travelling public at the very dangerous crossing on the sixth line, near Keene station. He had a communication from the Commissioners stating that the Board had ordered the G. T. R. to install within sixty days, an electric bell. Mr. Laing was of the opinion that an overhead road bridge would serve the purpose much better, than a bell and he requested the Council to urge that this work be done.

A resolution was passed instructing the clerk to write the Board, urging the overhead bridge.

The following deputy returning officers and poll clerks were appointed: J. Hastie, W. O'Leary, A. Shearer, T. A. Essin, T. E. Sargent, J. A. Drummond, Geo. Robertson, A. Gillespie, W. H. Boreland, Jas. McFarlane, R. Knox, S. M. Comrie, W. C. Howson and Fred Stewart.

DARING ROBBERIES.

The Dodges of Pearl and Diamond Thieves In London.

There is no more daring robber than the man who makes jewels his speciality, as the recent theft of a pearl necklace, of which the selling price was fixed at £150,000, while in transit between Paris and London, goes to prove. In this case a package, dispatched by registered post, containing the pearls, arrived in London on July 16th last with only neatly-arranged pieces of French sugar and some sawdust in it. The thief must have extracted the pearls after the parcel containing them had been posted in Paris and before it was delivered to Mr. Max Mayer, the owner, at Hatton Garden.

Probably Hatton Garden has been the scene of more jewel robberies than any other thoroughfare in London. On one occasion a traveler in the employ of a large diamond firm drove in a four-wheeled cab to a house in the Garden. When entering the building he left within the vehicle two large black handbags containing jewelry. Presently a lad in the uniform of a messenger walked up to the cab, and, remarking to the driver that his fare would be out in a few minutes, entered the house. That was the last seen of him, and the bags were never recovered. The lad had got safely away with 400 gold bracelets, 500 gold Gohu brooches, and a few sundry articles of other jewelry, the whole having a market value exceeding £15,000.

In September, 1894, over £20,000 worth of diamonds were stolen from Mr. Spyzer, of Antwerp. He was standing alone in an office at 70 Hatton Garden, when he was suddenly attacked from behind and overpowered by a handkerchief, soaked in chloroform, being pressed over his nostrils. When he recovered consciousness he discovered that the bags containing his jewels were gone. The thief or thieves left no clue whatever behind them.

One night in December, 1874, Lord and Lady Dudley drove up to Paddington Station followed by a cab conveying two servants who had charge of her ladyship's jewel-case. The servants alighted from the cab and placed the box on the pavement while they paid the driver. When they turned to pick up the box they found it had vanished. Although a reward of £1,000 was offered for any information that would lead to the recovery of the jewels or part thereof, no trace of them has since been discovered.

Painful Experience.

"After I had written 'The Wake of the Sun' I sold it for $250," writes Mr. Morley Roberts in "The Private Life of Henry Maitland." "When this bargain was finally struck Mr. Jones Brown said to me, 'Now, Mr. R., as the business is all done, would you mind telling me quite frankly to what extent this book of yours is true?' I replied, 'It is as true in every detail as it can possibly be.' 'Then you meant to say,' he asked, 'that you actually did starve as you relate?' I said, 'Certainly I did, and might have made it a deal blacker if I had chosen!' He fell into a momentary reverie and, shaking his head, murmured, 'Ah, hunger is a dreadful thing—I've went without dinner myself!'"

NEW HIGH RECORD MADE BY ROYAL BANK

Fiscal Year Marked by Steady Progress—Bank Maintains Itself in Strong Financial Position.

Montreal, Dec. 19.—Special.—The business of the Royal Bank of Canada reached a new high record in the year ended on November 29th last, as shown in the forty-fourth annual financial statement, just issued. During the period mentioned, the profits crossed the two-million-dollar mark, reaching a total of $2,142,100.22, after deducting all charges of management and other expenses, accrued interest on deposits, full provision for bad and doubtful debts and rebate of interest on unmatured bills.

The profits for the year, together with the $610,219.36 brought forward in profit and loss account at the beginning of the year just ended, made a total of $2,752,319.58 from which to meet the dividends and appropriations. These were as follows:

Four dividends at the rate of 12 per cent. per annum	$1,387,200
Transferred to Officers' Pension Fund	100,000
Written off Bank Premises Account	250,000

This total of $1,737,200 being deducted from the sum at the disposal of the bank, left a balance of $1,015,119.58 in the profit and loss account at the end of the year. The net result of the year, therefore, is that the profit and loss account has been increased by $404,900.22 after all deductions for expenses, dividends and appropriations have been made.

Growth of Year.

Deposits bearing interest are well above the hundred-million-dollar mark, being $101,900,790.87. When this is added to the sum of $36,276,871.60 on deposit, but not bearing interest, total deposits of $138,177,662.47 are reached.

An interesting comparison in the liabilities to shareholders is seen in the fact that as against a paid-up capital of $11,560,000, the Reserve Fund of the Royal Bank is $12,560,000, or just $1,000,000 in excess; or if the profit and loss fund be added to the reserve, the total becomes $13,575,119.

Call loans reached a total of about $19,819,600, of which $10,817,496 was elsewhere than in Canada, the balance of $9,002,193 being on call in Canada. The current loans, however, amounted to no less than $98,606,925, and in addition to this was the sum of $3,686,624 loaned to cities, municipalities and school districts and $247,435 to Provincial Governments, making total loans of $102,716,658.68. Altogether, the assets of the bank now reach the large total of $180,246,785.73. These assets have been mounting up from year to year in a manner which must give much satisfaction both to the management and the shareholders and places the Bank in an exceptionally favorable position to meet the growing commercial requirements of the country.

For something a little different we now hear a great hue and cry about the high cost of holiday gifts.

A PRICELESS SECRET.

British Navy Sole Possessor of Precious Wireless Rejector.

It is the common belief nowadays that the nation which possesses the largest ships, and the finest and most deadly guns, is the nation which would emerge victorious from a modern naval war.

To a certain degree this is true, but the part that is played by more recent inventions than either guns or ships must not be lost sight of, for in the light of modern discovery a great naval battle might, to a certain extent, be decided before the opposing fleets had sighted each other's mastheads.

To the average Britisher whose knowledge of naval matters does not extend beyond stereotyped Admiralty or newspaper reports this will at once sound ludicrous; but does the man in the street realize to what a degree the game of "bluff" can be carried on by one of the most, apparently, harmless or modern inventions—wireless telegraphy.

In the same way that our navy has the finest guns, the most perfect method of preserving the explosive properties of ammunition, and the fastest ships, it is fitted with the most perfect wireless system in the world. This would at first seem improbable, in view of the fact that Germany, Japan, France, and all other great powers have the Marconi system, and use the Morse code.

But Britain's supremacy in wireless is assured by what is known to her wireless experts as the "rejector," the properties of which as the name would suggest, are to reject all messages, or otherwaves, which are not meant for the British fleet.

By this simple contrivance the once-possible trick of breaking up our fleet's messages is obviated, while, on the other hand, an English operator, having once "tuned" his instrument to the current of an opposing vessel, is able to play havoc with all its communications, and indeed, in most cases, would be able to render a fleet's wireless perfectly useless.

An interesting illustration of the "bluff" it is possible to make use of by the possession of this little invention can be found in the fact that at the recent Irish Sea manoeuvres an up-to-date torpedo-boat destroyer, lying off the northeast coast of Ireland was able to completely break up the messages of two battleships which were not using the "rejector," and to render their wireless quite useless, while they were totally incapable of marking any effect upon the little craft's signalling apparatus with its valuable attachment.

It is needless to remark that the "rejector," which is encased in a very insignificant box in our battleships' wireless houses, is an invention which constitutes one of the most zealously-guarded secrets of the British Sea Lords.

How to Wear Scotch Kilt.

Lord Lovat, Lord Seafield, the Mackintosh of Mackintosh, Lochiel (Mr. Cameron of Lochiel), and others, have assisted the Inverness Kilt Society in drawing up rules for the correct wearing of Highland dress. They state:

The kilt is to touch the centre of the knee cap in front and great care must be taken that the kilt is not lower on one side than the other. The lower part of the belted plaid is exactly to reach to the bottom of the kilt. The hose are to be worn one inch higher than the centre of the calf of the leg (a good guide is to get the top of the hose just below the small bone on the outside of the leg, below the knee cap). There should be about the breadth of the hand between the top of the hose and the bottom of the kilt."

A LOCAL FARMER'S VIEWS ON THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

To the Editor of the Review.

Sir,—The cry of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, that we have to-day the dearest food we ever had. In his sympathetic appeal to the people of Hamilton the other day, and his hint that to open the markets of the world, to agricultural products—not to the manufacturers— would immediately solve the great problem of the high cost of living. Sir Wilfrid forgot to tell the city men where they were going to get the money to pay for these goods. The only thing we have to offer now that will be expected as exchange in the markets of the world is the products of the land. But probably he expected we might be able to borrow the money from England. That's got to be the fad nowadays. This kind of rot is only increasing the resentment of the people against both political parties. The merchant in town knows well that the money paid to foreigners will never come back to his grocery or clothing store to be spent, nor will it ever drift into the banks and help to make cheap money. Isn't it time for us to boil down the facts of the case and talk sense? It's an understood thing that the people in this country don't take up a life work for sentiment, or for the glory. It's for the dollars that is in it. So as long as you don't see the farmers buying touring cars, or building cottages at the lakes, but rather see them flocking to town, you can easily be convinced that that is not where the money's going. We know agricultural products have gone up, and why? Is it because the laboring and professional classes have got so many marvelous increases in their pay cheques these last few years?

Strange you don't see these people flocking to the furrier's to purchase their mink and silver fox fur sets for Christmas. So it can't be there. Then comes the middle man, he gets his share of abuse. How is this? Because he belongs to the middle or working classes like all the rest and so his interests are of no account, either to governments or to the press, at the present time. Sure if it's the middle man that is getting all the money, we can all get into that business. It's easy to become a grocer or a huckster.

Is not this attempt on the part of the press and the leader of political parties one of unparalleled and cynical effrontery to place the responsibility of the cost of living on the farmer and the working classes, knowing all the while that it is the capitalist that is at the bottom of the whole thing. The fact is that our policy makers, and our government influencers are capitalists and just naturally are keeping this side of the question in the dark.

With our gradual improving methods of manufacturing and our labor saving machinery on the farm, our working classes both in town and country should be finding it easier year by year to make a living. And so they would if it wasn't for the rake-off or rake-on that capital is making while their productions are passing through the channels of exchange from the producers to the ultimate consumers. It's hard to discuss these questions intelligently on one sheet of note paper. About as hard as attempting to write the Lord's Prayer on a five cent piece, you haven't breathing room, but the editor says that if I don't I shall have to take a header for the waste-paper basket. So adieu for the present.

PICKED UP BY THE TRAIN CREW

John Ryan Must Now Leave for the Tall Timbers.

John Ryan, a husky backwoodsman on his appearance at this morning's session of Police Court, was requested to leave the city for his native hills, the tall timbers as he mentioned he had no home except that he always worked in the woods.

Ryan was picked up along the G. T. R., about seven miles from the city last night. It transpires according to the memory of the man, that he bought a ticket at Lindsay for Peterborough. About seven miles out from the city, the train stopped for some reason, and shortly afterwards the passenger was missed. The next train crew was informed of the mystery and on their finding the lost one, he was brought to the city and locked up.

RAZOR WAS USED IN AN ALTERCATION

Wife is in Hospital and Husband is in Jail.

Louis Bourbonais appeared in Police Court this morning on the charge of assaulting his wife with intent to cut her throat by the means of a razor. He pleaded not guilty and was remanded a week.

The prisoner when arrested by Constable Patterson, Reid and Phymster this morning about one o'clock merely remarked that he and his wife had a row and during the melee she had cut her hand with the razor. The razor was found in the house in a shattered condition as if a terrific struggle had ensued.

The wife was taken in charge by Dr. Amys who had her removed to the St. Joseph's Hospital, where her injured hand was treated.

The five children during the absence of the parents will be looked after by the Salvation Army.

NO CASES OF WHITE SLAVERY IN THIS CITY

That the city of Peterboro is free from the so-called white slavery and also that nine-tenths of the people of the city are not aware of the meaning of white slavery in the right sense, was the statement advanced to the reporters by Adjutant McElheney at the close of this morning's Police Court session. Chief Thompson also expressed the same opinion. The topic was brought about in regard to an item published by a local paper last night in regard to a local party who was reported to be connected in a white slavery case in which the victim is supposed to be a local girl residing in the west end of the city.

Chief Thompson is in full particulars of this case and he says the statements made are not correct.

The mentioning of this case brought about the other topic and as a reult some very deplorable facts were stated by the Army Officer who is in a position to have a keen look-out in these matters. Already the Officer has taken action in a few cases where young girls have been mislead, but even with this deplorable condition existing there is no white slavery in the city he says.

Asked what he thought of the agitation that is on at present in the cry for the protection of the young girls, Adjutant McElheney remarked that with all their hearts in the work these people were up against it, as they were not in touch with the work and therefore were not able to deal with the cases. The majority of them would hold up their hands in holy terror if the poor girl who has ben mislead had to be removed to their home.

LABOR AND LIBERALISM

Toronto Star Replies to Mr. J. H. Burnham.

Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P., in a letter to the Peterboro Review, claims that the present troubles between the Liberal and Labor parties in Great Britain are due to the Liberal policy of free trade, which exposes British workmen to competition from all corners of the earth.

How Mr. Burnham can, in a signed and voluntary letter, commit himself to this view, it is not easy to understand. In the two general elections of 1910 there were many constituencies in which Unionist candidates won as against Liberal and Labor opponents. In bye-elections the same division in the ranks occurred over and over again. In these cases there was friction between the local leaders, neither party would give way to the other, with the result that both endured defeat.

No question of fiscal policy enters into these differences. Engaged in important reforms the Liberal party has its hands full, while the Labor party, helping these reforms, grows impatient for greater progress in measures more particularly its own. The arrest of Larkin while Carson talked at will, the attitude of the Government towards strikes, actual and threatened—these are the causes of such differences as have arisen.—Torono Star.

ESTABLISHED 1879 PETERBOROUGH, ONT., FRIDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1913. PRICE 2 CENTS

The Largest Grain Elevator in the World

Is there anything more significant of the growth of Western Canada than the efforts being put forth by the great transportation companies to take adequate care of the country's products?

In 1911 the first section of the largest grain-handling terminal in the world was completed by the Grand Trunk System at Fort William, Ont. The capacity of this section was 3,500,000 bushels, and the second section of this mammoth grain bin has just been completed, making the total capacity 5,700,000 bushels. This in itself is a world's work, but when it is considered that the ultimate storage capacity of the elevator will be over six and one-half times its present size, does it not speak volumes for the growth of the country and the country's industry? The Grand Trunk has in addition to this the greatest of all elevators, two hundred and twenty-eight smaller ones, scattered along the line of the Grand Trunk Pacific in the Provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

RECOMMENDATIONS ON GOOD ROADS DRAFTED BY DOMINION GRANGE

Farmers in Session in Toronto Favor Municipal Control of Highways and Increased Taxation of Railways and Auto-Owners!

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—The session of the Dominion Grange yesterday was taken up chiefly with resolutions—several of which were passed without discussion.

A committee was formed to draft a scheme for the best method of improving the roads. The committee submitted the following report which was adopted: "That there should be municipal control of construction and maintenance of highways, subject to regulations by the Public Works Department; that expenditure should be controlled by a commission appointed by the municipalities concerned; that the Provincial Government provides 50 per cent. of the necessary funds by increasing the tax on railways and taxing automobiles according to their horsepower; that cities and towns separated from counties be required to pay 15 per cent of the cost of construction and maintenance; that the balance of the money required be supplied by the municipalities through which the roads pass and the cities, town and villages to which they lead; that federal aid be allotted to municipalities on the basis of assessed values."

An affiliation of the various farmers' associations throughout the province with the Dominion Grange will probably result from the present meeting. A resolution was passed favoring the organization of a co-operative association, and a committee was appointed to advance the project.

The tariff question was dealt with in the following resolution:

"That the protective tariff as it now exists and as it had stood for many years places an unfair burden upon the farming industry for the benefit of the manufacturing industries; that these facts are largely responsible for the conditions which are forcing population from the rural districts into from country to town has now reached urban centres and that this movement from country to town has now reached a point where rural depopulation threatens the whole national fabric, industrial, social, and political." Upon these premises it was resolved "That in justice to agriculture and in the interests of our national life it is imperative that the tariff be so adjusted as to remove in toto the burdens under which agriculture may be made more profitable and attractive and the balance between city and country be restored."

"We recommend a gradual increase of the British preference, such as will lead in a few years to complete free trade with the mother country. Besides serving the economic ends of this country, this would prove of inestimable value to Greater Britain and would best express our loyalty and devotion to the motherland."

Another resolution was "That the present system of Government has outgrown its usefulness, so that it no longer serves to express the will of the people, and it was recommended that the principle of direct legislation through the initiative and referendum be applied to all legislative processes."

On the naval question the following resolution was made: "That the people should be asked by a referendum to pronounce upon three choices — a direct contribution, a Canadian navy, or the maintenance of the present situation, and that the will of the people, as recorded by such referendum, should be followed."

The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted as follows: Master, W. C. Wood, Brantford; overseer, Col. J. Z. Fraser, Burford; secretary, J. J. Morrison, Arthur; lecturer, W. Anderson, Essex; chaplain, F. F. Bainard, Glanworth; steward, G. DeLeau, Essex; assistant steward, F. Pettypiece, Lambton; assistant lady steward, Miss H. Robinson, St. Thomas; gatekeeper, A. E. Manoe, Forest; Ceres, Miss Phelp, Whitby; executive committee, W. C. Wood, J. J. Morrison, W. Smith, W. E. Wardell and R. H. Halbert; educational committee, J. J. Morrison, E. C. Drury and H. Chapman; legislation committee, Col. Z. Fraser, J. McEwing and S. Fisher.

LIKE A HUMAN SPHINX.

Lord Knollys Is Known as the Most Tactful Man in Europe.

"Europe's most tactful man" is, by common consent, Viscount Knollys, first Baron of Caversham, who is now just seventy-six. For over forty years he was private secretary to British royalty, the friend and counselor of three monarchs, and his recent retirement was considered in court circles to be little less than a calamity.

It has been said of him that "no other man ever knew so much or said so little." The tribute is deserved, for Lord Knollys was always a human sphinx. Shrewd insight, unfailing tact and courtesy and the rare ability to hold his tongue enabled him to win and hold the esteem and respect of not only those he directly served, but of cabinet ministers, diplomats and the people at large. Only the reporters disliked him, for never a word were they able to get out of him.

It was in 1868 that Francis Knollys then merely a "Mr.," entered the service of royalty as gentleman usher to Queen Victoria. Two years later he was appointed private secretary to the Prince of Wales, later King Edward.—New York World.

A MODEST CANDIDATE.

He Uses the Movies to Show Himself in His Best Light.

A French politician who seeks election to the council of one of the departments has adopted a time and labor saving scheme to urge his claims on his constituents. Perhaps the Chinese praying machine inspired him.

Instead of haranguing the voters at election meetings he invites them to a cinematograph theater. There to the popular music one or two picture comedies are shown.

Then the candidate appears on the screen. He is seen addressing a meeting, shaking hands with the prefect and entering his motorcar. Another reel of film shows him helping an old woman to load her donkey with a bundle of wood, indignantly refusing a bribe and paying a visit to an old man stretched on a bed of illness.

In the last and most effective picture of the series the sympathetic candidate proves his heart is in the right place by discreetly slipping a banknote into the sick man's hand before bidding him au revoir.—Paris Cor. Washington Herald.

Ought to Know.

Manager—The critics say that in the play "A Wronged Wife" you do not exhibit enough emotion when your husband leaves you, never to return.

Popular Actress—Oh, I don't, don't I? Well, I've had two or three husbands leave me, never to return, and I guess I know as much about how to act in those circumstances as anybody.—London Tit-Bits.

The Smallest Golf Course.

What is probably the smallest golf course in existence is to be found on the May, the rocky islet which lies on the north side of the mouth of the Firth of Forth, some five miles south of Crail, on the coast of Fifeshire. The island is about a mile in length and two and one-half furlongs in breadth and has a surface of rather more than 100 acres, but as a large part of it is unplayable for one reason or another the course consists of only three holes. To make the "round" it is necessary to play the course six times. The distance between the holes, however, is considerable, and the links are decidedly difficult of negotiation. The best score is said to be seventy.—Pearson's Weekly.

Favoritism and Carelessness in Toronto School Department

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—The long-awaited report of Judge Winchester into the affairs of the Toronto Board of Education and its officials was presented last night. His honor in a severe arraignment of the business methods of the board, finds that matters had been allowed to drift for some years and that in the architect's department the members of the board had been constantly ignored with regard to the changing of specifications, ordering of alterations and extras and the settlement of accounts. Some tenderers also were favored in the carrying out of specifications. Proper books were not kept and the architect kept the accounts in his head.

As a means of preventing the carelessness which has cost the board large sums of money, his honor recommends the appointment of a business man as Commissioner of Buildings and that he appoint his own staff and keep a complete system of books.

After Carnegie Library.

COCHRANE, Dec. 19.—The town council proposes to establish a library here and will ask the citizens to vote on a bylaw to the effect that upon the contribution of $10,000 by the Carnegie Corporation of New York the council will contribute per annum towards maintenance.

TORONTO, Dec. 19.—While eating in Smalls' restaurant on West Queen street, last night, George Hope, 22 Portland street, was choked to death by a piece of meat which became lodged in his throat. The body was taken to the morgue and no inquest will be held.

Political Birds.

Wife (reading)—Isn't this funny, my dear? Here is an article which says they have found a new species of birds in Australia which have four legs. Now, whatever do you suppose they want four legs for?

An Erratic Echo.

The late Sir John Leng had traveled in most quarters of the globe. On one occasion when visiting Spain he was asked at a certain spot by a traveling companion to test the powers of what was declared to be a wonderful echo. Sir John, slowly and deliberately, in rounded tones uttered the words "Dun-dee Ad-ver-tis-er," the name of the paper he owned. "Dundee Courier and Argus," the name of the opposition paper, came back as the echo! Sir John's friends had played him a trick.

CHAPTER VIII.

THEY DRESS FOR DINNER.

BREITMANN watched them as long as he could. There was no jealousy in his heart, but there was bitterness, discontent, a savage self pillorying. He was genuinely sorry that this young woman was so pretty. Still, had she the graces of Calypso, he must have come. She would distract him, and he desired at that time distraction least of all diversions. Concentration and singleness of purpose—upon these two attributes practically hung his life. How strangely fate had stepped with him. What if there had not been that advertisement for a private secretary? How then should he have gained a footing in this house? Well, here he was, and speculation was of no value, save in a congratulatory sense. The fly in the amber was the presence of the young American. Fitzgerald, shrewd and clever, might stumble upon something. Well, till against that time!

"Pirates!" His laughter broke forth, not loudly, but deeply, fired by a broad and ready sense of humor—a perilous gift for a man who is seeking fine hazards. It was droll; it was even fantastic. To cruise about the world in search of pirate treasures, as if there remained a single isle, shore, promontory, known to have been the haunt of pirates which had not been dug up and dug up again. And here, under the very hand— He struck his palms. "Why not?"

He ran to the window. The sleek white yacht lay tugging at her cables like an eager hound in the leash. "Seaworthy from stem to stern. Why not? No better cloak than this. I may not make you a good secretary, admiral, but, the gods propitious, I can, if needs say must, take you treasure hunting. It will be a fine stroke. Is it possible that fortune begins to smile on me at last? Well, I have had the patience to wait. The hour has come, and fortune shall not find me laggard. It has been something to wait as I have, never to have spoken, never to have forgotten. They have even tried to drive me to crime. Wait, fools, wait!"

He drew his arms tightly over his heaving breast, for he was deeply moved, while over his face came that indefinable light which, at times, illuminates the countenance of a great man. It came and went, as a flash of lightning betrays the oncoming storm.

The chimney! His heart missed a beat. He had forgotten the chimney. The reaction affected him like a blow. A snarl twisted his mouth. What was the chimney to any other man? Only he of all men knew. And yet here was some one stealthily at work, forestalling him, knocking the bottom out of his great dream. There was nothing pleasant in the growing expression in his face. It was the tiger, waking. There could be only one way.

Swiftly he dashed to his trunk, knelt and examined the lock, unscrewed it and took out the documents more precious to him than the treasures of a hundred Captain Kidds. Instantly he returned to the window. Nothing was missing. But here was something he had never noticed before. On the face of the slip of parchment—a diagram, dim and faded—was an oily thumb mark. The oil from the lock, nothing more. Doubtless he himself had touched it. How many times had he found an unknown touch among his few belongings? How often had he smiled? Still, to quell all rising doubts, he rubbed his right thumb on the lock and made a second impression. The daylight was now insufficient, so he turned on the electricity and compared them. Slowly the scars deepened till they were the tint of cedar. Death's hand itself could not have fascinated him more than the dissimilarity of these two thumb prints. He said nothing, but a queer little strangling sound came through his lips.

Who? Where? His heart beat so violently that the veins in his throat swelled and threatened to burst. But he was no weakling. He summoned all his will. He must act and act at once, immediately. Fitzgerald? No, not that clever, idling fool. But who, who? He replaced the papers and the lock. A hidden menace. Question as he would there was never any answer.

He practiced the pleasant deceit that the first mark had been there when the diagram had been given to him. It was not possible that any one had discovered his hiding place. Had he not with his own hands contrived it, alone and without aid, under that accursed mansard roof? Not one of his coadventurers knew. They had advanced him funds on his word. His other documents they had seen. These had sufficed them. Still back it came with deadly insistence. Some one was digging at the bricks in the chimney. The drama was beginning to move. Had he waited too long?

Mechanically he proceeded to dress for dinner. Since he was to sit at the family table he must fit his dress and manners to the hour. He did not resist the sardonic smile as he put on his fresh patent leathers and his new dinner coat. He recalled Fitzgerald's half concealed glances of pity the last time they had dined together.

In the room across the corridor Fitzgerald was busy with a similar occupation. The only real worry he had was the doubt of his luggage arriving before he left. He had neither tennis clothes nor riding habit, and these two pastimes were here among the regular events of the day. The admiral both played and rode with his daughter. She was altogether too charming. Had she been an ordinary society girl he would have stayed his welcome threadbare perhaps; but, he repeated, she was not ordinary. She had evidently been brought up with few illusions. These she possessed would always be hers.

"So much for suppositions and analysis!" panted Fitzgerald, reknotting his silk tie. "As for me, I go to the arctic, cold, but safe. I have never fallen in love. I have enjoyed the society of many women, and to some I've been silly enough to write, but I have never been maudlin. I'm no fool. This is the place where it would be most likely to happen. Let us beat an orderly retreat. Now, my boy, you have given yourself due notice. Take care!"

He slipped his coat over his shoulders—and passably sturdy ones they were—and took a final look into the glass, not for vanity's sake. Sometimes a man's tie will show above the collar of his coat.

"H'm! I'll wager the trout are rising about this time." He imitated a cast which was supposed to land neatly in the corner. "Ha! Struck you that time, you beauty!" All of which proved to himself conclusively that he was in normal condition. "I should get a wire tomorrow about Breitmann. I hate to do anything that looks underhand, but he puzzles me. There was something about the chimney today. I don't know what. This is no place for him, nor for me either," was the shrewd supplement.

Laura tried on three gowns, to the very great surprise of her maid. Usually her mistress told her in the morning what to lay out for dinner. Here there were two fine looking young men about, and yet she was for selecting the simplest gown of the three. She was hardly conscious that they would notice this dress, whereas the gleaming satin would have passed as a matter of fact. Round her graceful throat she placed an Indian turquoise necklace; nothing in her hair, nothing on her fingers. She went downstairs perfectly content.

As she came into the hall she heard soft music. Some one was in the music room, which was just off the library. She stopped to listen. Chopin, with light touch and tender feeling. Which of the two wanderers was it? Quietly she moved along to the door. Breitmann; she rather expected to find him. Nearly all educated Germans played. The music stopped for a moment, then resumed. Another melody followed, a melody she had heard from one end of France to the other. She frowned, not with displeasure but with puzzlement. For what purpose did a soldier of the German empire play the battle hymn of the French republic? The Marseillaise! She entered the music room, and the low but vibrant chords ceased instantly. Breitmann had been playing these melodies standing. He turned quickly. When Fitzgerald joined them they were seriously discussing Wagner and his ill treatment in Munich and the mad king of Bavaria.

As she had planned, both men noticed the simplicity of her dress.

"It is because she doesn't care," thought Breitmann.

"It is because she knows we don't care," thought Fitzgerald. And he was nearer the truth than Breitmann.

The dinner was pleasant, and there was much talk of travel. The admiral had touched nearly every port, Fitzgerald had been round three times and Breitmann four. So far as the admiral was concerned, he was very well pleased with the new secretary.

* * * * * * *

Fitzgerald was not asleep. He had an idea, and he smoked his yellow African gourd pipe till this same idea shaped itself into the form of a resolve. He laid the pipe on the mantel, turned over the logs—for the nights were yet chill and a fire was a comfort—and raised a window. He would like to hear some of that tapping in the chimney. He was fully dressed, excepting that he had exchanged shoes for slippers.

He went out into the corridor. There was no light under Breitmann's door. So much the better. He was asleep. Fitzgerald crept down the stairs with the caution of a hunter who is trailing new game. As he arrived at the turn of the first landing he hesitated. He could hear the old clock striking off the seconds in the lower hall. He cupped his ear. By George! Joining the sharp monotony of the clock was another sound, softer, intermittent. He was certain that it came from the library. That door was never closed. Click-click! Click-click! The mystery was close at hand.

He moved forward. He wanted to get as close as possible to the fireplace. He peered in. The fire was all dead. Only the corner of a log glowed dully. Suddenly the glow died, only to reappear, unchanged. This phenomena could be due to one thing, a passing of something opaque. Fitzgerald had often seen this in camps when some one's legs passed between him and the fire. Some one else was in the room. With a light bound he leaped forward, to find himself locked in a pair of arms no less vigorous than his own.

And even in that lively moment he remembered that the sound in the chimney went on!

It was a quick, silent struggle. The intruder wore no shoes. It would be a test of endurance. Fitzgerald recalled some tricks he had learned in Japan, but even as he stretched out his arm to perform one the arm was caught by the wrist, while a second hand passed under his elbow.

"Don't!" he gasped slowly. "I'll give in." His arm would have snapped if he hadn't spoken.

A muttered oath in German. "Fitzgerald?" came the query in a whisper.

"Yes. Is this you, Breitmann?"

"Sh! Not so loud! What are you doing here?"

"And you?"

"Listen! It has stopped. He has heard our scuffling."

"It seems, then, that we are both here for the same purpose," said Fitzgerald, pulling down his cuffs and running his fingers round his collar.

"Yes; you came too late or too soon." Breitmann stooped and ran his hands over the rug.

The other saw him but dimly. "What's the matter?"

"I have lost one of my studs," with the frugal spirit of his mother's forebears. "You are stronger than I thought."

"Much obliged."

"It's a good thing you did not get that hold first. You'd have broken my arm."

"Wouldn't have given in, eh? I simply cried quits in order to start over again. There's no fair fighting in the dark, you know."

"Well, we have frightened him away. It is too bad."

"What have you on your feet?"

"Felt slippers."

"Are you afraid of the cold?"

A laugh. "Not I."

"Come with me."

"Where?"

"First to the cellar. Remember that hot air box from the furnace that backs the chimney way up?"

"I looked only at the bricks."

"We'll go and have a look at that box. It just occurred to me that there is a cellar window within two feet of that box."

"Let us hurry. Can you find the way?"

"I can try."

"But lights?"

Fitzgerald exhibited his electric pocket lamp. "This will do."

"You Americans!"

After some mistakes they found their way to the cellar. The window was closed, but not locked, and resting against the wall was a plank. It leaned obliquely, as if left in a hurry. Fitzgerald took it up and bridged between the box and the window ledge. Breitmann gave him a leg up, and in another moment he was examining the brick wall of the great chimney under a circular white patch of light. A dozen rows of bricks had been cleverly loosened. There were also evidences of chalk marks, something on the order of a diagram, but it was rather uncertain, as it had been redrawn four or five times. The man hadn't been sure of his ground.

"Can you see?" asked Fitzgerald.

"Yes." Only Breitmann himself knew what wild rage lay back of that monosyllable. He was sure now. That diagram brushed away any lingering doubt. The lock had been trifled with, but the man who had done the work had not been sure of his dimensions.

"Clever piece of work. Took away the mortar in his pockets. No sign of it here. The admiral had better send for his bricklayer for more reasons than one. There'll be a defective flue presently. Now, what is the duffer expecting to find?" Fitzgerald coolly turned the light full into the other's face.

"It is beyond me," with equal coolness, "unless there's a pirate's treasure behind there." The eyes blinked a little, which was but natural.

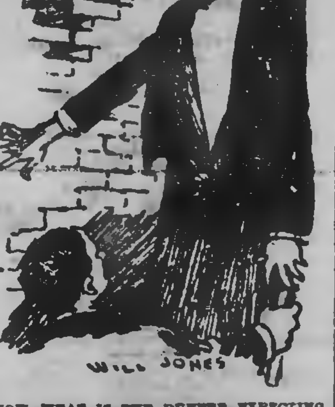
"Pirate's treasure, you say?" Fitzgerald laughed. "That would be a joke, eh?"

"What now?" For Breitmann thought it best to leave the initiative with his friend.

"A little run out to the stables," recalling to mind the rumor of the night before.

"The stables?"

"Why, surely. The fellow never got in here without some local assistance, and I am rather certain that this comes from the stables. Besides no one will be expecting us." He came down agilely.



"NOW, WHAT IS THE DUFFER EXPECTING TO FIND?"

Breitmann nodded approvingly at the ease with which the other made the descent. "It would be wiser to leave the cellar by the window," he suggested.

"My idea too. We'll make a step out of this board. The stars are bright enough." Fitzgerald climbed out first and then gave a hand to Breitmann.

"I understood there was a burglar alarm in the house."

"Yes, but this very window, being open, probably breaks the circuit. All cleverly planned. But I'm crazy to learn what he is looking for. Double your coat over your white shirt."

Breitmann was already proceeding with this task. A dog trot brought them into the roadway, but they kept to the grass. They were within a yard of the stable doors when a hound began howling. Breitmann smothered a laugh and Fitzgerald a curse.

"The quicker we get back to the cellar the better," was the former's observation.

CHAPTER IX.

THE METAL CASE.

THEY returned at a clip, scrambling into the cellar as quickly and silently as they could and made for the upper floors.

"Come into my room," said Fitzgerald; "it's only midnight."

Breitmann agreed. If he had any reluctance, he did not show it. Fitzgerald produced cigars.

"Do my clothes look anything like yours?" asked Breitmann dryly, striking a match.

"Possibly."

They looked themselves over for any real damage. There were no rents, but there were cobwebs on the wool and streaks of coal dust on the linen.

"We shall have to send our clothes to the village tailor. The admiral's valet might think it odd."

"Where do you suppose he comes from?"

"I don't care where. What's he after, to take all this trouble? Something big, I'll warrant."

And then, for a time, they smoked like Turks, in silence.

"You will not mind if I turn in? A bit sleepy," said Breitmann.

"Not at all. Shall we tell the admiral?"

"The first thing in the morning. Good night."

Fitzgerald finished his cigar and went to bed also. "Interesting old place," wadding a pillow under his ear. "More interesting tomorrow."

Some time earlier, the individual who was the cause of this nocturnal exploit hurried down the hill, nursing a pair of skinned palms and laughing gently to himself.

"Checkmate! I shall try the other way."

On the morrow, Fitzgerald recounted the adventure in a semihumorous fashion, making a brisk melodrama out of it, to the quiet amusement of his small audience.

COLOR SLANG.

All the Hues of the Rainbow Enter Into Catch Phrases.

There are many curiosities of language, but perhaps one of the most remarkable is the frequency with which the names of the colors appear in our common colloquial phrases. Slang is particularly rich in this respect; in fact, we might rightly describe it as highly-colored language.

The word "blue" enters into quite a number of slang expressions, the origin of which may be easily traced. When things have taken a wrong turn we are apt to complain of being "in the blues" or having a "fit of the blues." I do not know, but I believe drunkards see "blue devils" during an attack of the D.T.'s. "Bluebottle" as a polite name for a policeman has the distinguished authority of Shakespeare, who in the second part of "Henry VI.," calls the beadle a "bluebottle rogue."

The rest of the "blue" expressions are best exemplified in the paragraph, "A blue-blooded aristocrat swore till the air was blue. A blue-stocking, hearing such language, started blue murders. For once in a blue moon, the blue-blooded aristocrat was in a blue funk."

The word "black" is most frequently used to denote something bad. There is a suggestion of evil about the color. The workman, for example, who has drawn all his wages on account and has no money to take home at the end of the week, is said to have a "black Saturday" in the week. A "blackguard" is a black guard or an attendant on the devil. It is also thought to refer to a certain disreputable regiment nicknamed the "Black Guards" on account of their abominable practices. A "blackleg" was originally a man in the stocks. His legs were usually black and blue after the ordeal.

The word "white" is used in the phrases, "telling a white lie" and "showing the white feather." A "white lie" means a harmless one, white being the symbol of purity. The "white feather" implies cowardice, because when cockfights were fashionable, the more timid birds were recognized by a white feather in their tails. The white feather was evidence of cross-breeding.

A "brown study" means a reverie or period of mental abstraction. It has really nothing to do with the color brown, but is merely a modification of "brow-study." "To be done brown," refers either to "roasting brown," that is the finish, or to the last "brown" or half penny.

One who is easily deceived is said to be "green," because greenness is the usual condition of unripe fruits. The various passions to which mankind is susceptible, are said to bring their characteristic color to the face, and consequently we get such remarks as "green with envy," "yellow with jealousy," "purple with rage," and "white with anger." Similarly, we have the "pink of perfection" derived from the pink complexion of people in perfect health.

"Red tape" as a synonym for "officialism," arose from the fact that Government officials use red tape for binding together their papers and documents. A "red-letter" day is one that will be long remembered and refers especially to those days that were marked in red on the calendars because of their special importance.

Peculiar Indians In Peru.

Behind the black Cordilleras, so called because they are barren and have been without rain since 1868, lies a plateau with an elevation ranging from 13,000 to 16,000 feet, inhabited by the most peculiar tribe of Indians in Peru. A returned traveler says their chests are distended, because of the altitude, and claims that they cannot live in the lower altitudes. They are stolid, but good workers; harmless, but given to drink. They do not speak Spanish, having preserved their ancient tribal language.

Who Invented Chess?

The honor of inventing chess has been claimed by at least fourteen nations, and a variety of famous persons have been mentioned as sole inventor, ranging from Japheth and Shem to King Solomon and Aristotle. It is, however, generally agreed that Europe got the game from the Arabic, "checkmate," being a corruption of "Shah mat" ("the king is dead").—London Chronicle.

Ties Attached Between Rails Near Bridge, But Accident Was Averted.

ST. THOMAS, Dec. 18.—A mysterious attempt was made to wreck No. 91, a heavy G.T.R. Wabash freight, half a mile east of New Sarum, about eight miles from here, Tuesday midnight.

There is a bridge 125 feet high over Catfish Creek, and the track had been undermined and the ties taken out at a point six feet from the approach to the bridge. Two new ties had been placed with their ends under the rails, the other ends sticking up together between the rails in such a way that the westbound freight would be derailed.

There has been no trouble on the road and there are no suspicions as to the perpetrators. Detectives are working on the case.

CHRISTMAS APPEAL

FOR

The Hospital for Sick Children

COLLEGE ST., TORONTO

Dear Mr. Editor:—

Thanks for your kindness in allowing me the privilege of appealing at this Christmas time on behalf of the Hospital for Sick Children, Toronto.

It would take more space than you can spare to tell of the good work done for the sick and deformed children of this Province. Let me, however, in a few words, tell you of the progress of the work of the Hospital.

One nurse, six little white beds, a few dollars, a few friends—this was the beginning. The beds have grown to 250, the dollars to thousands, the friends to hundreds. 1875, the first year, 44 in-patients, 67 out-patients; 1913, last year, 1,648 in-patients, 25,587 out-patients; 1875, 1 nurse; 1913, 70 nurses.

Since 1875, thirty-eight years ago, the Hospital has admitted within its walls 21,018 children as in-patients, and 159,231 as out-patients, a total of 180,249, or an average of 4,743 per year. Of the 21,018 in-patients, 15,200 were from Toronto, and 5,818 from other parts of the Province; 10,150 of the total in-patients were cured, and 6,367 were improved.

In the Orthopedic Department last year, of the 1,648 in-patients, 278 were treated for deformities, 25 hip disease, 37 Pott's disease, 2 knock-knees, 19 bow-legs, 62 club feet, 8 lateral curvature of the spine, 44 infantile paralysis, 6 wry neck, and 75 tubercular disease of knee, hip and ankle. In 1913, the Surgical Apparatus Shop manufactured 437 appliances for in-patients and out-patients, including ankle braces, spinal braces, hip splints, bow-leg splints, club-feet splints, plaster jackets, etc.

In this Department in 38 years nearly 900 boys and girls have been treated for Club Feet and 650 corrected. Half of these came from places outside of Toronto. Surely we have a fair claim for help from the people of this Province.

Will you, the reader of this letter, help to give crippled children a fair start in life?

Busy dollars are better than idle tears. The sympathy that helps is good, but the Hospital has to have the sympathy that works.

While Christmas Bells are ringing to the glory of Him "Who made the lame to walk and the blind to see," give, give, give, and help the Hospital to help God's little ones, upon whom the heavy hand of affliction has been laid.

Will you please send a dollar, or more, if you can spare it, to Douglas Davidson, the Secretary-Treasurer of the Hospital, or

J. ROSS ROBERTSON,
Chairman of the Trustees, Toronto.

ADVERTISING

A STORE'S importance is rightly judged by its advertising. Not altogether by the size of the advertisement, but by size and tone, and quality of announcement.

What the store has to say is one thing. Quite as important is how it says it.

Given that the clerical force is competent and up-to-date, it will say, over the counter, the very best to be said in reference to the goods enquired for. It may, and should, suggest other goods, not in the customers view.

This implies that the customer is in the store. But what brings him or her there? The wish to buy and the belief it is a good place to buy at.

How is this learned of?

By advertising. The advertisement is a message, an intelligent middleman, doing service between seller and buyer. The space talks to thousands, even while the store is closed for the night.

Use The REVIEW and tell the story of your store and its opportunities for good service.

How the Army Regulations Were Adhered to and a Genius Secured For the Band

By ARTHUR TOWNSEND

"Do you play on any musical instrument?"

"No."

"Have no musical taste?"

"I don't know. I was born and have lived all my life in the heart of a forest, where no musical sound except the singing of the birds has ever reached my ears. But that I have always dearly loved. Why do you ask these questions?"

"Because if you could play upon the cornet or the flageolet or the trombone you might be permitted to live. As it is, your sentence will be carried out. What a pity that you have not some foundation for a musical training: I could in a few days coach you so that you might save yourself from being shot."

When the Spanish war broke out the news of it reached the wilderness in which I lived. Here was a chance to get out of the woods and into the world. I would enlist for a soldier. I would need no money. The government would clothe, feed and transport me, and all that would be required of me would be to be shot. And if those who shot at me missed me and continued to miss me till the war was over I would be taken care of till the next war, and if I lived through all the wars till I became an old man I would be laid on the shelf, but would be still taken care of.

This was the explanation given me by the recruiting officer, whom I found after a walk of sixty miles. Not caring to walk back again and remain out of the world I accepted the conditions to remain in the world till some enemy fired a shot that would give the government the best of the bargain. I was put into an infantry regiment, and an effort was made to knock some of the "green" out of me and turn me into a soldier. But the effort failed. I could not be disciplined and within a week after having been landed in Cuba I struck my captain, was tried for mutiny and sentenced to be shot.

There are two extremes in war. When an army is not in action there is enough red tape used to girdle the world, but when the real work begins there isn't any red tape at all. In the mixup that occurred after our landing, while many a good soldier lay dying on the battlefield, I, a mutineer, ill with malarial fever, was turned into the house of a Cuban farmer and was attended by his daughter, one of those dark haired, olive complexioned, long eyelashed daughters of equatorial regions who can't look at a man without falling in love with him.

It has required three times the talk to tell all these commonplace facts as the beginning of my story. It was Inez Gonzales, the farmer's daughter and my nurse, who regretted my want of musical training with which I might have saved my life by blowing a horn.

"A regiment encamped yesterday," she went on, "in a field across the road, and two of the men supped here this evening. One of them said that his cornet and his flageolet had been killed and his trombone was groaning under a bad wound. The colonel was very proud of the regimental band, and just as soon as the routine of army life recommenced he would notice that the music was not up to the mark and there would be the mischief to pay. The other suggested that musicians be obtained from the prisoners who had been captured from the enemy. The first man answered that he hadn't thought of it; he would try. If you were a musician he might put you into the band."

Here was a chance for life—a ghost of a chance, but still a chance. The only indication that I had enough music in me to avail myself of the opportunity was that I had loved the songs of birds. I asked Inez to go to the camp, find the bandmaster and tell him there was a man in her home who could play on any instrument; that he was ill, but convalescent, and with a couple of weeks' practice would be able to take his place in a band.

Inez told the story, and the bandmaster came over to see me. When I told him I was under sentence to be shot he was a bit discouraged, but said that if I was a first class cornet player he thought the colonel would have enough influence to get a commutation or something that would save my breath for the band. He went away and came back to say that he had seen the colonel and secured an order delaying my execution till it could be discovered whether I was a valuable musician. If so some way of defeating justice would be found by which I could be utilized. The colonel's pride in the band was such that he would shoot a dummy in my stead if necessary, only the army regulations must be faithfully adhered to. But my abilities must be tested before any change in the army situation should take place.

So there I was, not knowing a note of music, sick in bed and required to make a musician of myself immediately, for army situations are not lasting, and the present one was liable to be changed at any moment. I got busy at once, with my life the spur to drive me on. Inez, having taken a few lessons on the piano, had the wherewithal for a beginning. But there was no time to put on an instrument so unlike the one I was required to play, and Inez borrowed a flute. On this I made a beginning. It was better for the purpose than a cornet since it made less noise, and the bandmaster across the road couldn't bear me practicing.

Written music bothered me, but I made wonderful progress, playing whatever came into my head. I could not read music—at least could not learn to do so quickly enough for the purpose—but I could improvise, and what astonished Inez was that I could not only "make up" airs, but could play them with remarkable fervor.

All this developed within a few days, at the end of which time the bandmaster sent to learn if I was well enough to play for him. I replied that I would be very soon, but since I had not touched a musical instrument since the war began I would like to have him send me one on which I might get a little practice before submitting to a test. He sent me a cornet.

Fearing that he would hear my first efforts and learn of my ignorance of the art to which I pretended, I asked Inez to stuff the cracks in the windows of the room in which I lay, and I began my efforts under the bed. I made what headway I could in this disadvantageous way and in two days began to play on the bed instead of under it. Whether I was heard by the bandmaster or not I don't know, but if I was no word about it came to me. But so fearful was I of betraying my want of knowledge of the cornet that I dare not blow a full blast.

Every day I feared some change that would cut short my preparation, and it was carried on under the fear that at any moment the army law might be permitted to take its course. I was haunted by the expectation of being marched out at any moment, stood up before a file of soldiers and shot. So lugubrious were my feelings that my playing would have been much better fitted for a funeral march than the popular airs of the day.

One morning the bandmaster came to see me and told me that a candidate for cornet player in the band had appeared in the personage of a soldier in the ranks and, since he must have a man to fill the post as soon as possible, unless I was ready to stand a test he would have the other man transferred to the band. I begged him to wait a few days that I might get more strength, but he said the colonel was liable at any time to notice the deteriorated condition of the band and if he did it would be impossible to tell what he would do. This frightened me, and I consented to stand trial.

The next afternoon he brought a man to the house where I was lying. Inez saw them coming with a cornet and, pale as death, ran in to tell me. I was desperate. If I submitted to a trial of skill between myself and one who was familiar with the instrument I would doubtless show my inability as a cornet player; if I refused to submit the man would be appointed in my place and I would be shot.

"Let them come," I exclaimed. "I will blow a blast that will awaken the dead."

I knew that my room was no place for a test on a cornet and asked Inez to hand me my clothes. When the bandmaster arrived I was dressing and sent word to him that I would be out in a few minutes. Having finished my toilet, I muttered a prayer and staggered out on to a porch, where I dropped into a chair. The bandmaster told me and my rival that he would take into the band the better player of the two, and since I was weak and the other fellow was strong he would give me the advantage of playing after him.

My rival took the cornet carelessly. It did not appear that he was anxious to get into the band, and he did not make a special effort. He did not need to do so to beat me, though he did not know it. He played a selection from the overture to "Zampa," a favorite piece for cornet players to show their skill. He rendered it very well, and I could not have played it at all.

One of the few simple airs I had learned was "Home, Sweet Home." Taking the cornet from the bandmaster, I told him that I was not strong enough to give him anything displaying technique; I could only produce melody. I fixed my mind on the cabin where I knew my dear mother was daily thinking of me and on the scene of my expected execution. There were but few notes, but each note was expressive of my depth of feeling. Persons who were passing stopped to listen. I played the air through once, and all were absorbed. I played it a second time, and their eyes were wet. The third time every one within hearing was weeping.

"That's enough," said the bandmaster; "you're my man."

"Hold," I said; "the secret must come out in time! I can't play a note. I have simply learned this in the vain hope of saving my life."

"I don't care if you can't play the scale; there's more music in you than in my whole band. I'll make a musician of you, and when I do you'll be a wonder."

Inez's tears gushed afresh, and she clasped me in her arms.

My execution was got round in this way. A requisition was made on the quartermaster for a coffin. It was indorsed, "No coffin in my possession." The requisition having been referred to the colonel, he issued a special order that I was to be released from arrest till a coffin could be procured in which to bury me. The coffin was never procured, and I have never been buried. The army regulations were adhered to, and I have become a great musician. Inez is my wife.

A Case of Alibi

It Was Very Hard to Prove

By EDWARD L. WALKER

When the war between the states closed more than a million men ceased to be soldiers. A man may be theoretically turned from a soldier to a citizen by the stroke of a pen, but the effects of the life he has lived as a campaigner will cling to him. He can't understand why houses should be locked overnight, and yet the ordinary dangers incurred in cities bother him. The humdrum of civil life is irksome to him, and he pines again for the varied scenes of war.

Sergeant Charlie Young of the —th Pennsylvania volunteer cavalry, having been mustered out of the military service of the United States, finding civilized life tame, irksome and altogether unbearable, concluded to go to what was then called the great American desert. He persuaded ex-Corporal William Somers of the same regiment and company to go with him. What they were to do in that benighted land neither of them knew, but the visions that danced in rainbow hues in their imaginations were alluring.

There was one feature on which they did not calculate. While they were soldiers they had been clothed and fed by the government of the United States. Now they must clothe and feed themselves. They scraped together money enough to take them to "the plains," but when they got there they were obliged to shift for themselves. Then, and only then, their balloon collapsed.

A soldier is usually pictured by those who don't know him, except by his uniform and his arms, as a man of power. On the contrary, except to shoot and be shot at under the personal direction of his officers, he is as helpless as a child. Like a child, he will stuff himself with green apples unless caught in the act and prevented by his superior. He must be kept from straggling and the consequent danger of being killed or captured.

Our heroes, who had charged many a line of butternut Confederates without flinching, found themselves somewhere between Omaha and Denver without provisions or the wherewithal to buy the same. Somers broke down physically. Young, seeing a wagon train in the distance, left his friend on the plain, uncovered even by a tree, to head off the travelers and ask for assistance.

That was the last Somers saw of him for many a long day. Whether Young was obliged to go so far to reach the train that he could not find his way back to the point he had started from Somers didn't know. One thing he was sure of—Young had not intentionally deserted him. There was every reason to believe that Young, who had started but an hour before sunset, had on his return got caught in the darkness. But even in daylight it would be difficult for him to find his way to a point he could not see, for the country was a vast area marked by nothing. Even the Platte river, which runs through it, was barren of trees on its banks.

Somers passed a wretched night. Early the next morning a buffalo hunter, one of the last in the business, came along and, taking pity on the sick man, placed him on his horse and thus transported him to Julesburg, at that time the terminal of the Union Pacific railroad being built across the continent.

Six years passed. One day a long limbed man, bearing on his shoulder a pick and shovel, walked into a little mining town in the Rocky mountains. Passing a courthouse and seeing through an open door a person within evidently engaged in trying a case, the prospector, for such he was, entered and took a seat among the spectators, resting his pick and shovel on the floor and in the hollow of his arm.

A man was being tried for murder, and the prosecuting attorney was stating his case to the court:

"The last person, your honor, who was seen with the deceased was the prisoner. He came into town a stranger. No one in the place had seen him here before or knew anything about him. He was miserably dressed and in a generally rundown condition. He went directly to the home of Mathews, the murdered man. That was seven years ago, the spring of 1865. He took supper with Mathews and through a window was seen talking with him during the evening by a person whose evidence we shall produce. Another witness who lived next door is ready to swear that during the night he heard in the house in which the murder was committed cries of 'Help! Murder!' accompanied by other sounds such as would be uttered by one struggling with an enemy. Lastly, we shall prove that the prisoner is the identical man who stopped with Mathews that night and who disappeared as mysteriously as he had come."

Having thus announced what he intended to establish, he produced the witnesses he had promised. Three different persons who on that day preceding the murder had seen the stranger come into town and go to Mathews' house swore that the prisoner was the same person. They claimed that, notwithstanding a slight change in him, they would still know him if they had met him anywhere, because as soon as they were informed that he had committed a murder his image was impressed upon and since carried in their minds.

The prisoner's attorney seemed overwhelmed by this conclusive evidence and showed by his manner that he believed the prisoner guilty. When he had finished his effort the prisoner asked to be put on the stand in his own defense.

"I've spent the last four years, your honor," he said, "in New Mexico, having been a good deal of a wanderer since I came to this country; consequently I can't prove my identity. Besides, it wouldn't do any good to prove it, because the murderer had no identity. All I can say in my defense—and that I can't prove—is that in the spring of 1865, when this murder was committed, I was fighting for the United States in Virginia with Sheridan, who was cutting off the retreat of the Confederates. Quite likely I was engaged at Winchester at the very time the murder was committed. But I can only assert this. I have no way of proving it."

The jury and spectators were sympathizers with the Union cause and were affected by this defense. The prosecuting attorney in order to head off such sympathy arose and said:

"If the prisoner was really a soldier of the United States either he can produce his discharge papers or he was a deserter."

The prisoner's discharge papers were far away. Indeed, he had not seen them for years and didn't know where they were. He sat mute, not seeing any way to prove his innocence. The judge began his charge to the jury, virtually instructing them to find a verdict of guilty.

It was at this point that the man with the pick and shovel arose and said:

"Hello, Charlie!"

The prisoner looked at the speaker, but gave no sign of recognition.

"Did you strike that wagon train?" continued the man among the spectators.

"Who are you?" asked the prisoner.

"Bill Somers."

"Your honor," cried the prosecuting attorney, springing to his feet, "there is a game here to defeat justice. This fellow will doubtless identify the prisoner as an eminently respectable person."

"Nevertheless," retorted the prisoner's counsel, "I demand that if the man who calls himself Somers can throw any light on this case he be heard."

"Let the witness take the stand," said the judge.

Somers told the story of his and Young's coming west and how they had been separated on the plains; also that they had never met since that parting, that they had been soldiers in the same company at the close of the civil war and had fought shoulder to shoulder at the battle of Winchester.

"This is simply a made up story, your honor," the prosecuting attorney protested. "Neither of these men is known or has any proof of his identity. They are probably two horse thieves who have escaped the vigilance committees."

"If that man," said the witness, pointing to the prisoner, "is Charles Young, ex-sergeant of Company —, —th Pennsylvania volunteers, he has the scar of a minie ball that hit him in his side at the battle of Winchester."

"How do you know that?" asked the judge.

"Because I carried him off the field when he was struck."

"Pull up your shirt," said the judge to the prisoner.

The shirt was drawn up and the scar revealed.

The judge began again his charge to the jury, stating that an alibi had been proved and they were to acquit the prisoner. This they did before leaving their seats.

"What became of you, Charlie," asked Somers as they left the courtroom, "the day you left me on the plains?"

"I hunted two days for you, then concluded that some one had carried you away."

"You haven't had much luck, have you?" remarked Somers.

"Not a bit."

"Well, all's well that ends well. I've struck a rich vein."

And, putting his arm through that of his old friend, he led him away.

Can't Do Both.

"Pop, you an' ma have got me guessin'."

"What's the matter, son?"

"Ma tells me to always speak the truth, an' you tell me to always be polite. Now, which shall I do?"—Houston Post.

J. J. HARTLEY
FOR MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—At the earnest request of a large number of the ratepayers I have consented to be a candidate for the position of Mayor for the year 1914.

Being born and having lived all my life in Peterborough, and my whole life's savings being invested in Peterborough, I naturally have a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the City.

Should I be elected I promise you that I will guard to the very best of my ability, the interests of the ratepayers and will oppose all unnecessary expenditure. I will do my utmost to keep down the ever increasing rate of taxation consistent with needs of a growing City.

I may say that I am in favor of municipal ownership and am in favor of having all city work done by our own people instead of bringing in outsiders to do it.

I will endeavor to see that the ratepayers get value for every dollar that is expended.

I have had considerable experience in municipal matters, having served ten years in the Council and fourteen years on the Board of Education, being Chairman of that Board for two years, I was also Chairman of the Board of Health for several years, so that you will see that I am not without a fair share of experience.

Should you do me the honor to elect me as Mayor of our City I will do my best to serve you to the extent of my ability.

Yours respectfully,
J. J. HARTLEY

PURPLE is supplanting the bottle and Russian green shades that have been the most fashionable of all winter colors. Eveque, that beautiful tone of purple worn by bishops; chardron, the lovely purple hue of the thistle; orchid, violet, pansy, in fact most of the tones of purple up to some of the pale shades of lavender are now very fashionable in Paris. Naturally, it is the duller tones that make the duvetyn and velvet tailored suits; the lighter tones are generally reserved for satins, charmeuse and mousselines.

In spite of the thickness of the duvetyn and like fabrics they drape well. They wear very much like velvet too, and the same precautions have to be taken with them, as they are really sort of woollen velvets. The drapings are for the most part far from intricate and consist of pannier or bustle puffs, or catching the skirt up front or back into the waist line so the material falls in long scant drapery folds. Here and there the cubist and futurist influence is felt in colors. Bright Munich style designs are found in the brocades and satins and cotton velvets. These are combined with plain material that accentuates their exotic beauty. They do give a new touch to dressmaking, and those women who have a touch of the unusual in their looks or temperament can certainly wear these curious colors and designs advantageously. These very "modern style" materials are often handled with a great deal of charm, as has already been shown in this fashion section, in evening wraps or their linings, ball dresses or gay flowered cotton frocks.

Braiding in cubist colors is a novelty, but is the natural outcome of the original designs of the modernist designer. Very modern style is the little brocaded coat of true cubist material shown here, worn in a very recent French play.

On newest lines, it has just the details to make it a valuable suit for the coming winter resort season. It is of white cloth, the short bolero coat is almost covered with the braided ovals and circles of bright colors, red, yellow and black, and adorned with a yellow for matching the design. The vest reflects a touch of the bright colors in the buttons. Simple in cut, the skirt is, nevertheless, drawn in about the feet by being pulled up a bit in front. The orange plush hat matching the fur has a single ostrich plume at the back.

The popularity of all the shades of purple is attested by the number of French model suits of this color that come over to America. In one shown here the Russian coat with godet hem is of eveque voilet satin. The skirt is black satin. A pelerine cape is added to the back by an open work stitchery near the blouse is falled into the circula[illegible]. Collar, cuffs and lower edge on the tunic are skunk fur trimmed. The skirt has its tunic edge and hem turned back over the right side and piped with the material.

Shown on the cover in a front view, and on this page in a back view, is a suit on advance fashion lines worn by a French actress. The suit is of thistle purple duvetyn. The seam lines are especially interesting, for they are unlike the traditional tailored lines to which we have become accustomed. There is a seam down the centre back; seams form a yoke on each shoulder. Instead of over shoulder seams, one starts at the back of the sleeve and curves down under the arms to the front, where it forms a waist line into which the basque is pleated to shape it. The skirt is pulled up in the centre and has a puffed upper breadth in the back. The front skirt folds fall in between the knees at the slightest movement to give a trousers effect to the skirt.

Skunk fur edges the collar cuffs and skirt hem. The jacket fronts may be buttoned over to get the correct high necked finish, or left open to disclose the feminized masculine vest of cream cloth. The audacious little hat is of velvet, its already high brim at one side heightened by a paradise ornament. Shoes with patent vamps have light fawn tops. The little skirt waist of batiste with pleated front and new shaped rolling collar is mostly covered by the smart vest of cream cloth.

In a conservative velvet suit of navy blue velvet cloth the skirt is brought forward so that the fulness hangs in front. The coat has a deep facing hem, and it and the three-quarter sleeve cuffs are adorned with woven braid ornaments that give a special style to the suit. This same braiding fills up the V shaped neck opening of the coat. A skunk tippet is wound about the neck.

Oriental embroidery forms an artistic military braiding on a tailored suit that, for a wonder, is not fur trimmed. This does not prevent a very pretty set of fitch from accompanying the suit, which is of beige lustrine. The coat seams are also interesting—the large arm hole seams and the waist seam into which the upper part pleats. The small turned over collar is brown velvet. The skirt pleats into the waist line in front only. The seam is in the centre front and the tiny slash is turned back like an envelope flap and fastened with three buttons.

Chartreuse Coming Into Its Own.

CHARTREUSE is the newest fashionable color. Gowns of it are seen at all the smart gatherings. Because it is new and harmonizes well with all the other new colors it stands out prominently among other modish hues. It is a lovely shade—just the odd greenish yellow tone of the cordial of that name.

A velvet afternoon gown of this chartreuse yellow, that was one of the most striking worn at the recent Horse Show, was very simply made—a straight skirt with just the least pulled forward movement to it. The long sleeved blouse corsage had a very new décolleté, square in front, the sides curving around to the back and finished with a Japanese padded rolled rever of the material. With this costume was worn a black velvet hat. An evening gown seen at the opera, worn by a débutante, was of chartreuse chiffon posed over satin of a shade lighter. The skirt was draped in festoons, the simple bloused waist had a fichu shaped top, the color made it novel.

The amount of red seen at both opera and Horse Show in New York was very marked. Ruby red, in velvet duvetyn and velvet cloth, was a marked feature. At one instant descending the steps from the boxes at the Horse Show there were at least eight dresses and suits of red, garnet, wine brique or old rose, and the colors did not clash, because they were soft, dark tones and neutral rather than bright. Gray fox, skunk sable and fitch almost invariably made collar and cuff bands for the suits or trimmed tunic edges on dresses. At the opera the "horseshoe" has been graced with some lovely gowns of velvet and chiffon of the ruby and wine shades.

In spite of the popularity of the new women in New York are showing a ce-materials some of the most fashionable ciled preference for broadcloth. Whether coat or dress, the newest effect, that which makes a woman turn round to look to get a better view, a sure sign of a novelty, is the peplum coat or the tunic cut circular so that it forms in godet folds. This gives a new fashionable line to the costume. This circular cut is creeping into everything to do with women's dress, for with the narrow silhouettes of the last few years it has been conspicuously absent. Flounces, posed and superposed on the skirts and tunics, now ripple in this new fashion, brim edges of hats are covered with net layers cut circular; wraps have flounces of this shape outlining the puffs or edges.

Taffeta models are becoming more numerous as the "Southern season" approaches. A very smart turban worn by a fashionable New York woman was wedge shaped, with the brim turning back flatly against the crown. This toque was entirely covered with closely pleated black taffeta. This same woman, who looks like an etching of Helleu's come to life, so Parisian is she, wore one night at the Horse Show a black chiffon dress that had a white tulle yoke replacing the décolleté. About the top of the very high stock collar a strand of large baroque pearls was placed, covering the top edge.

Long earrings are still the favorite shape, and one sees here and there the earring of the style of the seventies, of chased or filigree gold, the several shapes attached together and hanging almost to the shoulders. Of course, they are always beautiful examples, veritable heirlooms, the best of the often reprehensible examples of that decade.

The costuming that one sees about town in the various Palais and Jardins de Danse are always interesting and sometimes amusing. After the theatre every class of society is represented, those who come to look on for half an hour, and those who come to dance. When into this cosmopolitanism of dress, from the naïve little frock by the home dressmaker to the Paquin creation, a dress like the one seen recently sweeps in every one turns frankly to stare.

The wearer, possibly an exotic song bird from the Metropolitan Opera company, had dressed her type to perfection. A gorgeous Chinese coat of gray, yellow and gold, when removed, revealed a dress on Russian lines of vivid dark green satin simply banded with gold. A gold tassel hung from the V cut neck; in the back gold tassels also swayed from sleeves and girdle. With her olive skin, dark hair smoothly banded and Eastern features and long earrings, she was a striking figure that stood out delightfully from the mass of conventional dress.

COURTSHIP OF BIRDS.

Remarkable Habits Enter Into the Instincts of Mating.

"Of all the bird tribe by far the most interesting in its customs of courtship and marriage is the ruff. They are a remarkable example of selection by the female, and it is possibly from a contemplation of these interesting creatures that Mr. Shaw originally got his idea for 'Man and Superman,'" said Dr. F. B. Korkman in an address before a London college.

"The ruff is a swashbuckling bird with an imposing collar or ruff of feathers round his neck and a fascinating crest of feathers on his head. His whole object in life is to please Miss Ruff, but he plays quite a passive part and can only stand and wait to be chosen, and not all of the male birds are fortunate enough to be so favored. When the time for choosing comes round the male birds take up their position on a hillside and wait for the glad moment, making themselves look as bewitching as possible.

"But of a colony of twenty-two ruffs observed only eight were chosen by the discriminating females, and of these only two—both of them very gaudy, dressy birds — were chosen time after time. One can only sympathize with the poor ruffs who were left out in the cold altogether, and hope that they accepted their exclusion with some philosophy.

"Even the London sparrow is extremely interesting in his courtship, although we live a lifetime among them without knowing it. The mating of the sparrows may be observed at any time between March and June. That sudden, fierce outburst of chattering which most of us think mistakenly is the prelude to a fight is really a courtship conducted in sparrow style.

"The cocks surround a lady sparrow, each crying out shrilly his own excellences and the shocking demerits of the others. The lady accepts all this homage by pecking furiously at all the excited suitors, but eventually she makes her choice and hies off with one, and they live happily together for the rest of the season.

"The cormorant also has a most interesting way with him. When he is 'in love' he lies down and, twisting his neck round, lays it flat along his back. And if Miss Cormorant is touched, as she should be, by this display of misery and devotion, she gently caresses with her bill the feathers of Mr. Cormorant at the point where the neck curves over on to the body, and all is well."

Book Evolution.

"Books" have progressed from the days when they were only wooden rods or bits of bark. For the derivation which connects "book" directly with "beech," both having been "boc" in Anglo-Saxon, is the favorite one. "Buchstaben," the German word for letters of the alphabet, means literally "beech staves." Many book words go back to such vegetable origin. The Latin "liber," a book, whence comes our "library," was properly the inner bark or rind of a tree, especially of papyrus. The Greek "biblion," whence "Bible" and "bibliophile," meant much the same thing. A "codex" was a block of wood, and "leaf" is obvious.

Marked by Ribbons.

Women guides and interpreters in Budapest wear a different colored ribbon for each language which they speak. They are to be seen walking about the city, waiting at railway stations and driving in carriages. Some have two or three ribbons, and others have four, five or six. Bright red represents English, a heliotrope or lavender is German, a brilliant yellow means French, a pale blue is Italian, a brown means Danish, Dutch is a nile green, and so on throughout all the colors and most nations of the earth.

Tribute To the Dog.

Whether a dog is the best friend of man cannot be answered by me, but of all the animals which have become domesticated the dog has been shown to be the only one that never knows the difference of caste, class, wealth or habitation. The shriveling, half starved dog, clinging to the wasted toiler in the humblest abode of a hungry family, will never forsake to go next door to the family that has the blue ribboned, silver belled poodle or the felt wrapped collie.—Colonel John H. Lewis.

An Eye Experiment.

The two eyes really see two objects. If the two forefingers be held, one at the distance of one foot, the other two feet in front of the eyes, and the former be looked at, two phantoms of the latter will be observed, one on each side. If the latter figure be regarded, two phantoms of the nearest finger will be observed mounting guard, one on either side.

Recreant Auditor.

"You went to sleep during your wife's speech."

"Yes," replied Mr. Meekton. "Henrietta has been rehearsing that speech for a week. I told her I had better not come here. I knew something like this would happen if she couldn't shout, 'Are you listening, Leonidas?' every now and then."

Most Likely.

Tommy—Papa, a river is fed by small streams, isn't it?

Papa—Yes, my son.

Tommy—Then I s'pose that is what makes its mouth water, isn't it?

The Man She Met Abroad

He Was Not Acceptable to Her Father

By EDITH TOWNSEND

Paris, France, Oct. 3, 19—.

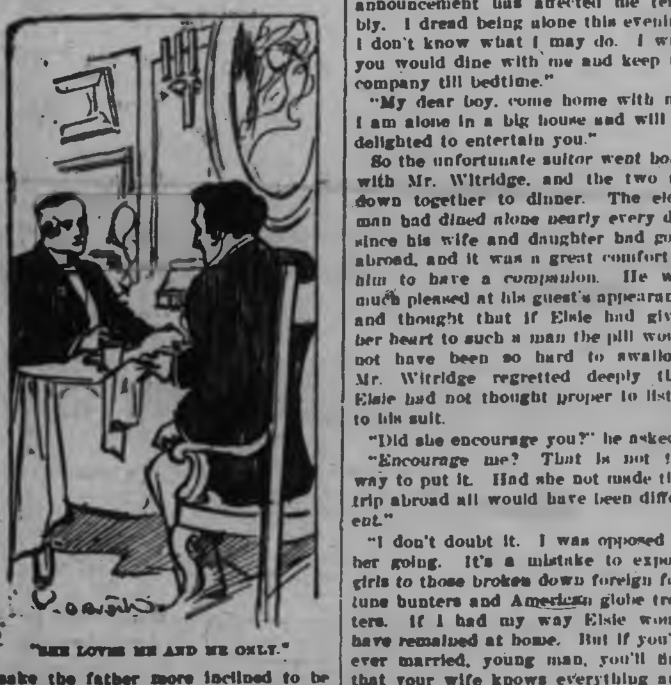
Dearest Papa—I have something awfully important to tell you. It's the most important thing in the world. Now, do be good and don't get upset. I know that you have never expected me to be married and all that, and you do expect that I'll be a good little girl and live with you and mamma always. And so I would if the finest, brightest, most intelligent, handsomest fellow in the world hadn't come along and asked me to be his wife. We met him in Switzerland, and he came here with us. Just think—he proposed to me in the gardens of the palace of Versailles! Wasn't that too lovely for anything?

He is obliged to return to America on the next steamer and will go at once to you to ask for me. He will also tell you all about himself, and I'm sure his account will agree with mine. Do be good to him for my sake. Your own loving

ELSIE.

"What did I ever let her go over there for to pick up some worthless globe trotter to come down on me for funds to keep him trotting? Something awfully important! I should think so! I told her mother to keep all such fellows away from her. But you can't trust a woman in such a matter. It takes a father to do that. 'Finest, brightest, most intelligent, handsomest.' What are you going to do with a girl who will tumble to the first mustache waxed nonentity that looks at her?"

Mr. Witridge after this soliloquy opened a letter from his wife giving a more coherent account of the man who was coming to ask for their daughter. He was an American, a young lawyer who had recently been admitted to the bar and was taking an outing before settling down to practice his profession. This was the substance of the report. There were many details, but none of the things said seemed to make the father more inclined to be satisfied with what meant to him the loss of a daughter he loved so well.



"SHE LOVES ME AND ME ONLY."

A couple of weeks after the receipt of these letters Mr. Witridge stepped aboard the train he usually took to his home in the suburbs after business hours. He was not conscious of being followed by a young man who took the vacant seat beside him.

"How do you do, Mr. Witridge?" said the young man, with great cordiality.

The other looked up at him curiously, evidently not remembering him.

"Anything recently from Mrs. Witridge and Miss Elsie?"

"They're in Paris," was the brief reply.

"Paris is an attractive place for ladies. I fear we shall not get them home soon."

"They're coming on the next steamer."

"That must be gratifying to you. I suppose you find living alone rather dull?"

"I find it very dull indeed."

"You have an attractive daughter, Mr. Witridge."

"Yes; Elsie's a nice girl."

"I should think you would fear that some of those foreign chaps would fall in love with her and keep her there."

Now, Mr. Witridge was full of his daughter's engagement and ready to pour forth his dissatisfaction to some sympathetic listener. He had no remembrance of having seen this young man before, but he could not be expected to remember all his daughter's acquaintances, and his eyesight, as well as his memory, was not serving him as it had when he was younger.

"Elsie's engaged to an American," he said.

"Elsie engaged!" The speaker looked as if he had received a terrible blow. He appeared to control himself with difficulty.

"Pardon me!" he gasped. "I—I had hoped"—

Mr. Witridge surmised that he had encountered a disappointed suitor for his daughter.

"Have you known my daughter long?" he asked.

"Long! One does not need to know your daughter long to be assured of her inestimable worth."

"Let me see. I remember your face very well, but I have a way of forgetting names. You are"—

"Tickets!" cried the conductor. And both gentlemen plunged into their pockets, the younger neglecting to reply to the other's question. When his ticket had been taken up he said:

"Mr. Witridge, I confess that your announcement has affected me terribly. I dread being alone this evening. I don't know what I may do. I wish you would dine with me and keep me company till bedtime."

"My dear boy, come home with me. I am alone in a big house and will be delighted to entertain you."

So the unfortunate suitor went home with Mr. Witridge, and the two sat down together to dinner. The elder man had dined alone nearly every day since his wife and daughter had gone abroad, and it was a great comfort to him to have a companion. He was much pleased at his guest's appearance and thought that if Elsie had given her heart to such a man the pill would not have been so hard to swallow. Mr. Witridge regretted deeply that Elsie had not thought proper to listen to his suit.

"Did she encourage you?" he asked.

"Encourage me? That is not the way to put it. Had she not made this trip abroad all would have been different."

"I don't doubt it. I was opposed to her going. It's a mistake to expose girls to those broken down foreign fortune hunters and American globe trotters. If I had my way Elsie would have remained at home. But if you're ever married, young man, you'll find that your wife knows everything and you know nothing."

"I only ask to see your daughter once to win her away from this fellow. She loves me and me only. Doubtless sightseeing together abroad dawdling in picture galleries, boating on the Italian lakes with him, have made her think that she has found a new love. As soon as she gets away from his influence she may very easily be brought under mine."

"You don't mean it!"

"I do. I am perfectly confident that in the bottom of my heart she loves me and me only."

"Well, young man," he said resolutely, "if you wish to renew your addresses to my daughter when she comes home all I have to say is that you can count on all the influence I have in this family—it's not much, I admit—to help you. You're a gentleman, every inch of you. I'd much rather have Elsie marry a man I've seen and like—yes, I like you first rate—than one I've never heard of before."

The guest reached across the table and fervently pressed the speaker's hand.

"What are you going to do in the matter?" asked Mr. Witridge presently.

"I will meet your daughter at the dock when she lands and be guided by circumstances."

"But likely you'll find the other fellow there too. He's in America. Elsie wrote he was to come over before her. I've been expecting him every day to come and ask me for her."

"Leave all that to me. He won't interfere with my meeting Elsie. Any one has a right to do that."

"But are you sure you can manage it all?"

"Perfectly."

"You were not engaged when Elsie went away, were you?"

"No."

"Then why are you so sure?"

"Simply because Elsie loves me, and no man on earth can take her away from me unless temporarily. As I have said, she has been under other influences; then, too, she is very young."

"Young! I should think so! She should be in the nursery instead of traipsing around Europe, exposed to every impoverished scamp who comes along."

Before the evening was over the guest promised that if he should win Elsie he would make his home in the same street—next door, if possible, to her former home—and Mr. Witridge, under the genial influence of a good dinner, assured him that he would rather have him for a son-in-law than any man living. The guest was pressed to stay all night; but, realizing that his host might in the morning be less genial, he declined and returned to the city.

In due time Mrs. Witridge and her daughter arrived, and her father's dinner companion met them at the pier, it having been arranged between him and the old gentleman that the latter should keep out of the way.

"I've met your father, and he is mine," said the young man.

"You don't mean that he has consented"—

"I do."

"How did you ever do it?"

The lover told the story on the way to the lady's home and how he had made a friend of Mr. Witridge and secured his consent that he should cut the other fellow out with the father's promised assistance.

Soon after her arrival Elsie Witridge informed her father that as a dutiful daughter she would marry the man of his choice. Mr. Farnsworth, the accepted suitor, called and was received by all the family with open arms. For some time Mr. Witridge made frequent allusions to that chap his daughter met abroad, wondering why he had not called to ask for her and intimating that if he had done so he would have been peremptorily refused. Mrs. Witridge and her daughter at such times maintained a discreet silence, declining to discuss the matter. The Farnsworths have been married two years, and Mr. Witridge is still ignorant of the way his consent was gained to his daughter's marriage with the man she met abroad.

Old Time Football.

In the twelfth century London enjoyed football. Fitz-Stephen, clerk to Thomas a Becket, tells how after dinner the youths of the city would "address themselves" to football. These sportsmen were fastidious in their way. The scholars of each school had a ball peculiar to themselves, as had, indeed, most of the particular trades. The fathers of the players, too, were "as youthful as the youngest," for "their natural heat seeming to be revived at the sight of so much agility," they sprang from their stands into the arena. In later days, too, the excitement of the game has been known to infect the spectators. Somebody wrote of a game in 1598: "These two men were killed by Ould Gunter. Gunters sonnes and ye Gregories fell together by ye years at football. Ould Gunter drewe his dagger and broke boothe their heads, and they died boothe within a fortnight after."

Lightning Shuns Women.

Statistics appear to show that men are more likely to be struck by lightning than women, more than two men being killed by it for every woman. But a London journal points out that the man's occupation is more likely to take him into the open when lightning is about. It has been observed, however, that in a group equally composed of both sexes lightning seems to prefer the men, and we may theorize at pleasure as to whether it is the comparive height that does it or some protection afforded by the woman's dress or a difference in conductibility between the sexes. The fact that children are seldom killed by lightning supports to a certain extent the first of these theories.

A RUNAWAY'S JOLLY CHRISTMAS

JIMMY was very, very lonely, so lonely that he almost cried. A big boy of seven and a schoolboy as well can't really, truly cry. Jimmy did have a good reason for crying. Mamma, the best and dearest of all good, dear mammas, had gone away never to come back. Papa was almost always at his office.

Jimmy heard Hannah, the nurse, calling.

"Jimmy, oh, Jimmy! Just come and see what papa has sent up from the stores. It's just fine, I can tell you."

Jimmy jumped up and ran to the kitchen. On the kitchen table lay a huge turkey, "with loads o' fixin's," cook said; a great pile of red cranberries, crisp, curly celery, raisins, nuts and several big boxes.

"Will papa be home for dinner? I haven't seen him in ever so long, and I don't want dinner without papa," asked Jimmy.

"I'll tell you. We'll phone to papa and ask him specially to come to our Christmas party tomorrow and to dinner tomorrow night," nurse suggested.

"Can I really, truly phone, Hannah?"

"Yes, indeed, and I'll show you how," and Hannah led the way to the room where the telephone was.

Jimmy had to climb on a stool, he was so little, but he didn't mind a bit. Then nurse told him just what to say to central, and he called papa up. Yes, papa was coming home to dinner and would be out all day tomorrow.

Jimmy was very happy and could scarcely wait till dinner. But when dinner time came papa did not arrive. Nurse came in and told Jimmy that papa could not come home that night.

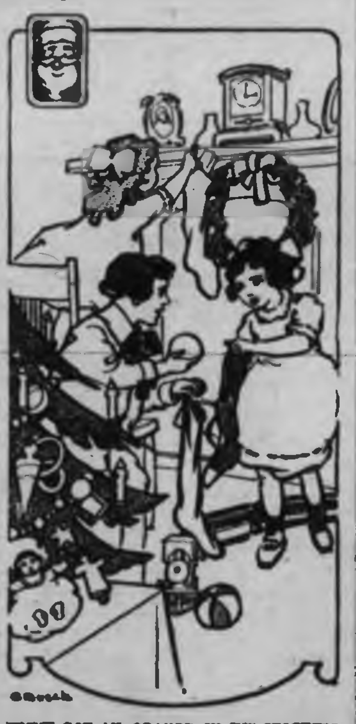
Jimmy said nothing. He didn't cry, as nurse thought he would. He only looked very sober and went to his room. Then he washed his face and put on his hat and coat. He slipped down the stairs and out the front door. He was going to run away.

When he got out in the lonely country Jimmy began to be afraid. Night came on, and it was bitter cold. He felt tired and sleepy and crawled under a fence and lay down to sleep.

When Jimmy woke up his head was resting in somebody's lap, and somebody had her arms around him.

"Poor little fellow! He's nearly frozen. Jack, carry him up to the house," he heard a motherly voice say.

He looked up. The lady who was holding him wasn't a bit like his pretty mother. She had on an old, dingy brown dress and a rough gray shawl, but had a kind face. Jack, a great big boy, carried him to the farmhouse.



JIMMY GOT AN ORANGE IN HIS STOCKING.

Next morning Jimmy was awakened by being vigorously shaken.

"Get up, get up! It's Christmas, and we want to see everything," piped Bill.

They ran downstairs, and the little girls seized the boys' hands and danced around the old grandmother, who was making cake. Then they all kissed her and kissed mother and father. Jimmy got an orange in his stocking, too, like the others, and a nice new tie. But dinner was the best of all.

They all crowded around the table. Jack had shot a wild turkey, and they had celery and mashed potatoes, cranberries, jam and lots of other things, with a big pumpkin pie to crown the whole. They had just begun to eat, Jimmy declaring he "could eat a whole house of turkey," when there was a knock at the door. Jimmy looked up, and there stood papa, with Tim, the very oldest boy.

"Papa, papa!" cried Jimmy, running to him. Papa looked tired and white. He had been so frightened about Jimmy. Tim had found out that morning from Jimmy who his father was and had hastened to Jimmy's house.

"And I'll never miss having Christmas dinner with you again," said papa.

"But, papa, you'll have Christmas dinner with us today," said Jimmy. "Mrs. Russell says you're to stay."

So papa stayed and had dinner with Jimmy after all.

No, Alonzo, the world doesn't care how you get your money; all that interests it is what you are going to do with it.

Oxalic acid will clean wicker chairs and tables. Apply the acid with an old toothbrush. After stains are removed, rinse the article thoroughly, first in clear warm water, and then in cold.

There's one safe rule to follow in buying him neckwear. If it's a tie that you like, he won't.

Little, straight pine trees, 10 or 12 inches high, brought in from the woods and planted in small pots, will make a pretty bit of winter greenery on the dining room table.

THE DAILY REVIEW

Rain or sleet towards evening, turning to snow. Sunday, strong winds, mostly north and northwest, colder, with snow.

ESTABLISHED 1879. PETERBOROUGH, ONT., SATURDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1913. PRICE 2 CENTS

CHRISTMAS WEATHER RECORDED SINCE 1900

First Time Since 1896 That Sleighs Have Been Missing

That weather conditions prevailing this fall are abnominal is shown by the following statistics furnished by the local weather observer, who has been scanning old registers to find a parallel for similar conditions in other years.

In 1900, during Christmas week and for some days before and after that date, weather conditions were much the same as at present. There was no sleighing, a few inches of snow lay on the ground in places, fair sleighing had prevailed that year from Nov. 14 to Dec. 16, with a few interruptions. Below zero had been reached on half a dozen occasions.

The following year, 1901, fair sleighing prevailed during most of December, also the last week in November. Zero weather on few days.

In 1902 we had good sleighing at Xmas tide, snow and zero weather came on Dec. 6th. Seven days zero, once 16 below, is quite a contrast to the present season.

In 1903 one foot of beautiful furnished sleighing which had prevailed since Nov. 25th.

We had sleighing from Dec. 8 to 23, in 1904, and below zero on 10 occasions.

In the following year, 1905, snow covered the ground from Nov. 1, and A1 sleighing prevailed at Christmas. On Dec. 21st, our street railway system was tied up.

In 1906 conditions were much the same, the ground having a covering of white from Dec. 6th.

Twenty inches of snow was on the ground Christmas week, 1907.

Next year sleigh bells jingled from Dec. 4th, 19 below zero on the 10th.

In 1909 good sleighing ruled from Dec. 10th and fair sleighing for a week previously.

The following year, 1910, heavy snow came Nov. 28, and sleighing was good from that date on.

1911 was much like the present year, with the difference that sleighing was fair from Nov. 17 to 23. There was none at Christmas time.

Last year snow fell on several occasions during the last week in November, and first week in December, but not sufficiently deep for sleighing, until Dec. 19th. No zero was marked.

It will thus be seen that the present year stands in a class entirely by itself. Up to the present there has not been any excuse for getting out the sleighs. This is the only year since 1896 that there has been no appearance of sleighs by this date. With the exception of last year this is also the only year in which zero has not been marked.

BADLY BRUISED BODY FOUND BY CHILDREN

Foul Play Was at First Suspected by the Police.

Hamilton, Ont., Dec. 20.—At seven o'clock this morning children found the body of Thomas Price, aged sixty, lying on Euclid avenue, a short distance from the City Hospital, and notified the hospital authorities.

Coroner Hopkins immediately started an investigation. The body is badly bruised and the police suspect foul play. Price lived on Catharine street north. His watch and twenty-five dollars were found on the body. This precludes a robbery theory. It is believed the body was dragged to the place where found.

Later.

It is now believed that Price's death was due to heart disease. He was on his way to work and it is supposed he became ill and tried to get to the hospital and obtain medical assistance.

TRANSFERRED TO SUPREME COURT

Latest Move in the Father Brophy Will Action.

Toronto, Dec. 20.—Rev. Father George C. B. Brophy, missionary priest, Kingston, left a will and $177,000, but his sister, Catharine Mahoney, of Ottawa, says he was not mentally capable of making the will.

She is left$75 a year.

The action contesting this will has been transferred from the Surrogate Court to the Supreme Court.

After disposing of about $20,000, the testator directs that the residue be invested for 21 years. At the end of that time certain bequests are to be made.

A sum of $400 a year is to be paid to each Roman Catholic priest who has been cast out or debarred by the clerical authorities.

Father Brophy says no one has greater respect for the superiors of the Church, but he is opposed to the abuse of power.

Toronto, Dec. 20.—Before Judge Morgan and a jury in the County Court, Harry Armstrong, of Haliburton, is suing the Toronto Railway Company for $1,000 damages as the result of injuries received when he was thrown from the wagon he was driving on King street east, November 12th, 1912.

The defence is that he turned onto the tracks in front of the car before the brakes could be applied.

TOO MUCH IN THE BANK NOW

George Lincoln so Replies to Magistrate Dumble.

"George Lincoln, you are charged with being drunk in a public place," read the Magistrate this morning at Police Court.

"Well, I am afraid there must be something in it," responded George, who wore a smile that would not come off despite the scowling glance of the Magistrate.

"It looks as if George is still drunk," remarked Chief Thompson.

"No, sir, I am just as right as A. B. C." quoth George, as [redacted]

He then described in eloquent terms how he had come to the city yesterday from Lindsay. He was found last evening near Smith St., in a badly intoxicated condition.

"Have you got a horse and rig here?" asked His Worship.

"No, your honor."

"Well, how are you going to get home?"

"Search me."

The outcome of the affair was that the Magistrate advised the Chief to arrange for the man to have possession of his bank roll of over $85 when he got home.

"Why don't you put that money in the bank?" enquired the Magistrate.

"Why your honor I have too much of it there now," said George.

George sprung another sensation when he also paid the fine of John Fowler, another knight of the golden fis. [redacted]

THE PETERBORO HEALTH ASSOCIATION

As there are a few cases of diptheria reported in Peterboro, at present, some remarks on the prevention of the disease may be of interest.

This disease is transmitted chiefly by direct contact between persons harboring diphtheria bacilli and uninfected well persons. Diphtheria bacilli can survive outside the body, on fabric, wood and glass, for varying periods, depending upon their environments. Exposure to air and sunlight tends to kill them rapidly. A dark damp location tends to prolong their vitality.

If a child or an adult has a sore throat with the formations of a thick grey membrane in any part of the mouth, throat or nose, in most instances thatp erson has diphtheria and should be separated from well persons. If there is no membrane formation, but the person appears to be stupid, drowsy or much prostrated, that person may have diptheria and should be kept away from all well persons. In all these cases, a physician should be called in. He should take cultures from the throat of all such persons. The examinations of these cultures will show whether the diphtheria bacilli is present or not. In all such cases the early use of antitoxin is urged.

All well persons who have come in contact with children or adults, sick, as above described, should have cultures taken from their throats ,because an examination of their cultures, show that the germ is present in about half of them. All exposed persons should be protected by antitoxin.

All persons suffering even from a mild case should be isolated until after two consecutive cultures, no bacilli are found. In persons who are recovering, this period will average about three weeks. In well persons the bacilli usually disappear much sooner. They may persist in either classes for long periods.

Well persons having diphtheria bacilli in their throats or noses, are probably the most common means of spreading the disease to others. Those persons found not harboring bacilli, especially children, should leave the home until all danger of infection is over.

CHAIRMAN OF THE CITY TRUST SHEDS SOME LIGHT

The Editor of The Review:
Sir,—

Observing enquiries being made in relation to the City's financial condition, I beg to submit the following statement as being approximately correct:

Debenture debt		$1,600,000
Assets
Sinking funds in band	$330,000
Water works	550,000
Market block	175,000
Hilliard farm	15,000
Property East City	10,000
Other available properties and mortgages	20,000
		$1,100,000
Net debt		$500,000

It will be observed that I have taken no account of the schools, sewers, sidewalks, etc., (in which much more than $600,000 has been expended), but only such assets as are productive, or are convertible into money, if such remote occasion should ever arise.

With an assessed value of $10,000,000 and the net liability stated, our position, I think, should not disturb anyone. Continued prudent management of affairs will assure the high financial position we occupy.

Yours truly,
W. H. MOORE,
Chairman, City Trust.

EGG FAMINE WAS MISSING

A Liberal Offering on the Market This Morning

FOWL IN PLENTY

The market this morning lived up to the Christmas market standard although no great change in the prices was experienced. Some things were a little cheaper than they have been this past few weeks.

The so-called "egg famine" was entirely done away with and by all appearances it was nothing but a little ingenuity on the part of the farmers to save their eggs for to-day, but the scheme apparently became too general and the result was that eggs were in abundance to-day and prices decreased. Last week they sold for 45 cents per dozen and it was anticipated that they would be as high as 50 cents this morning but they were selling from 40 to 45 cents. Butter was as usual, 28 and 30c. and appeared to be plentiful.

Fowl was in great quantities. Geese hovered from $1.25 to $2.15, although the majority were being sold for $1.60. Turkeys ran all the way from $1.50 to $4.00, while ducks were 80 cents each. Chickens were not in any great demand and were selling from 40 to 60 cents each.

A rather unusual sight was the presence of three squaws with their baskets of beaded work. The crowd was too large, however, for their trinkets and their sales were few and far between.

A very unfortunate thing happened in the inside market this morning about half-past ten, which was largely due to the big crowd. Mrs. Grose, 148 Rubidge street, lost her purse, which contained $4.60. It was a black leather purse with a strap on it so the finder will be able to trace its owner. Whoever happened to pick it up will please return it to the lady or if more convenient, leave it at The Review Office.

The outside market was rather large, fresh meat being in great abundance. Pork sold for 14 and 15 cents per pound. Potatoes sold for $1.25 per bag, while apples went from $1.50 to $2.00 per bag. The latter was the price of the spies.

One farmer had a crate of roosters and was selling them for $1.00 each. One little girl who was accompanied by her father, put an awful strong plea before her pater to purchase two or three so "they could have fresh eggs at home."

In the stores a big business was done and the large crowd at the market hall induced many to forsake it and buy in the stores. The following is a list of the general Christmas articles and their prices:

Raisons, 25 cents per pound; nuts, 20 and 25 cents per pound; oranges, 30 to 50 cents per dozen; bananas, 20 cents per dozen; California celery, 10 to 15 cents per bunch; cauliflower, 20 to 30 cents each; hot-house tomatoes, 30 cents per pound.

THE THIRTEENTH THE GREATEST OF CENTURIES

Mr. John Corkery jr. Gives one of the Most Interesting Lectures, Heard in St Alphonsus Lyceum

The hall of St. Alphonsus' Lyceum was well filled last evening, to hear Mr. John Corkery, Jr., speak on Father Walsh's book, "The Thirteenth, the greatest of centuries." This was undoubtedly one of the most interesting lectures that has been heard in the Lyceum during the past three years. The speaker commenced with an explanation of the title of his address. Although the age in which we live is truly a wonderful one, in regard to the progress of invention and commerce, can it be called 'progressive' in the true sense of the word? As one great personage has expressed it "This is an age of locomotion, but not of progress." To many, the assertion contained in the title of Father Walsh's book will come as a surprise. They forget that the history of those times has been written from a narrow and prejudiced standpoint, —"the history of the Middle Ages has been a conspiracy against the truth,"— so that a person desiring a knowledge of the time, state of affairs in that much-maligned period must search for himself the authorities of the age.

Ruskin has said that in order to properly estimate the accomplishments of any epoch, of human history, careful study of the three books must be made; that is, the book of deeds, the book of arts,, and the book of words, meaning the consideration of what it has accomplished for man, the artistic qualities to be found in the art of the period, and of what it wrote for subsequent generations. During this century, were solved many of our vexing modern problems, especially in the social order, and its people saw laid the foundation of our modern system of education, and the birth of the democratic spirit, in the signing of the Magna Charta. The beginning of the 13th century was the beginning of the two first universities, that of Bologne and of Paris, the former noted for its school of law, and the latter for its school of medicine. It was not long after that the University of Oxford was founded, while all over Europe, universities and preparatory schools were increasingly set up. By a decree of the Council of Lateran, in the beginning of the century, a school had to be maintained in connection with every Bishop's Church, and the Archipiscopal Cathedrals were commanded to maintain three chairs, one in philosophy, one in canon law, and one in grammar. It is a surprising but undeniable historical fact, that, in proportion to the population, more students attended the universities of the 13th century than those of the present day.

This century also saw the erection of those wonderful monuments of stone, the beautiful cathedrals, of which, at this late day, it has been said that they are so perfect that it would seem that the hand of the Divine Creator Himself had directly assisted in their construction. Modern experts admit that they are unable to equal the craftsmanship of that age, the stained glass, the wood carving, the wonderful needlework. And it was chiefly through the workers in these arts that the guilds were formed, through the instrumentality of which were solved some of the knotty problems confronting us in the social world at present, arising from the breach between capital and labor. These guilds were also directly responsible for the spread of democracy in England, while in France, Spain and Germany, the 13th century saw the beginning of a representative parliament for the people.

In art, this period produced Grotto, one of the greatest of the old masters in poetry, the Italian, Dante, and we are indebted to it for the production of the great Latin hymns, those sublimely elegant religious poems whose glory will never be extinguished, and for the development of Gregorian plain chant.

In literature we have the Arthur legends, forming a subject for the ballad and epic poets, as Mallory, in the 15th, Spencer in the 16th, and Tennyson in the 19th century.

During this period we have the establishment of circulating libraries and of city hospitals. The foundations of three hospitals which are still in existence, were then laid, that of the Holy Spirit in Rome, and of St. Bartholomews and St. Thomas in London.

The speaker closed his address with a quotation from Macaulay, in speaking of the 13th century:—"It is there that we must seek for the origin of our freedom, our prosperity, and our glory. Then it was that the great English people was formed, ... then first appeared with distinctness that constitution—which in spite of its many defects, deserves to be regarded as the best under which any great society has ever yet existed during many ages. . . ."

A vote of thanks was tendered to the speaker, and Rev. Father Phelan rose to congratulate both Mr. Corkery and the Ladies' Literary Society.

Rev. Dean Kelly, of Trout Creek, who was present, spoke encouragingly of the good work to be done by the Society, and the ambition of the younger generation for a higher education.

Miss May Merrill presided at the meeting, and the musical program was as follows:

Vocal Solo—Mr. Jos. Minicolo.
Fairy Drill—By Convent pupils.
Vocal Solo—Miss Marguerite Merrell.
Dialogue—Miss Fanny Doris and Miss Geraldine McCollum.
Accompanists—Miss L. Hurley, Miss Marion Gorman, Miss Grant.

SUPPLIED MINOR WITH CIGARETTE

At yesterday morning's session of Police Court Henry Ballard was fined $10 on his plea of guilty to the charge of supplying a cigarette to a minor named John Gibson. Ballard tried to excuse himself by claiming that he was not aware of the law and also that the boy whom he gave the "coffin nail" was in the habit of smoking regularly. His explanation only served the Magistrate to inform him that he would know the law hereafter.

HELD CONCERT AND PROMENADE

An Enjoyable Evening at the Business College.

A very enjoyable evening was spent at the Peterboro Business College last evening, it being the occasion of the annual concert and promenade. The large rooms were decorated in a very artistic manner with streamers and pennants. On every side large P. B. C. pennants were in evidence. A short but much appreciated program was first rendered after which ten promenades were enjoyed. Very dainty refreshments were served just before the happy gathering dispersed.

The program rendered was as follows:

Overture — Orchestra, Cunningham's.
Piano Duet—Misses Car and Carveth.
Solo, vocal—Miss E. Webster.
Reading—Miss A. Beatty.
Piano Duet—Miss Butler and Mrs. Clarry.
Solo, vocal—Miss Emerson.
Piano Solo—Miss Carveth.

The school closes on Tuesday evening for the Christmas holidays.

TRADES AND LABOR COUNCIL

Notes by Official Scribe.

The meeting this week was mainly interested in listening to Representative J. J. Hartley, as he outlined his platform for the forthcoming Mayoralty contest.

In introducing the speaker President Moore deplored the fact that Mr. Hartley had been so tardy in declaring his candidature. The Council had been waiting for a favorable reply for the last two weeks thus valuable time had been wasted. If the Chief Magistrate's chair was to be occupied next term by a labor representative, then the organized workers of the city must take off their coats at once so to speak, and get busy.

Representative J. J. Hartley, of the Bricklayers' and Masons' Union, rose and was given a rousing welcome. The delay, he admitted, was regrettable, but he had thoroughly turned the matter over and over, and much careful thought had culminated in the decision published in the local press. There were not a lot of promises, but such as were stated, he would stand by. He had a record of 40 years as a labor man, he knew the city every inch, as he had served seven years as assessor; he had always paid the highest wages giving men over the recognized scale, acknowledging that the best paid men were the cheapest, and he could not name one discontented employee while he has been contracting around the city. The speaker said that it was the persistent demands of labor men and their promised staunch support that had caused his decision. Labor should be represented in the local council. Too long have the reins of government been left in the hands of professional men. The workers of Peterboro have a fine chance of asserting themselves and showing what can be accomplished by a little organized effort. Labor representatives in local councils, the Provincial and Dominion Houses, should mark the oncoming tide of a ruling democracy which must ultimately triumph in its endeavors to remedy the hideous social differences now existing.

Mr. Hartley concluded by asking for criticism, comment and questionings from the delegates, and avowing his determination to stay right with the proposition.

Delegates then testified to the high esteem and complete confidence they had of the Mayoralty candidate. There is no reason why Peterboro's labor representative should be turned down. The only cause can be the workers of the city not recognizing their privilege; to educate them workers would start in and not quit till 5 p.m. on January 5th.

PETERBOROUGH, SATURDAY, DEC. 20, 1913.

WHO'S A BIGOT?

"THE RELIGION which is doing most effective work in the regeneration of society is the religion which is so sure of itself that it will not stoop to compromise. Such a religion, be it never so reasonable, sane and joyous, will be a hard-hitting religion, and will probably be accused of bigotry; but such a reproach will be really a compliment. If bigotry consists mainly in fidelity to conscience and reason, let us earn and welcome the charge!"

Thus spoke the editor of the Christian Guardian, and we take it as a reply to a criticism which appeared in this column recently upon the Guardian's attitude towards the smoking parson.

There may be something to be said for the bigot, if he is an out and out bigot and is willing to die for his belief he ceases to be a bigot and becomes a hero. Bigotry does not consist in "fidelity to reason," it may be fidelity to conscience, but it is to a perverted conscience. Conscience, with most people, is a matter of training, it is merely prejudice and when this gets the upper-hand the possessor of such a conscience becomes a bigot. A bigot is a person who can only see one side of a subject, or who is narrow in his vision.

We may hate, and we do hate, the liquor traffic. We also hate and abhor immorality and vice of all kinds. We deplore the prevalence of consumption and we would that there was no such a disease as cancer. And if a near and dear relative was smitten with either of these diseases we would hate the very name of it, we would loth it, we would preach against it, we would become a bigot in our hatred of the disease. But we would not follow the advice of our friend the Guardian and decline to compromise with it. To decline to compromise with consumption is to decline to compromise with the consumptive. Let us be careful in our hatred of disease that we do not hate the victim.

When our Lord wanted to cure sin He got at the sinner. When John Wesley regenerated rural England and awakened the dead souls of the miners in the Midlands he did not hob a 'nob with members of Parliament or support one party parrot-cry against another. We need not say what he did, it is all written down in the "journals," which are sold at the Bookroom.

There is such a thing as being rightous over much and some people are so good, that one feels like a devil in their presence, their goodness is aggressive, it so overwhelms one as to become rather objectionable than attractive. There are souls so lofty that one gets dizzy looking up at them. But the bare truth is that none of these people are as good as they look, or as lofty as they appear to be.

We do not agree with the Guardian that religion should always be "hard-hitting." Christ reserved some of His hardest hits for the so-called religious people and some of His softest words for the miserable sinner. But we would not be misunderstood. There are evils with which the church cannot compromise, the liquor traffic is one of them, but behind the liquor traffic is the "depravity" of which the orthodox catechism speaks and this is the cause of all the mischief. You may abolish the bar with an act of Parliament, but you have not, by so doing, abolished the barbarian who set it up.

CANADIAN ARTS AND LETTERS.

THE TORONTO NEWS makes a gallant attempt to defend Canadian Arts and Letters and makes some comment upon an editorial which appeared in The Review recently in which we ventured to have a fling, with our little catapult, at the intellectual Goliaths who foregather at the Arts and Letters Club in the Queen City. It seems that club has made an attempt to prove its title by publishing a "Year Book of Canadian Arts," which we have not seen, but would like to see. This is a sort of compendium of all the works of Art produced in Canada during the past year.

As we have said, The News makes a gallant attempt to fall in love with this production, but the effect is to damn the book with faint praise.

"The year book is typographically attractive. . . . In the main, it is well-written, though the articles sometimes show the dangers of condensation. . . . As a whole, however, it is a good book." These are some detached sentences which, while they are niggard in praise, they reveal the pen of an editor who is doing his best to be honest and not hurt anybody.

He lets himself go a little when he says, "it would be stupid for us to put our farthing dip under a bushel." And again:—"We are so devilishly determined to get money that most of us have no time for realities, the things that feed the soul. . . . How difficult it will be to recognize people we knew on earth when we reach that Other Country! Many of them will be so thin."

Mr. Dela Fosse, in his article in another column, mentions the fact of the scarcity of first-class literature in Canada and attributes the lack to Canada being a new country. This explanation does not altogether explain. Canada, while it is a comparatively new country, is not a country of uneducated people. Some of the finest literature and art was produced in England in the early days of Britain. Shakespeare had not the opportunities for education that the candidate for the Arts and Letters Club has. He would be regarded as somewhat uncouth by G. H. Locke or Newton MacTavish. Shakespeare would certainly compare very unfavorably with Augustus Bridle, and John A. Cooper would not speak to him without a proper introduction by the inner circle.

It is not for the lack of education that Canada has failed to produce Art, i is rather through the slump in education. Education for its own sake will produce nothing but a nation of snobs. In the States there is a breathless eagerness on the part of young men and some older men, to secure degrees; this craving is so strong and the demand so extensive that quite a business is done in selling bogus M.As. D.Ds., etc., and many Canadians have secured quite imposing handles to their names at a very reasonable price. A degree is supposed to be the sine qua non of genius and the past-port to fame. A man is not judged by the size of his head, but by the length of his tail!

Education is not to be disparaged. It has taught men how to deport themselves, how to speak correctly—and many other accomplishments necessary for a fully civilized savage. But while education has done much for us it never yet made a genius, and too much of it has often spoilt one. It may be that this anxiety about education for its own sake, which is characteristic of this age, is killing all the originality and intellectual initiative of the rising generation. Our boys and girls must pass their exams by all means or the whole family is disgraced. No wonder they forsake the Muses, they were dosed with them at school, literature and art smell of spilt ink and the Fourth Reader.

THE PREMIER LANGUAGE.

SIR WILFRID LAURIER speaking to the students at Toronto said that, as a boy, he was sent to an English school where no one knew French. Is not this one of the best arguments against bilingualism in Ontario? It may be laid down as an axiom that no one can be an intelligent citizen of Canada who has not a thorough grounding in the English language. Sir Wilfrid, with all his ability, would never have been Premier of Canada but for his attendance at that English school, where no other language was spoken. ENGLISH IS THE PREMIER LANGUAGE BECAUSE IT IS THE LANGUAGE OF THE PREMIER.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A LOCAL CONTEMPORARY pleads for a more opportune time for municipal elections than the end of the year and in the midst of the holiday season. We are entirely in accord with this view. Christmas-tide is a time of peace and good-will towards all men, and election times are not.

AN ELECTION is the threshing time when we separate the chaff from the wheat; let us get rid of the chaff by all means. None of our past civic officials have anything to fear from the process, if they have done their duty by the city.

WE HAVE A WELL PAVED and lighted city this Christmas ; that is something accomplished and something done which ought to earn re-election for the best of our men—and perhaps "a night's repose" for others.

WE WANT STRONG MEN with transparent principles to settle some of the financial problems which face us as the result of our enterprise in bringing our city up-to-date. Men who will work for the love of their city. Let party and preference go, we want men.

THE RESULT of this election depends upon the man with the ballot paper and if he does not use it properly he is not worthy of it and deserves to be ruled by the Council of Women, and to have his streets patrolled by a full force of policewomen. Let Chief Thompson beware!

WHAT THE WORLD IS SAYING

A Divine Pact.

Lethbridge Herald.

The Conservative press attribute the good times which existed during the Laurier regime to Providence. Well, let us get Providence and Laurier working together again. The only alliance Borden has made, that with the Nationalists, has been a failure.

What Free Wheat Means.

Mail and Empire.

The United States' wheat crop this year is a vastly larger one than was the United States wheat crop of 1911. Had there been reciprocity in wheat last summer Canadian flour mills would have been stocked up with United States wheat at comparatively low prices before Canada's hard wheat was ready for harvesting. As it was, some of our mills were able to obtain large shipments of wheat from the United States at a price so far below that at the time current here as to make its importation profitable notwithstanding the duty. As Canada herself was favored with good crops, the question of disposing of its own large surplus of wheat would have been made more difficult with the United States market glutted and flour for the British market being manufactured in our own mills from United States wheat. Reciprocity in wheat would have been much to Canada's disadvantage this crop year.

The Lights of Home.

"Pilot, how far from home?
Not far, not far to-night.
A flight of spray, a sea-bird's flight,
A flight of tossing foam,
And then the lights of home.

"And yet again, how far?
And seems the way so brief?
These lights beyond the roaring reef
Were lights of moon and star,
Far, far, none knows how far.

"Pilot, how far from home?
The great stars pass away
Before him as a flight of spray,
Mount as a flight of foam.
I see the lights of home."

IS THERE ANY ART IN CANADA

Toronto News

Recently The Peterborough Review quoted with entire approval the statement by Professor Leacock, that Canada counted for nothing in literature, and in art about the same. The editor went a little out of his way to cast a few merry javelins at the Arts and Letters Club of Toronto. He said it was a "coterie of Socratic intellects," which comprised a sort of mutual admiration society. He took the attitude of Ezekiel. Standing on an eminence, he beheld the Valley of Toronto, full of artistic dry bones, and said: "Behold there were very many in the open valley, and lo, they were very dry."

But there must be a stirring amongst them, for the "coterie of Socratic intellects" has produced a Year Book of Canadian Art, which is well worth reading. Professor Leacock speaks in parables when he says that we have no literature and no art. Being a humorist, he dwells continually in an atmosphere of hyperbole. What he really means is that we have not enough of the Better Things of life. That is as true as taxes, and even truer, if we consider a recent assessment on a Woodland Hill.

Canada has done little in the field of art, but it would be stupid for us to put our farthing dip under a bushel and boldly deny the very existence of the flame. The Arts and Letters Club has chosen rather to put the candle in a candlestick; not to fall down in admiration before it, but to hope some day we shall have a tungsten light in its place.

The Year Book is typograhically attractive—coming from the press of J. M. Dent and Sons. It is profusely illustrated with well made engravings, not alone of portraits, but of notable paintings by Canadian artists. In the main it is well written, though the articles sometimes show the dangers of condensation. As a whole, however, it is a good book, moderate in statement and carefully edited.

There is some art in Canada. But we need to be very humble yet, for we are so devilishly determined to get money that most of us have no time for the realities, the things that feed the soul. We fill our bodies with champagne, and pate de foie gras till they are fat, while our starving souls ars as poor as Job's turkey. How difficult it will be to recognize people we knew on earth when we reach the Other Country! Many of them will be so thin.—Toronto News.

SCOTT WITHDRAWS BILL.

He Blames Temperance Party For Failure of Bar Abolition.

REGINA, Dec. 20.—Premier Scott yesterday withdrew the bill to abolish the bars in Saskatchewan, and also the bill for a plebiscite on the question of bringing the former into law. The Premier blames the temperance forces. He made a long speech reviewing the recent agitation for a plebiscite. The temperance leaders, he said, had refused to accept the proposal of the Government to make a fifty thousand minimum vote a condition of the plebiscite. When the proposal to make the minimum vote 40,000 was made their consent was so grudgingly given that he feared they would enter the fight with faint hearts, which would be an unnecessary handicap upon the plan. The Government supporters agreed to the withdrawal of the bill without question, but E. C. Tate, Lumsden, an Opposition member, expressed strong disapproval of the Government's action.

The Legislature prorogued last evening.

Big Concerns Announced.

By HAROLD MacGRATH

[Copyright, 1910, by Bobbs-Merrill Company.]

"I shall send for the mason this morning," said the admiral. "I've been dreaming of the Black Cat and all sorts of horrible things. I hate like sixty to spoil the old chimney, but we can't have this going on. We'll have it down at once. A fire these days is only a nice touch to the mahogany."

"But you must tell him to put back every brick in its place," said Laura. "I could not bear to have anything happen to that chimney. All the same, I am glad the matter is going to be cleared up. It has been nerve racking, and I have been all alone, waiting for I know not what."

"You haven't been afraid?" said Fitzgerald.

"I'm not sure that I haven't." She sighed.

"Nonsense!" cried the admiral.

"I am not afraid of anything I can see, but I do not like the dark. I do not like mysteries."

"You're the bravest girl I know, Laura," her father declared. "Now, Mr. Breitmann, if you don't mind."

"Shall we begin at once, sir?"

"You will copy some of my notes to begin with. Any time you're in doubt over a word speak to me. There will not be much outside of manuscript work. Most of my mail is sorted at my bankers and only important letters forwarded. There may be a social note occasionally. Do you read and write English as well as you speak it?"

"Oh, yes."

Laura invited Fitzgerald to the tennis court.

"In these shoes?" he protested.

"They will not matter. It is a cement court."

"But I shan't look the game. Tennis without flannels is like duck without apples."

"Bother! We'll play till the mason comes up. And mind your game. I've been runner up in a dozen tournaments."

And he soon found that she had not overrated her skill. She served strongly, volleyed beautifully and darted across the court with a fleetness and a surety both delightful to observe. So interested were they in the battle that they forgot all about the mason till the butler came out and announced that the desecration had begun.

In fact, the broad marble top was on the floor and the room full of impalpable dust. The admiral and the secretary were gravely stacking the bricks, one by one, as they came out.

"Found anything?" asked the girl breathlessly.

"Not yet, but Mr. Donovan here has just discovered a hollow space above the mantel line." The admiral sneezed.

Mr. Donovan in his usual free and happy way drew out two bricks and dropped them on the polished floor.

"There's your holler, sir," he said, dusting his hands.

Unbidden, Breitmann pushed his hand into the cavity. His arm went down to the elbow and he was forced to stand on tiptoe. He was pale when he withdrew his arm, but in his hand was a square metal case, about the size and shape of a cigar box.

"By cracky! What's the matter, Mr. Breitmann?" The admiral stepped forward solicitously.

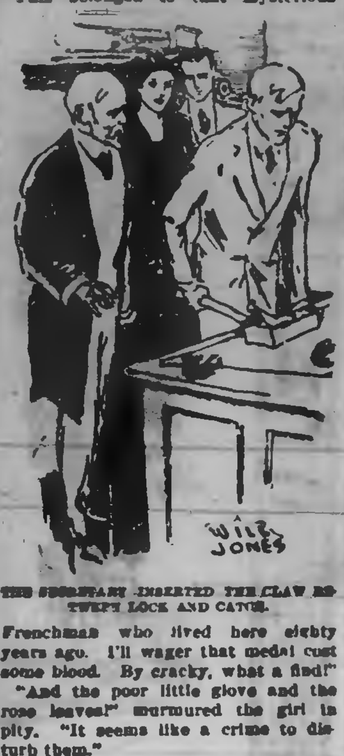
Breitmann swayed and fell against the side of the fireplace. "It is nothing: lost my balance for a moment. Will you open it, sir?"

"Lost his balance?" muttered Fitzgerald. "He looks groggy. Why?"

This was not a time for speculation. All rushed after the admiral, who laid the case on his desk, and took out his keys. None of them would turn in the ancient lock. With an impatient gesture, which escaped the others the secretary seized Mr. Donovan's hammer, inserted the claw between the lock and the catch and gave a powerful wrench. The lid fell back, crooked and scarred.

The admiral put on his mandarin spectacles. With his hands behind his back he bent and critically examined the contents. Then, very carefully, he extracted a packet of papers, yellow and old, bound with heavy cording. Beneath this packet was a medal of the Legion of Honor, some rose leaves and a small glove.

"Know what I think?" said the admiral, stilling the shake in his voice. "This belonged to that mysterious



THE SECRETARY INSERTED THE CLAW BETWEEN LOCK AND CATCH.

Frenchman who lived here eighty years ago. I'll wager that medal cost some blood. By cracky, what a find!"

"And the poor little glove and the rose leaves!" murmured the girl in pity. "It seems like a crime to disturb them."

To be continued.

BAD MONEY EXPERTS ARE ROUNDED UP

Five Men Are Arrested Near Lavaltrie and a Sixth is Taken in Montreal.

MONTREAL, Dec. 20.—Early yesterday the largest gang of counterfeiters ever arrested in this part of the country was taken into custody in a farm house five miles from the village of Lavaltrie. They were rounded up by Dominion and provincial police, led by Inspector Parkinson and Chief McCaskell.

Five men were taken into custody in the farmhouse where the plant was located, while the sixth member of the gang was arrested here by Detective Lapoint, who was sent in from Joliette by Chief McCaskell to make the arrest.

The men who were caught at the farmhouse and taken to the jail at Joliette were: Bartholomew Caron, Frederick Eaton, Edouard Pariseau, Philip Bousquet and Eugene Gagne. The man arrested here was Alfred Grenier, an engraver in the employ of the Herald Publishing Company.

Besides the arrest of the six men the police claim to have seized a most elaborate plant including a printing press, plates, specially prepared paper and everything necessary for the counterfeiting of United States ten-dollar certificates.

Chief McCaskell stated last night that the farmhouse where the gang operated was fitted up like an arsenal. Shotguns and revolvers with plenty of ammunition were found, and the gang evidently intended to put up a battle had they not been taken by surprise. It was before dawn when the police reached the house. They smashed down the doors and rushed into the house with drawn revolvers and were upon the counterfeiters almost before one of them could make a move to get out of bed.

The raiders left Montreal Thursday night and got off at L'Epiphanie, where they secured warrants for the arrest of the quintette. Then they left for Lavaltrie, where they remained until four o'clock in the morning. Confronted by revolvers in the hands of the police the counterfeiters became convinced that it would be useless to show fight. Every weapon in the house was seized and the five men were forced to dress.

The printing press, plates, paper and all the counterfeiting outfit found in the house, as well as the guns and revolvers belonging to the gang, was loaded into a farmer's wagon and taken to Lavaltrie to be shipped to Joliette, where it will be used as evidence against the gang when they are arraigned in court to-day.

Inspector Parkinson believes a flood of thousands of bogus $10 and $100 U. S. bills has been issued.

Complaints about the bogus bills were received by the Canadian Treasury Department at Ottawa from Toronto, Ottawa, Hamilton and most of the other big cities in Canada, Montreal appearing to be the distributing centre of a gang working with the counterfeiters at Joliette.

OFFICER IS SENTENCED

German Who Caused Trouble Gets Imprisonment

STRASSBURG, Germany, Dec. 20.—A sentence of 43 days' imprisonment was pronounced by a court-martial yesterday on Lieut. Baron Von Forstner, of the 99th Infantry, who was found guilty of a charge of cutting down with his sabre a lame shoemaker of Zabern, Alsace, on Dec. 2. The charge against him was wilful assault and causing great bodily harm by the illegal use of his weapon.

The sentence of imprisonment in a penitentiary involves the loss of his commission as an officer by Lieut. Baron Von Forstner.

Lieut. Von Forstner was the officer who brought about the recent troubles between the military and civilian population of Zabern by making insulting remarks in regard to the Alsatian citizens when he addressed the recruits of his company.

In his testimony Lieut. Von Forstner said that he had acted in the way he did under a sort of semi-compulsion, He had been threatened by his colonel with impeachment before a court of honor if he showed the slightest reluctance to use his weapon. He testified that the officers had received repeated orders from the German army headquarters and from the regimental commander to adopt an aggressive attitude, to stand no nonsense from civilians and to permit no insults or abuse.

Lieut. Von Forstner said he acted under the prevailing German assumption that an officer was irretrievably dishonored if he permitted himself to receive a blow.

Col. Von Reuter, the commander of the 99th Regiment, said he had instructed his officer to act as aggressively as possible. A Prussian officer must not permit disrespect to be shown to him, he said.

CHANCE FOR THE CONVICTS

Fifty of Younger Men May Work in Lumber Camps.

TORONTO, Dec. 20. — Mr. Alfred Fitzpatrick, superintendent of the Reading Camp Association, returned from a mining camp in the Sudbury district yesterday, where he had taken a paroled youth from the Kingston Penitentiary. This young man, who was sentenced to four years for theft, had about two years and five months to run, but was released to the association as an experiment. If he makes good, about fifty young prisoners will be released from the penitentiary in the spring and placed in the northern camps under the supervision of the Reading Camp Association teachers. The association hopes to be the means of releasing another youth from Kingston in a few days. He will be taken to another camp, and upon his behaviour depends the release of other young prisoners.

WILSON'S SECOND GREAT MEASURE GOES THROUGH

Last Vote on Legislation to Create National Banks to Stabilize Financial Affairs Shows a Majority of Twenty.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 20. — The administration currency reform bill, proposing a revision of the financial system of the United States and the creation of regional reserve banks to act as stabilizing elements in the banking and financial world, passed the Senate last night by a vote of 54 to 34.

Forces that had fought together for improvement and amendment of the measure to the last, divided when the final vote came. Senator Hitchcock, who had led the opposition to the bill, returned to the Democratic ranks, and Senator Weeks of Massachusetts, a banker, and one of the leaders on the Republican side, with five other Republicans and Senator Poindexter, Progressive, voted for the passage of the measure.

Wide differences exist between the form of the legislation passed by the Senate last night and the bill that passed the House several months ago. Democratic leaders already have partly adjusted these differences, however, and it was predicted last night that the bill would be completed by a conference committee and sent to President Wilson for his signature by Monday night.

Among the chief points of difference between House and Senate are the following:

The House provided for twelve regional banks; the Senate for from eight to twelve, discretion being left the federal reserve board.

The Senate added a provision creating a fund to guarantee the deposits of failed banks that are members of the reserve associations.

The House limited the rediscount of commercial paper at the regional banks to that maturing in 90 days; the Senate provided that 180-day agricultural paper could be accepted under certain limitations.

The gold reserve required of the regional banks against circulating notes was placed at 33 1-2 per cent. by the House and 40 per cent. by the Senate. Banks would be permitted to loan on five-year farm mortgages by the Senate bill, on one-year mortgage by the House bill.

Senator La Follette proposed two amendments just before the bill came to a vote, which caused a wild sensation. One of them was written into the bill and the other rejected by an overwhelming vote.

The first provided that "No United States Senator or representative in Congress shall be a member of the Federal reserve board, a director in a Federal reserve bank or an officer or director of any member bank."

This amendment was adopted without a roll call. The second amendment (rejected) provided that no member of the Federal reserve board, any officer or director of a regional or member bank should be a director or officer of any other bank, trust company, or insurance company.

PAIN NEARLY DROVE HIM MAD
Suffered Horribly Until He Turned To "Fruit-a-tives"

J. A. CORRIVEAU

DRYSDALE, ONT., June 15th. 1913
"I am a general storekeeper at the above address, and on account of the great good I have experienced from using "Fruit-a-tives", I recommend them strongly to my customers. They were a great boon to me, I can tell you, for about two years ago, I was laid up in bed with vomiting and a terrific pain at the base of my skull. The pain nearly drove me mad. Doctors feared it would turn to inflammation of the brain but I took "Fruit-a-tives" steadily until I was cured. I have gained fifteen pounds since taking "Fruit-a-tives" and I firmly believe they saved me from a disastrous illness."

For Headaches, Neuralgia, Rheumatism and other diseases arising from an impure condition of the blood, "Fruit-a-tives" is invaluable and infallible.

Patrick and their children were at the bedside. Mrs. Patrick, as Mrs. Addie M. Francis, was married to Patrick soon after his conviction for the murder of Rice. For the ensuing twelve years she devoted her entire time and expended $50,000 in efforts to prove Patrick's innocence and gain a pardon for him.

Don't Be a Jack-of-All-Trades

The day of the "Jack-of-all-trades" is passed. This is the time of the specialist, of the man qualified to do some one thing to the queen's taste—which means to the satisfaction of a critical boss. No concern can afford to place a high-grade equipment in the hands of low-grade men. Competition forces employers to meet skill with skill.

To make it short, have you any special equipment? Is there anything in you to command big pay?

Every month upwards of 400 I. C. S. students write to Scranton to tell of positions secured or bettered—of earnings increased and prospects brightened—through study of I. C. S. Courses. Last month the number was 416. The letters come from every section and from all sorts and conditions of men. Some of the writers live in Ontario—some live in British Columbia; some began with no more education than ability to read and write—some were college graduates; some had a good deal of spare time—some had to figure on every spare minute; some were well-to-do—some were obliged to save the pennies.

If you are a "live wire"—if you wish to make sure of the job you want—there is an I. C. S. way for you. To find out all about it without cost, mark and mail the coupon. Doing so will commit you to nothing, place you under no obligation, and may prove to be the turning point in your career.

Dad's Xmas Surprise—

New Scale Williams Player Piano

With The Meister Touch

The family did not know how big dad's heart was until this Xmas. It was not all dad's fault, though. He did not believe that it was possible for him to buy a player piano on such favorable terms. So when we came to dad and told him that we would let him have a real New Scale Williams Meister-Touch Player for $25.00 down and $15.00 each month until the whole price of $700.00 was paid in full, he said, "I'll take it and it's certainly the best $25 worth I ever got in Xmas presents."

We have other styles of Players for other fathers, at greater or smaller prices. Ask about them.

READING AND ITS PLEASURES

By F. M. Dela Fosse.

By far the greater portion of Canadian Biography treats of those who in one way or another have rendered themselves eminent in the public service of their country. This is not to be wondered at, seeing that Canada is yet young and her progeny of poets, prose-writers, philosophers, and exponents of the fine arts are small in number. When a nation is in the making there is not much chance afforded for the development of men and women of literary and artistic genius. As every schoolboy, thanks to the efficient system of education in vogue in our schools, knows the careers of our statesmen and early explorers almost by heart there is no need to mention them here further than to state in what measure the library is supplied with information concerning their lives and labors. In this respect the "Makers of Canada" series, in the History section will be found of the greatest service by readers and students alike. In addition, there are on the shelves Lives of Sieur D'Iberville, Father Lacombe, William Lyon Mackenzie, Sir John Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Lord Strathcona, Bishop Strachan, and Lord Haliburton ,as well as memorials of several of our Governors-General; also reminiscences of Sir George Ross and a volume by the late Sir Richard Cartwright, dealing with the political foes and friends of his day.

Although there is no life of Judge Haliburton in the library, we get some slight insight into his career in reading that of his son, Lord Haliburton, by J. B. Atlay. In literature he is better known by his nom de plume of "Sam Slick." Judge Haliburton has a special claim to notice as the originator of that peculiar type of humor that has had among its later exponents, Bret Hart, Artemus Ward, Max Adeler, Josh Billings, Bill Nye and Mark Twain. He was undoubtedly a very able man, born at Windsor, Nova Scotia in 1796, he was educated at King's College, and at the early age of 32 was appointed Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas of his province. In 1856 he retired to England, where he entered parliament as member for Launceston, a place that in after years gave Lord Halsbury his introduction to public life. The Judge was not only a good writer, albeit a somewhat vulgar one; he was also a very far-sighted man. Many years before the appearance of railways in this country he warmly advocated their institution as a means of linking the provinces together. The germ of the National Policy may be traced in the expression he gave vent to on a visit to the falls of Niagara:—"What a 'tarnal waste of water-power."

Father Lacombe

The Life of Father Lacombe deals with the career of a very deovted member of the Roman Catholic Church. His life work of close on sixty-five years has been carried on amongst the pagan Indians and half-breeds of our Canadian Northwest and there is probably no missionary of any denomination living in the world today to whom such length of service may be accredited as to Father Lacombe. Beloved and respected by all who know him he deserves mention not only for the nobility of his life but also for the great part he played in the last Riel outbreak in keeping the Blackfoot nation loyal to the Crown.

Mr. W. C. Van Horne, in his preface to Miss Hughes' book, writes as follows: "Near the Lake of the Woods at sunrise one morning in 1882 I saw a priest standing on a flat rock, his crucifix in his right hand and his broad hat in the other, silhouetted against the rising sun, which made a golden halo about him, talking to a group of Indians—men, women and pappooses—who were listening with reverent attention. It was a scene never to be forgotten and the noble and saintly countenance of the priest brought it to me that this must be Father Lacombe of whom I had heard so much; and it was." And again he writes: "The noble and elevating example of devotion and self-sacrifice that has been given us by Father Lacombe in his more than sixty years of work among the Indians of Western Canada should not be lost, for he would be stony-hearted indeed who would not be softened and humanized by such an example, which must bring even to the irreligious a feeling of profound respect for the faith which inspired and sustained this good man." These are beautiful words and form a kindly and sympathetic tribute from one whom the world at large has regarded as a fair type of the apostle of material progress, to one who is no worthy representative of the apostolate of spiritual progress. On reading it, something in the imagery and the wording of the first paragraph carried my thoughts back a century and a half to the words of another writer who was great in the republic of letters as the gentleman just quoted is in the empire of finance. Who does not know them? "It was at Rome on the 15th of October, 1764, as I sat musing amidst the ruins of the Capitol while the barefooted friars were singing vespers in the temple of Jupiter, that the idea of writing the decline and fall of the city first started to my mind." And it carried me back also over a period of thirty years to the country that has been the scene of Father Lacombe's labors. One needs to have known the Northwest at that period to even faintly appreciate the difficulties that had to be encountered in the matter of transportation over the territory covered by him in his missionary journeyings.

The Wild Northwest

Father Lacombe entered upon his work many years before the Canadian Pacific Railway passed through the country. Even thirty years ago the line was far from complete, for many stretches along Lake Superior and through the Northwest were unconnected. Would-be settlers and survey parties were obliged to make long detours through the north western states of the union, or travel from the head of Lake Superior over the Dawson route in order to reach Manitoba. The prairies were still vast pasture lands where the buffalo roamed in isolated twos and threes and antelopes in large flocks skipped gracefully along the hillocks within easy range of the traveller. Signs of civilization were few and far between and only to be found in small settlements of half-breeds, leagues upon leagues distant from each other. Here and there over the seemingly illimitable reaches of the prairies one came upon migratory bands of Indians, bound from one reserve to another, or on five or six tepees in front of which sprawled the noble red men, covered with frowsy blankets, smoking the pipe of peace whilst their squaws busied themselves in the domestic concerns of their establishments. Those were the days when the great Hudson Bay Company was still a power in the land and the outward and visible sign of its greatness was to be found in long lines of freighters which were to be met on all the glistening trails wending their slow way from squaters posts to the headquarters of the Company in Winnipeg. Into this wilderness, peopled by Indians, half-breeds and adventurers, Father Lacombe willingly cast himself and there he will in all probability remain contentedly, true to the last to the dusky children of his faith.

He arrived when the faint streaks of the Christian sunrise were beginning to dispel the mists of paganism and he has lived to witness in the land he loves so well, perhaps the quickest social and moral material development that the world has everseen.

A fool's idea of a good joke is one he is able to put over on the other fellow.

THE MAYORALTY

VOTE FOR

Wm. BULLER

THE PEOPLE'S CANDIDATE FOR MAYOR FOR 1914.

J. J. HARTLEY

FOR

MAYOR

To the Electors of the City of Peterborough:

Ladies and Gentlemen,—At the earnest request of a large number of the ratepayers I have consented to be a candidate for the position of Mayor for the year 1914.

Being born and having lived all my life in Peterborough, and my whole life's savings being invested in Peterborough, I naturally have a deep interest in the welfare and prosperity of the City.

Should I be elected I promise you that I will guard to the very best of my ability, the interests of the ratepayers and will oppose all unnecessary expenditure. I will do my utmost to keep down the ever increasing rate of taxation consistent with needs of a growing City.

I may say that I am in favor of municipal ownership and am in favor of having all city work done by our own people instead of bringing in outsiders to do it.

I will endeavor to see that the ratepayers get value for every dollar that is expended.

I have had considerable experience in municipal matters, having served ten years in the Council and fourteen years on the Board of Education, being Chairman of that Board for two years, I was also Chairman of the Board of Health for several years, so that you will see that I am not without a fair share of experience.

Should you do me the honor to elect me as Mayor of our City I will do my best to serve you to the extent of my ability.

Yours respectfully,
J. J. HARTLEY

MAYOR FOR 1914

G. A. Gillespie

Asks your support and influence to ensure his election as

MAYOR FOR 1914

To Electors of CENTRE WARD

Having decided to offer my services as Alderman for No. 2 or Centre Ward, at the request of a large number of ratepayers I pledge myself, if elected, to assist in the administration of the city's affairs to the best of my ability. My platform briefly is Lower Taxation. Careful scrutiny of city's finances. Advancement of city's Industrial interest. Extension of the present Street Paving scheme; and all things calculated to make Peterborough a bigger and better city.

Soliciting your vote and influence.

Yours for a bigger and better city.

A. H. STRATTON

No. One Ward

TO THE RATEPAYERS

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I solicit your vote and influence in my favor as a candidate for election as Alderman from No. 1 Ward.

If elected I will do the utmost in my power to promote the interests of the city at large.

Yours respectfully,
JOSEPH SAUNDERS.

The Victorian Government has authorized increases in wages of railway employes which will involve an additional expenditure of about $325,000.

To the Ratepayers —OF— WEST WARD

LADIES' AND GENTLEMEN,

Your votes are earnestly desired in favor of Jos. W. Worth, as Alderman for this ward

Respectfully,
JOS. W. WORTH.

When the warship hits a rock the naval appropriation goes into the sinking fund.

A motor-driven machine, operated by one man, has been invented to harvest sugar cane and deliver it ready for the mill.

TO THE RATEPAYERS — OF — Centre Ward

Ladies and Gentlemen,

I spoke with a merchant at his store door, and he said he supposed the people would go ahead and elect a raft of dead heads to the Council. In fact he said more dead-heads. That merchant is a pessimist, and has a grouch.

But he may have reasons. His views of things comes from seeing men go into the Council, and who have made promises—promised too much. Promised to do things they really didn't believe they could or would do. It is the popular thing.

I am not—please observe—making promises. I don't just know what I can do until I get there—if I ever do. But I can assure the ratepayers that I will try and be as useful, helpful and diligent in their and your service as I can be... That covers it.

I shall be very glad to receive your vote, and hope to be so favored.

Respectfully,
FRANK H. DOBBIN.

To the Electors of Peterboro:
Ladies and Gentlemen:—

Last year a large number of ratepayers requested me to be a candidate for Water Commissioner in opposition to Mr. Moore. I not only declined to be a candidate but did what I could to prevent opposition. The Commissioners at that time had law suits on with the contractors where about thirty thousand dollars of the people's money was at stake. Mr. Moore being a lawyer, I considered he should be the best posted man on the Commission to fight the contractors and in the interest of the City, it would be a mistake to remove him.

This year I have again been waited upon by a large representation of the ratepayers who believe that with my thorough knowledge of all the waters in this district and my many years' experience as alderman, I should be a capable man for the position. I have consented to be a candidate and my past record in the Council I think, is proof that if elected, will give you faithful and honest service.

The taking over of the Hydro-Electric system will require a great deal of time—more than any man who has a large business to attend to, can spare. Not being in business I can give all the time required, and if necessary, will make a personal inspection of every house in the city and see that rich and poor are treated alike.

I can see no reason, with the large body of ready-made reservoirs of the Otonabee River there should be any shortage of water for either household or lawn service, or why there should not be a reduction in the water rates. A good supply of good water is a necessity in every house and should be available for the people at a low rate.

To the ratepayers who are now residents of the City and not personally acquainted with me, would say that for a number of years I occupied the position of alderman, and always stood at the head of the poll both as a representative of No. 3 Ward and also after the Ward system was abolished.

General street railway extention and cheap transportation like cheap light and water, should be the goal of our municipal government. When a worker can have his house and garden anywhere, and is not tied to a locality his prospects are greatly improved.

Trusting that the ratepayers who want good service in the future as I have given the past, will give me their hearty support.

I am, yours very truly,
J. B. McWILLIAMS.

THE CITY MAY TAKE THE AUBURN POWER HOUSE

Some New Developments in the Hydro Power and Light Service.

Growing out of facts elicited in the recent court proceedings to take possession of the distribution lines of the Peterboro Light and Power Company, as under the expropriation steps undertaken on behalf of the city, some new developments may take place and which may further on result in the city taking over the Auburn power house and dam, if such should be deemed advisable to do.

The facts briefly are these:

In 1912, the city secured legislation to expropriate the plant of the Light and Power Company in pursuance of the proposition to line up with the Hydro Electric, a by-law was submitted to the people and passed, to raise the sum of $120,000 which was to pay the expense incurred. In 1913 the city further secured an amendment to facilitate the proceedings.

Up to the time of securing the amended legislation, the Auburn Power was not owned by the Peterboro Light and Power Co., which acquired it during this year and after the legislation in favor of the city had ben secured and the by-law voted on. The city's estimate to the Hydro Electric was made to cover the assumed value of the visible assets of the Light and Power Co., at the time, to pay for the lines and for some improvement. The Light and Power Co. gave no intimation that they had acquired the Auburn Power.

On application to the County Judge, it was learned that the power site, dam and powerhouse belonged to the Light and Power Co., and as the by-law specified that the city in taking over the distribution lines would take also the plant, it is a question if the dam and power house is not included. It is all a question of definition.

The city council is considering the situation and so far give no intimattion of what the course to be adopted will be. That will be decided nod oubt, after consideration.

It would seem that, taking a broad view of the situation, that the city would be quite warranted in taking on an additional proposition. In any event, it is bound to buy current from the Hydro Electric.

If the city owned the power development as it stands, it would get it's current for all time at first cost, which means the interest on the investment, the up-keep and service and wage charges together with a sinking fund to pay it off in a term of years. The whole aspect of the case will be considered very carefuly. It may well be that having been enterprising in installing the Hydro service, the city might as well go a step further and acquire a municipal owned power for itself. Hundreds of places on the continent would jump at the chance.

WOMEN CAUGHT

LONDON, Dec. 20.—The delegates of the twelve nations, including Canada, represented at the International Conference on Safety at Sea, were received by King George at Buckingham Palace yesterday afternoon. Each of them was introduced and presented separately in the throne room by Sydney Buxton, president of the Board of Trade. His Majesty extended to them a most cordial greeting and emphasized his personal interest as a sailor in the success of the conference.

A woman, apparently of French nationality, attempted to smuggle herself into the palace under cover of the crowd of delegates, but a policeman saw her and pounced upon her. The woman protested volubly that she was going to see Queen Mary and created some disturbance when she was led away from the precincts. Apparently she was not a suffragette.

Seeking Charter for Line.

OTTAWA, Dec. 20.—The Norfolk and Elgin Railway will apply to Parliament next session for incorporation. The proposed route is from Simcoe westerly, through the Townships of Woodhouse and Charlotte, southerly through North Walsingham, then southerly to the shore of Lake Erie, and from there to Port Burwell.

The Western Central Railway want extension of time for the beginning of construction and other railways to guarantee its bonds.

Cat Got Ashore.

KINGSTON, Dec. 20. — "And the cat came back." This old saying applies to the case of a pet cat on the barge Parsons. Three weeks ago the barge foundered in the lake, two miles from shore, the crew being rescued after tremendous exertions. The barge went to pieces inside of three days. On the afternoon of the wreck men on duty at the lake water pumping station heard scratching and meowing at the door of the lake side and open it. A small black and white kitten, wet, miserable and bedraggled entered, and with apparent familiarity jumped to the top of the asbestos-covered boilers and went to sleep. It has just been identified as the pet of the crew of the Parsons.

B. C. Deputy Minister Gives Englishmen Good Advice.

LONDON, Dec. 20.—(C. A. P. Cable.)—Deputy Minister Scott, of British Columbia, offered some very frank advice to the intending investor or immigrant at the Royal Colonial Institute luncheon yesterday. "Do not expect one hundred per cent. profit without risks," he said.

"Many Englishmen have bought land without the slightest idea of land values." He had heard people declare that any fool could farm. He said there was not the slightest doubt that Vancouver would eventually rival San Francisco, although things were rather slow just now. It was, however, absolutely necessary to get money for legitimate improvement.

We cannot too soon convince ourselves how easily we may be dispensed with in the world. We think that we alone are the life of the circle in which we move. In our absence we fancy that life will come to a general pause, and, alas, the gap that we leave is scarcely perceptible, so quickly is it filled!

Not Used to Sleepers.

The nervous old lady approached the porter in a sleeping car and asked:

"Oh, porter, where do I sleep?"

"What's the numbah ob yoah berth, ma'am?" he asked.

She looked at him questioningly for a minute and then replied, "I don't see what that has to do with it, but if you must know, it is third; there was a brother and sister born before me."—Exchange.

CHARGED WITH GAMBLING.

Two Men and Two Women Arrested In Toronto.

TORONTO, Dec. 20.—In continuance of their crusade against local handbooks, still two more men were arrested yesterday afternoon charged with conducting a gaming house.

For over a week the detectives had been keeping close watch on room No. 111, St. James' Chambers, corner of Adelaide and Church streets, and at precisely two o'clock yesterday afternoon Staff Inspector McKinney, Constables Jackson and Massey and Plainclothesmen Dunn and McConnell smashed the office door from its hinges and arrested A. J. Horton, 179 Geary avenue, and William Gallagher, 156 Dovercourt road, as keepers. With them as frequenters of the house were arrested two women, Edith Doyle and Mary Denning of 88 Church street. The women were employed ostensibly as clerks in the business.

A mass of books and betting records were gathered in, the records showing that there was being bet from $900 to $1,000 daily on horse races.

Church Barber Shop Opened.

NEW YORK, Dec. 20.—A special barber is the latest innovation in church life. St. George's Episcopal Church, which the late J. Pierpont Morgan endowed with half a million dollars, has installed a barber shop for the choir. Rev. Karl Reiland, the rector, in announcing the new feature yesterday, said:

"For the sake of uniformity in the appearance of our choir boys on Sundays and as a slight evidence of parochial appreciation we have assigned a special barber to the boys on Saturday mornings and on Sundays before services."

Boundaries of Albania Settled.

FLORENCE, Italy, Dec. 20.—The international commission for the delimitation of the Albanian frontier yesterday decided unanimously to abide by any decision which may be reached in London.

The commission appointed to delimit the northern boundary of Albania has, it is understood, adjourned until April 2 next. The southern boundary has been decided on provisionally from Cape Stylos to Koritza, but its precise course has not yet been laid down.

Worth the Penalty.

John, four years old, was trying to run the lawn mower, which he had been forbidden to touch.

His mother came to the door and told him to stop it, but John ran the mower down the strip of lawn and back again before he stopped.

"You will have to come into the house and stay for an hour," said his mother.

"Why did you run that mower after I told you to stop?" she asked.

"Well, mamma," said John, "I'd rather have run it twice and have to stay in the house for an hour than not run it at all."—National Monthly.

Winter Navigation.

QUEBEC, Dec. 20.—A company has been organized in this city with J. A. Fafard as president to promote winter navigation in the lower St. Lawrence. The company propose to run a weekly steamer, winter as well as summer, from Matane in connection with the Gulfport terminal railway to Godbout on the north shore, thence to Clark City, Seven Islands. The company is asking for a mail subsidy and has the support of the Quebec Board of Trade as a step in the direction of winter navigation of the St. Lawrence.

Self Government for Provinces.

MADRID, Dec. 20.—Premier Dato yesterday presented to King Alfonso for his signature a decree involving the principle of decentralization extending the rights of local self-government to the Spanish provinces. measure generally is commented on favorably.

MUCH TIMBER LOST.

Gales In North Have Destroyed Big Forest Wealth.

TORONTO, Dec. 20.—Millions of feet of first class timber on crown lands have been felled in the north country by the tremendous gales which have driven across within the last few weeks. The Department of Lands and Forests is now engaged in disposing of this at a reduced figure, to contractors who will take it out immediately.

The region particularly affected lies north and east of the Soo and east to Merrick Township on the T. & N. O. Thirty-four townships under timber license suffered severely and the Missisauga forest reserve in like measure.

The C.N.R. will take a large part of that damaged in the Nipissing district at $5 per thousand for blown-down timber, and $12.25 for that standing in the same locality. Direct loss would be felt if this offer were refused.

Deputy Minister Aubrey White states that the timber be removed before the borers attack it and destroy it utterly.

The Panama Canal.

About 2,500 employees will be required.

Freight will be charged $1.20 a ton; passengers are free.

American coastwise ships may pass through free of charges.

The cost of operating the canal will exceed $4,000,000 annually.

Time required to go through the canal, from ten to twelve hours.

The interstate commerce commission has jurisdiction over canal traffic.

Warships of all nations may pass through the canal, but cannot linger more than twenty-four hours at either end in time of war.

To pay interest on the investment and operating expenses approximately $15,000,000 revenue per annum will be needed.—Leslie's Weekly.

Feeling Against Colombia.

PANAMA, Dec. 20.—An anti-Colombian demonstration took place here late Thursday night. A procession was formed at about 9 o'clock in the evening and marched through the streets, the participants waving torches and letting off firecrackers. The disorder increased toward midnight, when the crowd proceeded to some houses occupied by Colombians and threw stones at the windows and uttered threats.

The trouble was brought about by an article by a local writer reflecting on the Colombians which was replied to by a Colombian resident.

HINDU'S STRATEGY FAILS.

Herman Singh Loses Last Round In Struggle and Is Deported.

VANCOUVER, Dec. 20. — Herman Singh, the Hindu who has been the subject of strenuous litigation on the part of his friends in efforts to prevent his deportation, has lost out in his fight with the immigration authorities. Yesterday he lost the last and fatal round of the conflict. Late last night he was deported on the steamer Empress of India and taken back to Hong Kong.

Justice Macdonald held that the man had been properly found guilty of misrepresentation by a properly constituted board of enquiry, and that he must pay the penalty of being deported.

A new and sensational development was given to the proceedings by the disclosures that a plot existed whereby the signature and official statement of Immigration Inspector Malcolm R. Reid had been obtained to the photograph of Herman Singh and others long before the man ever visited the country.

FARMERS HEAR THE WESTERNERS

What a lot of farmers there must be in this district! And Peterborough calls itself an industrial centre! Farmers, more farmers, and yet more farmers flocked into the Oriental at noon to-day to dine and to discuss the urgent problems of subduing the soil and feeding the hungry millions of Canada.

"These are the men upon which the future welfare of Canada depends," said one professional man of the city to another, as they stood amid the hard-handed and stern-browed sons of the soil in the hall of the Oriental. "If we can organize these men and guide them with wisdom and far-seeing statesmanship there is nothing that it would be impossible to do."

The Men From the West.

Mr. Cowan was called upon to propose a toast to the men from the west. He said that the Grain Growers' Guide was conducted by the farmers of the west. The editor, Mr. Chipman, was well known throughout Canada for the work he has done to organize the farmers of the west.

Mr. Chipman on rising, said that he did not expect to meet with so large an audience. He said that the Grain Growers' Asociation had done a great work in organising the grain growers. He gave a brief account of the work of the association of elecally in regard to the erection of elevators. This was a time when the grain grower was in the hands of unscrupulous men and now the movement has a membership of over 50,000.

Local associations were formed and then centrel conferences were organized. They forced the railways to give their cars when they were wanted. In 1905 legislation was put through to the effect that the farmers had as much right to the association had as much right to the cars as the owners of the elevators. This was the chief clause in this charter of liberty for it freed the farmers from the domination of the grain monopoly.

Their organization found that there were many other subjects of vital importance such as tariff, freight, banking interest, etc. A few years ago Sir Wilfred Laurier went to the west and the farmers put their case before him very forcibly. He said when he left Brandon he thought the tariff was all right, but I shall certainly tell Mr. Fielding to spit on his hands and look into it. He said that he saw that the protection was wrong. He said he would support a commission, but the farmers said we don't want a commission, but action. The same thing happened to Mr. Borden when he went out afterwards.

The farmers wanted a square deal and for this reason the grain growers' guide came into existence. They wanted a paper that was not tied up with any party. It was founded and supported by the Association.

The grain combine became annoyed and determined that they would put an end to it. They hired a press agent at $4,000 per year to buy space in Tory and Grit papers. He wrote letters to the papers criticizing the Grain Growers Association, and favoring the combine.

TWO DISPLAYS THAT ARE MUCH ADMIRED

Among the many beautfully decorated Christmas windows in the city the two artistic displays of the Peterborough Hardware Company are the principal ones of attraction on George Street.

The north window with its numerous suggestions as to the Christmas presents in the silverware line, comprises such goods as the Rogers' 1847, better known as the Silver Plate that wears and also Neridan Hollow ware is very prominent.

The south window shows a more general line such as the new features in the culinary line, all ideal presents. This year the firm are featuring the electric coffee dishes.

Owing to the heavy increase in business, the Peterborough Hardware have this year increased their stock by one-third its usual amount.

SINGER OF HIGH STANDARD

Miss Florence Hinckle, who has been engaged by the Conservatory Orchestra, for the concert in the Grand Opera House, on January 16, has recently filled three engagements with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is among the artists engaged by the same incomparable orchestra for the season of 1913-14. Every sincere artist has reason to point with pride for the privilege of singing with this orchestra, and when re-engagements follow, it is sufficient evidence that the singer measured up to the high standard of those who control the destinies of the Boston Symphony.

LOOK OUT FOR THIS MAN

Star Boarder Leaves Without Paying for His Board.

LINDSAY, Dec. 22.—Mrs. Shea, a lady residing on Glenelg St., south ward, is one boarder less today, as well as out of pocket to the extent of $35, while two other young lodgers are minus valuable time pieces, a railway brakeman by the name of George Stevenson having taken French leave.

On Thursday night last Stevenson failed to return to his lodging house, and on Friday the suspicions of the landlady were aroused. This morning the case was placed in the hands of Chief Chilton, who has scattered post cards broadcast, giving a description of Stevenson, and asking for apprehension.

Stevenson was a star boarder and quite a favorite. He is also quite popular on the road, and his friends are surprised and shocked to hear of his sudden departure. Chief Chilton hopes to have him back in town early this week.

YOUNG GIRL WHO WAS MISSING IS FOUND DYING IN FIELD

ELOPED WITH LINDSAY MAN

Hubby's Charms, However, Reclaimed the Erring One.

A Barrie printer arrived in Lindsay on yesterday morning's train to claim his wife, whose affections had been alienated by a certain young Lindsay man, who for many years has been engaged here in the horse business. It must have been love at first sight when the Barrie woman cast her eyes upon the round plump form of the Lindsay Appolo as they had only been acquainted a few days when the elopment took place. During this time her husband was in Galt providing a home for this rantipole adventuress who essayed a honeymoon trip with her newly acquired love.

On arriving in town the couple took up their quarters with a friend in the south ward, where they lived as man and wife until the arrival of husband No. 1. After much persuasion on his part she accompanied him home, leaving town on the 6:23 train last evening.—Lindsay Warder.

Technical Society

The Technical Society will hold the annual Christmas Dinner in Coleman's Bros. dining hall on Tuesday evening, Dec. 23, at 7:30. At nine o'clock a musical program will be held in the Society's room and there will also be a Christmas tree.

Finnish Servant Had Been Missing For Three Weeks and the Police Hunted in Vain---She Dies in House of Man Who Discovered Her Without Giving Any Clue to Adventures.

TORONTO, Dec. 22.—Unconscious from hunger and exposure, and almost lifeless, Anne Yakinson, the Finnish girl who has been missing from her place of employment at Annesley Hall, Victoria College, for three weeks, was found by John Dew near a corn stook in his field at the southwest corner of Forest Hill road and Eglinton avenue yesterday morning about 11 o'clock. The girl died in Mr. Dew's home a few minutes after she had been taken in.

Attracted to the spot by the moans of the dying girl, Mr. Dew at first attempted to elicit from her some information as to how she got there; failing in this he carried her to his home, summoned Dr. Bond of Yonge street, but in spite of all the restoratives administered, she died before the arrival of the doctor. Near where she was lying on the ground was found her hat, coat and gloves, lying in a pile as if they had been thrown there.

The deepest mystery surrounds the disappearance of the girl. Three weeks ago, in company with Mardta Diunqvist, a Finnish domestic of 67 Howland street, she visited a picture show, after which the girls parted at the corner of Spadina and Bloor. Since that time Miss Yakinson has not been seen, although a reward of $500 was offered for her discovery.

In the minds of the police officials there is no doubt but what she was abducted by unknown persons and kept somewhere for the past three weeks.

James Lindala, a prominent Finnish Torontonian, who has been active in the search, declares she has undoubtedly been a victom of white slavery, and believes the girl has been carried to the field where she was found during Sunday night. The fact of her hat and coat and gloves being found in a pile beside her, he says, proved this conclusively.

A strong smell of stale beer from the clothes on the body lends additional weight to Mr. Lindala's statement. According to Dr. Bond, who examined the body, the smell of stale beer would last for weeks. The body was unmarked, except for the face, which was badly scratched. Dr. Bond's opinion as to the cause of death last night was that she had died from starvation and the night's exposure in her weakened condition.

STEEL WORK FOR THE TURNBULL BUILDING

The steel structural work for the building at the corner of Simcoe and George Streets, to be occupied by the J. C. Turnbull Company, is making rapid strides towards completion.

The contractors are McGregor & McIntyre of Toronto and Mr. John Douglas, an old boy of Lindsay, is superintending the work. Of late years Mr. Douglas has been in Atlanta.

THE MAYOR WITHDRAWS

He Will not be Candidate for Utilities' Commission

It will be quite a surprise to the citizens to learn that Mayor Bradburn has withdrawn as a candidate for Utilities Commissioner. After seriously considering the situation, he has decided on this course and unless another candidate comes to the front, the contest will be between Mr. R. Hicks and Mr. J. B. McWilliams.

The Mayoralty

There is no change in the Mayoralty situation. Mr. Jas. Kendry has stated that he may possibly offer himself as a candidate and it is probable that he will make a definite statement this week. Ald. Gillespie, Ald. Buller and Mr. J. J. Hartley have entered vigorously into the campaign.

For the Council

Nomination Day will be held one week from today, and the elections one week later.

For aldermen, Messrs. W. S. Robinson and Joseph Saunders are running in the South Ward. The candidates in the West Ward are Ald. Duffus, ex-Ald. Jas. Brown, and Jos. W. Worth.

In the Centre Ward Messrs. A. H. Stratton, H. P. Morgan, and F. H. Dobbin will be the contestants, and in the North Ward, Ald. Johnston will be opposed by Dr. Holloway.

It is possible that Ald. Anderson will be opposed in the East Ward, but so far the opposition is confined to the prospective.

PROF. MULVENEY LIKES NEW LIGHTS

Prof. R. L. Mulveney, of Toronto, who has been spending a few days in Peterboro, was particularly impressed with the new Hydro illumination and the bright appearance of The Review.

The Professor declared that Toronto's claim to being the best illuminated city in the Dominion was questionable when one compared it to the splendid lighting of Peterboro.

Give people what they think they want instead of what they really need and they'l go on their way rejoicing.

Frank Bourbonais did not Heed Warning of Other Boys

Had it not been for the presence of several boys who gave quick assistance, Frank Bourbonais, aged eleven, would have ben drowned, late yesterday afternoon.

The lad was playing on the ice near the trestle bridge on the spur line to the Quaker Oats plant and as youngsters will do, he refused to heed the warnings of others and walked about, pounding thin ice with a stick.

The result was that the ice broke and he went into the water. Kenneth Heard and several other boys were near and they used an old punt, which fortunately was close at hand, and after no little difficulty, succeeded in rescuing Bourbonais.

They applied first aid and then carried the lad to his home at 221 George Street. Dr. Mann was called and in a short time the youngster was out of danger.

It was from this home that the father was arrested by the police and charged in Police Court Friday morning with assaulting his wife. A razor was used and injuries inflicted on the woman, necessitated her being taken to the hospital. She has since returned home but is confined to her bed.

SUNDAY GAME INTERRUPTED

Fines Were Imposed in Police Court This Morning.

Four youths, who were interrupted in a game of poker, Sunday morning, were each fined $10 in police court this morning. A fifth player was fined $20 as it was his second appearance on the same charge. P. C. Phymster made the arrest.

BANK OF COMMERCE

On Friday last the annual meeting of that old and reliable financial institution, The Bank of Commerce, took place, when the statement to Nov. 29, was issued. It was a most gratifying one to both stock holders and depositors, the net profits being $2,992,951 for the year. In this general increase of business the local branch bore its just share under the management of Mr. W. H. Dunsford. A full statement of the business will be published in The Review at a future date.

TO-NIGHT'S EVENTS

Meeting of Peterboro Baseball Club at Bank of Montreal Chambers.

Meeting of curlers at the curling rink.

Young People's meetings in the city Churches.

P. C. I. Rugby Club dance at Conservatory of Music Hall.

Christmas Cheer entertainment at St. Paul's.

Entertainment at Protestant Home.

THE PETERBOROUGH TEMPLE BAND.

Christmas weather may be missing but the citizens still have the Temple Band. That organization, as is customary, will commence serenading Tuesday night in the business section of the city and on Christmas Day citizens will be serenaded by the band, who will endeavor to add to the spirit of the day, by playing Christmas music, which all enjoy so much. It is not necessary to repeat what has been said on previous occasions relative to the many good points about the band and The Review has no doubt but that this tarented band of musicians will receive a cordial reception at the hands of the citizens of Peterborough.

BERLIN TANNERY GUTTED; WATER PRESSURE WAS POOR

Finished Stock and the Store House Saved From the Flames

Canadian Press Despatch

BERLIN, Dec. 22.—The large tannery of the Breitaupt Leather Co., was gutted by fire this morning. The loss estimated at seventyfive thousand dollars, is covered by insurance. The finished stock and the building in which it was stored were saved.

The fire started in the bark mill about eight-thirty and spread to the office, boiler house and leech house before the arrival of the firemen. The department from Waterloo responded to the call and the fire was under control about ten o'clock. The water pressure was poor at the time of the fire owing to the small diameter of the water main leading to the works.

TWO YEARS FOR STEALING 35c

Negro Gets Prison While White Man is Fined for Assaulting Girl.

WINDSOR, Dec. 22.—A negro who robbed a white man of thirty-five cents, was sentenced to Kingston Penitentiary for two years at hard labor, while a public official convicted on two separate charges of assault upon a fourteen-year-old girl was let off with a fine of twenty-five dollars and costs.

Both cases were heard before County Judge J. O. Dromgole, in Criminal Court at Sandwich.

The negro, Wallace Watson, was convicted of holding up James G. Lamb and forcibly taking from him the thirty-five cents. Watson has been in trouble before, having already served two sentences in the penitentiary. He has also frequently paid fines for various offences. The evidence showed that Watson and another colored man named Lockman, had invited Lamb into a shed and there assaulted and robbed him.

The twenty-five dollar fine was imposed on Thomas Mitchell, Postmaster at Ford, a suburb of Walkerville, who was arrested several weeks ago upon a complaint of A. Mainsonville, father of a fourteen-year-old girl, whom Mitchell had employed as an assistant in his office. Three separate charges were preferred against Mitchell, but sentence was suspended on the third charge. The costs in the case will considerably exceed the amount of the fine.

YOUNG PEOPLE HAD GOOD TIME

At the Home of Mr. A. Hartshorn, 533 Park Street.

Mr. A. Hartshorn and family received a great surprise last Friday evening, when about twenty young people came trooping into their home at 533 Park Street. The visitors certainly had what they came for—a very delightful evening—as all entered heartily in playing games and singing. Those present were: Mrs. Heaslip, Misses Murial Hartshorn, Olive Hartshorn, Dorothy Hartshorn, Annie Pollard, Leah Norman, Patty Roberts, May Entwisle, Farnell and Crowley and Norman Hartshorn, Fred Hartshorn, Bert Hartshorn, Gordon Hartshorn, Harry Kesley, Fred Kesley, Alfred Parkinson, William Flynn, Cecil Newman, David Milton, and Wilfred Hartshorn.

79 YEARS IN PETERBORO

Mrs. John P. Metherel Passes After Two Days' Illness

A life-long resident of Peterboro passed away Sunday afternoon, in the person of Mary Ann Dixon, wife of Mr. John P. Metherel, 146 Murray Street.

Mrs. Metherel was well and able to be about last week. She passed away after two days' illness. She was born 79 years ago in the Dixon homestead at the north end of Park Street, and all her life had been spent in Peterboro. She was a member of George Street Methodist Church.

Besides her husband, the following sons and daughters survive: Messrs. James H. and Albert E., Peterboro, William D., Ottawa, Fred J., Toronto, Mrs. P. L. Moscrip, Erie, Pa., Mrs. Dr. Middleton, MacLeod, Alta., and Mrs. R. Shelton, city.

The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 from the late residence, 146 Murray Street, to the Little Lake Cemetery.

PASSED AWAY AT MOOSOMIN SASK.

Wm. Scobel, whom many of the older citizens will remember, passed away recently at Moosomin, Sask. The late Wm. Scobel resided in Peterboro for some time.

REPORT REGARDING WOOLWORTH STORE DENIED BY THE BUILDING INSPECTOR

During the past week, some one has, perhaps inadvertently, started a rumor that the store occupied by F. W. Woolworth & Co. (Knox's) was unsafe. In order to show the utter lack of truth in such a report, the firm has had the building thoroughly examined by their own architect and by Mr. T. A. S. Hay, City Building Inspector. The latter's report is given in full below:—
